NATIONAL COUNCIL OF AMERICAN-SOVIET FRIENDSHIP, INC.,
New York, N. Y., November 16, 1948.

DEAR FRIEND: On Monday evening, December 13, the Very Reverend Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, and foremost leader in the democratic movement for world peace, speaks at Madison Square Garden. This eminent churchman, who will climax a month's tour of the United States with this rally, will present his impressions of the American peace movement as it relates to the peace forces of England and the continent. He will also report on his recent observations of conditions in eastern Europe and his personal conversations with the leaders of the new democracies.

We feel it is a rare privilege, indeed, for us to be able to present the Dean in the first significant rally to follow the elections. We know you will appreciate the importance of forcefully demonstrating, particularly before the new congressional session, the people's will for peace through cooperation and friendship with the Soviet Union.

The Ambassador from the Soviet Union, His Excellency Mr. Alexander S. Panyushkin, will address the meeting. The meeting will also feature Paul Robeson, other well-known speakers and a program of entertainment.

As you may recollect, thousands were turned away from the Garden on the occasion of the Dean's last visit here in 1945. Thus, to insure you proper accommodations, we are enclosing an advance ticket order blank.

Won't you plan now to attend this rally for peace and reserve seats for yourself and your friends?

Cordially yours,

RICHARD MORFORD, Executive Director.

JANUARY 18, 1935.

DEAR FRIEND: After reading the enclosed manifesto, we believe that you will be with us and one of us. We therefore urge you to act. Of primary importance to the large success of the Bail Fund is your attendance at the committee's first invited guest meeting (ticket enclosed).

This meeting will be held on Thursday, January 31st, at 8.30, in the Orozco Room of the New School for Social Research. Here the Bail Fund will be fully explained. There will be a talk by John Spivak and short talks by Roger Baldwin, Corliss Lamont and Heywood Broun. Also some words by Angelo Herndon and two other outstanding victims of the present deplorable bail situation.

Again we say, if you are with us in our purpose, do not fail to come to this meeting. Should this be impossible, however, will you avail yourself of the enclosed form in order to make closer contact with us.

Sincerely,

THE POLITICAL PRISONERS BAIL FUND COMMITTEE.

AN OPEN LETTER TO GOVERNOR THOMAS E. DEWEY

[New York Times, October 9, 1944]

It has been well said, "By their deeds you shall know them."

There is a deed crying to be done in the State of New York today. A deed of simple justice, humanity, and fair play.

It is in your power and yours alone to do this act.

We ask you to grant a pardon to Morris U. Schappas.

We ask you to do this because the continued imprisonment of this teacher and scholar can only be interpreted by many thoughtful Americans as political persecution.

Morris U. Schappes has passed 11 months of an 18- to 24-month sentence arising from the 1940 Rapp-Coudert investigation of subversive activity in the New York City schools. Morris Schappes told the committee he had been a Communist. They demanded the names of all the Communists at City College. Morris Schappes named three others, who, with himself, were known as Communists. He said he knew no others. The committee said there were over 40, not 4, as Morris Schappes testified. They called Morris Schappes a perjurer. He was convicted.

This was the crime!

Even the most exacting will concede that Morris Schappes, whom even his enemies never accused of harming or even desiring to harm a single human being, has suffered enough.

We are engaged in a war against the barbarian who would impose the philosophy that an individual life is cheap. We are affirming in terrible battle that a single life is precious. We say further, Mr. Governor, that 2 years of a good man's life are precious and not to be taken away lightly.

The last years of agony have taught us that the conscience must never sleep. What is done to the least of us is the concern of all. That is why we cannot in good conscience fail to raise our voice against this injustice in our midst.

That is why we appeal to you, Mr. Governor.

To you and you alone American justice provides power above and beyond the Courts—the power of the chief executive to pardon.

We ask you to use this power to pardon Morris U. Schappes.

The deed would find favor in the eyes of the people, who love justice.

[Daily Worker, February 10, 1938]

LEADING CITIZENS LAUD ISAACS' STAND ON GERSON

Condemning the "witch-hunting campaign" organized against Borough President Stanley M. Isaacs for his appointment of S. W. Gerson, former Daily Worker reporter as an assistant on his staff, 47 prominent citizens last night signed a letter to the Borough President supporting him in his determination to appoint competent persons to office.

The letter, released for publication by Tom Cassidy, vice president of the American Newspaper Guild and Daily News staff writer, carries the names of outstanding liberals, trade-unionists, educators, and clergymen.

The text of the letter and names of the signers follow:

Dear Mr. Isaacs:

We, the undersigned, citizens of different shades of opinion, emphatically condemn the witch-hunting campaign organized against you for the appointment of Simon W. Gerson to your staff.

We look upon the current inspired agitation against you—which bears the earmarks of some of the propaganda so discredited and overwhelmingly repudiated in the last election—as a threat to the whole merit system in public service. It is the first step which leads to the institution of political qualifications within the entire city service. If the present agitation is successful, the next logical step is the institution of a system of political discrimination within the Civil Service system. How far is that from the malodorous method of choosing public servants from political clubhouse backrooms?

We urge you to stand firm against this attempt to attack appointments on the merit basis. We support you—as do thousands of liberal though inarticulate citizens—in your determination to maintain your right to appoint competent persons to office, irrespective of political outlook, a right won by the citizens of New York only after years of struggle against corrupt political influence.

Sincerely yours,

Daniel Allen, Regional Director, State, County, and Municipal Employes Assn.; Recorder John K. AMERICAN COMMITTEE FOR DEMOCRACY AND INTELLECTUAL FREEDOM,
New York City, January 17, 1940.HON. MARTIN DIES,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: On the basis of a careful analysis of the proceedings and releases of the Dies Committee, copy of which I am enclosing, the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom has come to the conclusion that the further existence of the Dies Committee would constitute a serious threat to intellectual freedom and civil rights in the United States. In our analysis we present thorough documentation to substantiate this contention.

We have also submitted to the Speaker of the House petitions urging the discontinuance of the Dies Committee, signed by 5,672 American citizens, largely from the academic and related fields. Further signatures will be transmitted this week. Among the signers of this petition are twelve college presidents, six college deans, and many other leaders of American culture and professional life. I am enclosing a copy of the petition blank and a list of the outstanding signatories for your consideration.

Respectfully yours,

FRANZ BOSS, National Chairman.

PROGRAM OF THE GREATER NEW YORK EMERGENCY CONFERENCE ON INALIENABLE RIGHTS

Monday, February 12, 1940, at Two West Sixty-fourth Street, New York City, the Meeting House of the Society for Ethical Culture

Organized antidemocratic forces are threatening the security and freedom of human personality and the rights of minority groups here in the United States. They are dividing, confusing, and weakening those who wish to maintain our free democratic institutions. Such forces of oppression and fear, growing stronger because of the war in Europe, must not be permitted to overwhelm us. Never before have our constitutional liberties been under such concerted attack. At this moment we have a special responsibility as a united people to meet our danger and protect our rights. There are literally thousands of nonpolitical organizations in the City of New York which are vitally concerned with the maintenance of the Bill of Rights, with minority and neighborhood relations, and with antidemocratic legislation. This Conference is for them.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES

While you read this message, a major human tragedy is taking place. A question of the greatest importance to our country and to the entire world is being decided.

A brave nation is fighting against terrible odds, not only for its own independence and freedom, but for the very life of democracy everywhere.

The whole world knows now that the "Franco Revolt" is in reality an invasion. Hitler and Mussolini are bent on destroying the Spanish Republic, and with its destruction gaining vastly increased power in the campaign against the democracies. They have set out to replace a hopeful young republic with a dictatorship patterned on the Nazi and Fascist models. In the Italian and German press the fall of Barcelona was hailed as a "great victory."

With indescribable brutality and complete disregard for world opinion, they have warred against both the armies and the women and children of Spain. It is clear that they intend to use Spain as a means of crippling French and British democracy, and as a powerful springboard to South and Central America, where their agents have for years been busy spreading propaganda against democracy and for fascism.

If Franco, Hitler and Mussolini win in Spain, the fascist penetration of the Western Hemisphere will be immensely strengthened. This will mean a greatly increased defense problem for the United States.

It must not be allowed to happen! Democracy cannot permit unending aggression against it. "Appeasement" has failed. China, Ethiopia, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Spain witness its failure.

What can our country do? The American people want peace. They abhor aggression and warring dictatorships. They are committed to the democratic way of life.

The hard fact is that by our embargo against Spain we are giving aid to Hitler and Mussolini and all they stand for. Our embargo is helping to destroy a republic which stands as a powerful bulwark against the fascist plans. If that republic is destroyed, much of the responsibility will be ours.

The signers of this letter believe that Mr. Henry L. Stimson, former United States Secretary of State, is right when he says:

"If this Loyalist Government is overthrown, it is evident that its defeat will be solely due to the fact that it has been deprived of its right to buy from us and other friendly nations the munitions necessary for its defense."

To the plea that the United States must remain neutral, we can only reply that an embargo which permits aid to aggressors and denies it to the victim is flagrantly unneutral. In the words of President Roosevelt to the 76th Congress, "we have learned that when we deliberately try to legislate neutrality, our neutrality laws may operate unevenly and unfairly—may actually give aid to the aggressor and deny it to the victim." A policy which places a friendly, recognized, democratically-elected government on the same plane with the foreign-aided insurrectionist cannot, by any canon of law or tradition, be called neutrality. The embargo, as our most distinguished lawyers and historians have insisted, is a clear violation of international law.

We submit to our fellow Americans and to our government that every obligation of peace, of freedom, of justice, of self-interest, calls upon us to:

LIFT THE EMBARGO—WITHOUT DELAY

It is not too late. The Spanish Republic still lives. Its people, who still control Central Spain with Valencia and iron-willed Madrid, have no intention of surrendering. A simple act of justice on the part of The United States of America can still turn the tide in favor of democracy.

We who have signed this letter want to hear the cheer of hope and new courage that will go up in every land, including our own, when the word goes out that The United States has lifted the embargo against Spain.

American public opinion has given our government a clear mandate to act. More than 76 per cent of public opinion, according to the Gallup poll, supports the Spanish Republic.

In the name of American fair play and of all our best traditions—

In the name of world peace and of democracy—

LIFT THE EMBARGO—NOW

LAWYERS COMMITTEE ON AMERICAN RELATIONS WITH SPAIN

150 Broadway
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MARCH 5, 1938.

A. MARX LEVIEN, Esq.,
21 E. 40th St., New York City.

DEAR SIR: We send you a Petition and Memorandum of Law on the Embargo against Spain.

The eminent members of the bar and teachers of law who sponsor and endorse the Petition and Memorandum firmly believe that the Embargo is legally untenable and that it constitutes a violation of fundamental principles of international law and an abandonment and reversal of traditional foreign policy of the United States.

We urge you to join with us in requesting the reconsideration by the President and the Congress of the policy of our government towards the republican government of Spain.

We invite you to sign the Petition and secure the signatures of your colleagues and friends in the profession. The matter is urgent and the prompt return of the enclosed petition, duly signed, is earnestly requested.

Respectfully yours,

PAUL J. KERN, Chairman.

Chairman, Caroline Whitney Memorial Fund: ELINOR MERRELL

APRIL 23, 1940.

Hon. JOHN J. DEMPSEY,

*Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.*

DEAR SIR: As chairman of the Milk Consumers Protective Committee, I was one of those consulted by Consumers Union in their preparation of a letter and statement which they recently sent to you asking for a thorough investigation by your committee of the circumstances surrounding the preparation and release of the report on "Communist Work in Consumer Organizations."

The facts and questionable circumstances indicating a conspiratorial relationship between your committee's special investigator and an officer of Hearst's Magazines, Inc., are indeed, shocking. I urge that you make a thorough investigation of these disclosures. I do so not only as chairman of one of the organizations attacked in the report, but also as a citizen. Such unorthodox procedure on the part of a government body is contrary to our democratic traditions.

Respectfully,

ASHE INGERSOLL, Chairman.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR McCARTHY ON HALDORE HANSON

The next case is that of Haldore Hanson.

This man occupies one of the most strategically important offices in the entire State Department.

It is my understanding that he joined the Department of State in February 1942, and is recognized in the Department as a specialist and expert on Chinese Affairs.

Hanson, now Executive Director of the Secretariat of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation, will head up a Technical Cooperation Projects Staff of the new Point 4 Program for aid to under developed areas which will have charge of the expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars of our taxpayers' money over all the world. (Source: Department of State Departmental Announcements 41, dated February 21, 1950.)

The pro-Communist proclivities of Mr. Hanson go back to September 1938.

Hanson was a contributor to Pacific Affairs, the official publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations, whose staff was headed by millionaire Frederick Vanderbilt Field, an admitted Communist. Field has devoted his entire fortune to the Communist cause.

It is important that the committee keep in mind that Mr. Hanson also wrote for the magazine Amerasia, of which Philip Jacob Jaffe was managing editor.

Jaffe was arrested, indicted, and found guilty of having been in illegal possession of several hundred secret documents from the State, Navy, War, and other Government Department files.

Mr. Chairman, I have before me a document entitled "Department of State, Departmental Announcement 41." The heading is "Establishment of the Interim Office for Technical Cooperation and Development." Then in parenthesis, by way of explanation of this rather high-sounding name, we find "Point Four Program."

The first paragraph of the order reads as follows:

"1. Effective immediately there is established under the direction of the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs of the Interim Office for Technical Cooperation and Development (TCO)."

On page 4 we find that the chief of this Technical Cooperations Project Staff is one Haldore Hanson.

Paragraph 2 on Page 1 sets forth the following responsibilities of Hanson's division:

"The Interim Office is assigned general responsibility within the Department for (a) securing effective administration of programs involving technical assistance to economically underdeveloped areas and (b) directing the planning in preparation for the Technical Cooperation and Economic Development (Point Four) Program. In carrying out its responsibilities the Interim Office will rely upon the regional bureaus, Bureau of United Nations Affairs, and other components of Economic Affairs area for participation in the technical assistance programs as specified below, and upon the central administrative offices of the Administrative area for the performance of service functions."

From this it would appear that his division will have a tremendous amount of power and control over the hundreds of millions or billions of dollars which the President proposes to spend under his Point Four Program, or what he has referred to as the "Bold New Plan."

Hanson's appointment is not made by the President, but by the State Department and is not subject to any Senate confirmation. Therefore, it would seem rather important to examine the background and the philosophy of this young man.

The State Department Biographical Register gives what would on its face seem to be a chronological story of an increasingly successful young man. It shows that he graduated from college, for example, in 1934 at the age of 22; that he was a teacher in Chinese colleges from 1934 to 1937; and then a press correspondent in China from 1936 to 1939; a staff writer from 1938 to 1942; then in 1942 he got a job in the State Department at $4,600 a year; that in 1944 he was listed as a specialist in Chinese affairs at $5,600; that in 1945 he was made Executive Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State at $6,500; that in May of 1948 he was made assistant chief of the area division number 3; that on June 28, 1948, he was made acting chief for the Far Eastern Area, Public Affairs Overseas Program Staff; that on November 14, 1948, he was made Executive Director of the Secretariat of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation. There is certainly nothing unusual about this biography. Nothing there to indicate that this man might be dangerous in the State Department as Chief for the Far Eastern Area Public Affairs, Overseas Program Staff, during a time when the Communists were taking over China. However, much is left out of this biography. It does not show, for example, that this young man was running a Communist magazine in Peiping when the Japanese-Chinese war broke out. It does not show, for example, that he spent several years with the Communist armies in China, writing stories and taking pictures which the Chinese Communists helped him smuggle out of the country. Nor does this biography show that this man, after his return from China, wrote a book—a book which sets forth his pro-Communist answer to the problems of Asia as clearly as Hitler's Mein Kampf set forth his solutions for the problems of Europe.

Nothing that he has said or done since would indicate that he repudiates a single line of that book.

This man clearly believes that the Communists in China stand for everything that is great and good. His is not the picture of a mercenary trying to sell his country out for thirty pieces of silver. In reading his book, you are impressed with the fact that he firmly believes the Communist leaders in China are great and good men and that all of Asia would benefit by being communized.

Take, for example, what he had to say about Mao Tse-tung, the head of the Communist Party at that time and now the Communist ruler of China, and Chu Teh, commander in chief of the 8th Route Communist Army, and according to Life magazine of January 23, 1950, Number Two man in prestige to Mao Tse-tung.

In Chapter 23, entitled "Political Utopia on Mt. Wut'ai", in describing a meeting with an American Major Carlson, here is what he had to say:

"We stayed up till midnight exchanging notes on guerrilla armies, the farm unions, and the progress of the war. I was particularly interested in the Communist leaders whom Carlson had just visited and whom I was about to meet. Mao Tse-tung, the head of the Communist Party, Carlson characterized as 'the most selfless man I ever met, a social dreamer, a genius living fifty years ahead of his time.' And Chu Teh, commander in chief of the 8th Route Army was 'the prince of generals, a man with the humility of Lincoln, the tenacity of Grant, and the kindness of Robert E. Lee.'"

For a man slated a chief of the bureau which may have the job of spending hundreds of millions of dollars throughout the world this indicates, to say the least, a disturbing amount of hero worship for the number one and number two Communist leaders in the Far East today.

On page 349, he condemns the right wing groups in the Chinese Government for "fighting against the Democratic revolution as proposed by Mao Tse Tung and the Communists."

On the same page he points out that anti-Red officials within the government were making indirect attacks upon the Communists and that "leaders of the Communist youth corps were arrested by military officers at Hankow. I myself was the victim of one of these incidents and found that local officials were the instigators."

From Hanson's book it appears that the Nationalist government knew of his close collaboration with the Communist Army. For example, on page 350, we find that his passport was seized by the police in Sian when they found that he was traveling from Communist guerrilla territory to the Communist headquarters. He states that the man responsible "for this illegal action was governor Ching Ting-Wen—one of the most rabid anti-Red officials in China. The governor's purpose was merely to suppress news about the Communists."

Before quoting further from this book written by Mr. Hanson, it might be well to give a clearer picture of the job which Secretary Acheson has picked out for him. The State Department document lists some of the duties of his bureau as follows:

1. Developing over-all policies for the program.
2. Formulating general program plans and issuing planning directives.
3. Coordinating specific program plans developed by the regional bureaus and making necessary adjustments.
4. Approving projects, determining action agencies, and allocating funds for U. S. bilateral programs.
5. Directing negotiations and relationships with intergovernmental agencies and with other U. S. agencies participating in the coordinated program or otherwise carrying on technical assistance activities.

1. Initiating and developing plans for technical assistance programs for individual countries or groups of countries within their respective regions.

2. Reviewing program proposals affecting their regions which originate from any other source.

3. Negotiating and communicating with foreign governments.

4. Directing State Department personnel assigned abroad to coordinate and give administrative and program support to bilateral programs.

5. Continuously evaluating programs and projects within regions.

6. Proposing program changes.

7. Initiating instructions to the field carrying out their responsibilities and reviewing all other instructions concerned with technical assistance programs.

This gives you some idea of the tremendous powers of the agency in which Mr. Hanson is a top flight official.

Let us go back to Hanson's writings:

All through the book he shows that not only did he have complete confidence in the Communist leaders but that they also had complete confidence in him. On page 256 he refers to how Communist generals Nie and Lu Chen-Tsao acted as his couriers, smuggling packets of films and news stories for him with the aid of Communist guerrilla spies into Peiping.

In this connection I might say that he very frankly points out that the Communists do not tolerate anyone who is not completely on their side. Hanson makes it very clear all through the book that he is not only on the Communist side, but that he has the attitude of a hero worshiper for the Chinese Communist leaders.

His respect and liking for the Communist leaders permeates almost every chapter of the book. For example, on page 284 and page 285, he tells about how some ragged waifs whom he had gathered into his sleeping quarters regarded Mao Tse Tung and Chu Ted as "Gods." He then goes on to tell about their favorite Communist General, Holung, and states that they convinced him that Holung was a very extraordinary man whom they described as "big as a Shan-tungese, heavy as a restaurant cook but quick as a cat in battle." He then goes on to describe on page 285 how, when he met General Holung, he found him to be much as the hero-worshipping boys had described him. "He is," said Hanson, "a living picture of Rhett Butler from the pages of Gone With the Wind."

This praise of Chinese Communist leaders—goes on page after page. On page 278, he describes Communist General P'eng as the most rigid disciplinarian and "the most persistent student of world affairs."

In Chapter 26, he speaks with apparent bated breath of the "Brain Trust" of Communist leaders who were immortalized by Edgar Snow in his Red Star Over China.

On page 295 in referring to two other Communist generals, he says: "Should this book ever fall into Communist hands, I must record that those two lonely men made excellent company during my three weeks in Yen-an."

After describing in complimentary manner this university and the students, on page 296 he says, "Every cadet divides his time between political and military subjects. On the one hand he listens to lectures on Marxian philosophy, the history of the Chinese Revolution, the technique of leading a mass movement; on the other hand he studies guerrilla tactics, the use of military maps, and the organization of a military labor corps."

On page 297 he points out that no tuition is charged at the academy and that each student is supplied with uniform, books, and food, plus a pocket allowance, and then has this to say: "Some recent visitors to Yen-an have spread a report that the academies are supported by Russian rubles—a thin piece of gossip. I was told by several Chinese leaders, including Mao Tse-Tung, that the largest contributions came from American sympathizers in New York."

On page 297 and 298, Hanson relates that in talking to one of the Nationalist war lords, "I suggested that he could learn a great deal from the Communists about discipline and integrity of leadership."

On page 303, Hanson has this to say, "My attitude toward Communist China's leaders was a mixture of respect for their personal integrity and a resentment of their suspiciousness. They impressed me as a group of hard-headed, straight-shooting realists."

After an interview with Mao Tse Tung he states, "I left with the feeling that he was the least pretentious man in Yen-an and the most admired. He is a completely selfless man."

Following is Hanson's description of how the Reds took over. I quote from page 102:

"Whenever a village was occupied for the first time, the Reds arrested the landlords and tax collectors, held a public tribunal, executed a few and intimidated the others, then redistributed the land as fairly as possible."

In Chapter 28, in comparing the Communists to Chiang Kai-shek's troops, Hanson had this to say:

"I left Yen-an with only one conviction about the Communists; that they were fighting against the Japanese more wholeheartedly than any other group in China."

He then goes on to condemn "Red baiting" officials in Chungking.

On page 312 of his book, Hanson quotes a Communist editor as stating as follows:

"Our relationship to the U. S. S. R. is no different than that of the American Communist Party. We respect the work of Russia's leaders and profit by their experience wherever we can, but the problems of China are not the same as those of Russia. We plan our program from a Chinese point of view."

Hanson then adds, "The explanation seemed logical enough to me."

In connection with Hanson's position as Chief of the Technical Cooperation Projects Staff, in charge of Truman's Point Four Program, the following on pages 312 and 313 of his book would seem especially significant. He quotes Mao Tse Tung as follows: "China cannot reconstruct its industry and commerce without the aid of British and American capital."

Can there be much doubt as to whether the Communists or the anti-Communist forces in Asia will receive aid under the Point Four Program with Hanson in charge?

Gentlemen, here is a man with a mission—a mission to communize the world—a man whose energy and intelligence coupled with a burning all-consuming mission has raised him by his own bootstraps from a penniless operator of a Leftist magazine in Peiping in the middle thirties to one of the architects of our foreign policy in the State Department today—a man who, according to State Department announcement No. 41 will be largely in charge of the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars in such areas of the world and for such purposes as he decides.

Gentlemen, if Secretary Acheson gets away with his plan to put this man to a great extent in charge of the proposed Point Four Program, it will, in my opinion, lend tremendous impetus to the tempo at which Communism is engulfing the world.

On page 32 of his book, Hanson justifies "The Chinese Communists chopping off the heads of landlords—all of which is true," because of "hungry farmers." That the farmers are still hungry after the landlords' heads have been removed apparently never occurred to him.

On page 31 he explained that it took him some time to appreciate the appalling problems which the Chinese Communists were attempting to solve.

In Chapter 4 of Hanson's book, he presents the stock Communists' arguments for the so-called Stalin-Hitler Pact of 1939.

Secretary Acheson is now putting Hanson in the position to help the Communists solve the "appalling problems" in other areas of the world with hundreds of millions or billions of American dollars.

The obvious area in which this man will start using American money to help the Communists solve the people's problem will be Indo-China and India.

It should be pointed out that this case was brought to the attention of State Department officials as long ago as May 14, 1947. At that time, the Honorable Fred Busbey, on the floor of the House discussed this man's affinity for the Communist cause in China.

SENATOR McCARTHY'S STATEMENT ON MRS. ESTHER CAUKIN BRUNAUER

I should now like to take up the case of Esther Caukin Brunauer, Assistant Director of Policy Liaison, UNESCO Relations Staff, Department of State, as a salary of $9,706 a year according to the current Federal Register.

I urgently request that this committee give serious consideration to the details of this case and act immediately to ascertain the facts.

Mrs. Brunauer was for many years Executive Secretary of the American Association of University Women.

Mrs. Brunauer was instrumental in committing this organization to the support of various front enterprises, particularly in the so-called consumer field. One such instance of this activity was reported in the New York Times of April 27, 1943. In that case the American Association of the University Women joined with Consumers Union, The League of Women Shoppers, and other completely Communist controlled fronts. I have explained to the committee that these organizations have been declared subversive by various governmental agencies.

Exhibit R indicates that Mrs. Brunauer presided at a Washington meeting of the American Friends of the Soviet Union. This organization has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States, the House Committee on Un-American Activities and the California Committee on Un-American Activities. The principal speaker at this meeting was Myra Page, long an avowed leader of the Communist Party and frequent writer for the Daily Worker and other Communist periodicals.

Certainly this committee has no doubts as to the domination by the Communist Party of the American Youth Congress. It has been cited as subversive by the Attorney General and other governmental agencies.

Exhibit S shows Esther Caukin Brunauer was a signer of the call to the annual meeting of the American Youth Congress in 1938.

Esther Brunauer is the wife of Stephen Brunauer, a Hungarian by birth. He is a scientist who has had the rank of Commander in the United States Navy and his scientific work has involved some of the topmost defense secrets which the armed forces of his country possess.

I think it highly important that this committee immediately, in accordance with their mandate from the Senate, obtain the files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Naval Intelligence, and the State Department on the activities of Stephan Brunauer, the husband of this ranking official of the State Department.

I ask that the committee immediately seek to learn whether or not Stephan Brunauer has

1. Been the subject of a constant investigation by government agencies over a period of ten years.

2. A close friend and collaborator of Noel Field, known Communist who recently and mysteriously disappeared behind the Iron Curtain.

3. He has admitted to associates that he was a member of the Communist party.

I am reluctant to go any further into this case but I am prepared to produce competent witnesses who will testify to the importance of immediate action in this matter.

It can be readily shown that at least three government agencies have been sifting the activities of a small group of people whose work seriously threatens the security of the country.

Certainly the Communist front activities of Mrs. Brunauer are sufficient to seriously question her security status.

NEW PEACE GROUP IS ORGANIZED HERE—17 LEADERS OF VARIOUS U. S. ORGANIZATIONS JOIN IN DRIVE FOR COOPERATIVE PROGRAM—OPPOSE ISOLATION POLICY—REVISION OF NEUTRALITY ACT TO BE SOUGHT—EICHELBERGER IS ELECTED CHAIRMAN

A new peace organization to campaign for international cooperation under the leadership of the United States, as distinguished from isolation, was started here yesterday under the name of the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts.

In launching it, seventeen leaders of national organizations declared their conviction that the only road to peace for the United States and the world was a vigorous three-point foreign policy: "To oppose aggression, to promote justice between nations, to develop adequate peace machinery."

The new peace union likewise announced plans for a Conference of One Hundred to be held in Washington on April 15 and 16 to bring together leaders of organized public opinion.

EICHELBERGER IS CHAIRMAN

Clark M. Eichelberger, national director of the League of Nations Association, who was elected chairman of the executive committee of the new peace body, said yesterday it would emphasize a campaign to support the revision of our present Neutrality Act along the lines of the amendment recently introduced by Senator Elbert D. Thomas of Utah.

This amendment would have the practical effect of giving the President and Congress an opportunity to decide who was the aggressor and to withhold the economic resources of the United States from the aggressor while continuing to supply aid to the victim.

"World cooperation alone can protect American interests," said the statement of principles announcing the new group. "Consequently we support the leadership of the United States in the cooperative use of its moral, diplomatic, and economic power to find ways short of war to let the aggressor know that he can go no further."

Henry A. Atkinson, general secretary of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Church and Church Peace Union, is vice chairman of the new peace union; Edgar J. Fisher, assistant director of the Institute of International Education, is treasurer; and William W. Hinckley, chairman of the National Council of the American Youth Congress, is secretary.

PEACE GROUP SEEKS AGGRESSOR CURES—COMMITTEE STARTS CAMPAIGN FOR AN AMENDMENT TO OUR NEUTRALITY STATUTE—WOULD AID VICTIM STATES—PRESENT ACT ASSAILED AS NOT BEING NEUTRAL AND DANGER TO PEACE OF THIS COUNTRY

The Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts, composed of leaders of fifteen national organizations interested in world peace, started a campaign yesterday for an amendment to the United States Neutrality Act so this country can "determine the aggressor and apply embargoes to that State only and not to its innocent victim." The committee's statement, it announced, had been signed by the entire membership.

The statement called on the American people to write to their Members of Congress urging "an amendment which will distinguish between aggressor and victim; which will stop shipments of munitions and raw materials to aggressors." The present act, according to the statement "is not neutral" and "encourages aggression and rebellion." "is un-American," and "endangers the peace of the United States."

The committee asserted that "if these changes were made and the act invoked Japan could no longer secure from us the 54 percent of the essential war supplies she must purchase from abroad in order to continue her war in China." The act, said the committee, should provide that "whenever the President finds that war exists between nations, in violation of the Kellogg Pact or any other treaty to which the United States is a party" he shall consult with other States at peace, determine the aggressor and apply the embargo.

The membership of the committee, as made public yesterday, follows:

Clark M. Eichelberger, national director, League of Nations Association, and chairman, Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts.

Henry A. Atkinson, general secretary, World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches and Church Peace Union.

736 Senators and Representatives representing organizations with a total membership of 4,697,915 (after subtraction for duplication) are accredited at the Congress of Youth. Of these, 96 are Senators delegated by 63 different national organizations; 640 are Representatives from 450 organizations.

Representation of women is approximately two-thirds that of men. The youngest delegate is 14 years old and the median age is 22.

SENATOR MCCARTHY'S STATEMENT ON OWEN J. LATTIMORE

The State Department, with great frequency, utilizes the services of a large group of individuals in diverse fields as "consultants."

One of its most regular performers in this field is the man I wish to discuss next. He is Owen J. Lattimore.

Lattimore was not only a consultant, but one of the principal architects of our far eastern policy. This man is one of the State Department's outstanding experts on problems dealing with the Far East and has been for a number of years.

Lattimore is currently employed as a director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, located at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland. He has held numerous positions with the State Department, among them a 6-month period in 1941 as the political adviser of President Roosevelt to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek. He was a Deputy Director in charge of the Pacific Branch of the Office of War Information and in June of 1944, he, with John Carter Vincent, later to head the Far Eastern Bureau of the State Department, accompanied Henry Wallace on a diplomatic tour of Siberia and Free China.

Recently Lattimore completed a State Department mission to India and it is understood that he is now a consultant in the Department. While the State Department will tell you that he is not on the payroll as of today, the point is he is still considered by the Department as one of its top advisers and is put on and off the payroll as consultant apparently at will, and is apparently one of the top men in developing our Asiatic program.

This man's record as a pro-Communist goes back many years.

I hand the committee a letter, dated December 19, 1940, on the letterhead of Amerasia. Again we have the familiar name of Frederick V. Field, Communist chairman of the editorial board. Equally familiar is the name of Jhillip J. Jaffe, managing editor of the magazine, who was indicted and convicted for having illegal possession of secret State Department documents. The committee will note that there follows a list of eight members of the board of this pro-Communist magazine. It will also observe that 50 percent of the editorial board of this magazine, whose editor was convicted of possessing State Department secret documents illegally, have been or are now highly placed officials of the Department of State of the United States.

Their names are T. A. Bisson, Owen Lattimore, David H. Popper, and William T. Stone.

In the June 6, 1946, issue of the Washington Times-Herald there appears an article, entitled "How 'Come?'" written by Mr. Frank C. Waldrop, editorial director of that newspaper.

Shortly, I shall read that article into the record, but I should like to mention in passing that of the 57 instructors in the orientation conference and training programs for personnel of the Foreign Service and the Department of State, all but three were Government officials. Those three were Dr. Edward C. Acheson, Director of the school of foreign service and brother of the present Secretary of State; Prof. Owen Lattimore of Johns Hopkins University and Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

But more of this gentleman later.

When Mr. Waldrop asked, "How 'Come?'" he was getting closer to a sordid picture than he imagined.

Here is what he had to say:

"Herewith an item that may be of interest to Secretary of State Jimmy Byrnes who is doing his level best these days to cope with J. Stalin's bucking broncos of the Kremlin.

"Whether he finds it interesting or not, he certainly could with profit ask a few questions about a project in his own shop going by the title of the 'Orientation Conferences and Training Programs for Personnel of the Foreign Service and the Department of State.'

"The writer of this piece sat in, uninvited, yesterday on one of those training projects and found it nothing more or less than an example to diplomats on how to needle a man whose back is turned—in this case Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

"To begin at the beginning, the State Department has a 'division of training services' which has the very valuable assignment of making better diplomats of the departmental forces.

"As a part of this, there are scheduled for every workday from Monday through Friday all this month, a series of lectures by supposed experts on subjects of importance in diplomacy.

"(Don't give up. It concerns You too, because the State Department is supposed to look out for the interests of the United States between wars and you live here.)

"Of 57 instructors listed to give the developing diplomats the real dope on their business, all but three are Government officials.

"The three exceptions are: Dr. Edward C. Acheson, director of the school of foreign service at the George Washington University here and brother of Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson; Prof. Owen Lattimore, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and Prof. Frederick L. Schuman of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

"Lattimore is a bosom pal of Henry Wallace, the great mind of the ages now trying to decide whether he can best save the world by staying on in Truman's Cabinet to bore from within or by resigning to bore from without.

"Lattimore also hangs out with other persons less well known, to an extent that ought to give J. Byrnes some pause.

"Just an item: He was formerly on the editorial board of Amerasia, the pro-Soviet magazine that got caught in possession of confidential State Department documents in 1944 with result that an editor and a State Department employee were convicted and fined.

"Lattimore also has described Stalin's blood purges of 1936-39 as 'a triumph for democracy,' and that, friends, is just a slight sample.

"He's clever, but you invariably find him in all those old familiar places when you check up. Consider his performance of yesterday.

"Most people have the impression that on the record and the evidence the welfare of the United States is better looked after in Japan with Gen. Douglas MacArthur in sole command, than in Germany where a four-cornered quarrel over the remains grows worse and worse.

"To all of this, Dr. Lattimore yesterday issued an hour-long 'na-a-a-a-ah, it's lousy.' His line is that the Japs have outsmarted MacArthur in that they are holding onto a 'conservative' agricultural policy and occasionally rescue one of their industrialists, bankers and so forth from the hangman's rope.

"Match that up, citizens, with what you've been hearing from Moscow, if you bother to listen. And match up with it the realization that such a thought is the best offered our State Department help as expert inside dope on the Far East.

"How come the State Department has to drag in Owen Lattimore to tell what's what in the Orient? Hasn't the Department got anybody on its own staff who knows something?

"And as for the baby lined up for June 19—that F. L. Schuman—he's all too well known around here, especially to people who have read the record of the Dies committee.

"But if you don't already know what he is, you can get him completely in a flash by turning to page 582 of his latest book, 'Soviet Politics At Home and Abroad,' wherein he states:

"The Russian adventure marks a long forward stride toward human mastery of man's fate. * * *

"That is how the State Department's expert instructor on U. S. Soviet relations sums up Stalin's behavior and the almost 28 bloody years of Communist dictatorship in Russia.

"No wonder State Department secret documents leak. No wonder Jimmy Byrnes goes to conferences with Molotov and comes staggering home asking who touched off the blast!

"This writer plans to sit in on Schuman's June 19 performance, if it comes off, and will try to report on same in this space. That is, of course, if they don't lock the door first."

Thus we have the officials of the State Department again warned of a man who by any "yardstick of loyalty" could not possibly be a good security risk.

Mr. Lattimore himself is a prolific writer and there is no lack of material for the committee to ascertain exactly where this man stands in the political scheme of things.

The Reverend James F. Kearney, S. J., writing in the Columbia magazine of September 1949, gives more first-hand information of great value to the committee. This magazine is published by the Knights of Columbus, the most prominent order of Catholic laymen in America.

"Who or what has so vitiated the opinion of intelligent Americans on the China question? Until recently, despite the dust that has been deliberately thrown in American eyes by pink correspondents, the question could be stated so clearly and simply that grammar school students could grasp it. Having explained it to grammar students, I know. Here it is, expressed in monosyllabic words: "If the Reds win out there, we lose. If they lose, we win. Well, for all practical purposes, the Red have now won, and in consequence we and the Chinese have lost. For communism it is the greatest triumph since the Russian Revolution; for us, though few Americans yet fully realize it, it is perhaps the greatest disaster in our history; and the end is not yet. Who is responsible? It wasn't a one-man job; short-sighted Chinese officials contributed 50 percent. There are those who believe, though, that no Americans deserve more credit for this Russian triumph and Sino-American disaster than Owen Lattimore and a small group of his followers.

"Owen Lattimore, confidant of two United States Presidents, adviser to our State Department, author of 10 books about the Far East, where he has 25 years of travel and study to his credit, was born in Washington, D. C., but after a few months was taken to North China. At 12 he went to study in Switzerland, then in England, and returned to China as a newsman before taking up exploration, particularly in Manchuria and Mongolia. He then studied in Peiping, first on a fellowship from the Harvard Yenching Foundation and later on a John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellowship, knows the Chinese, Mongolian, and Russian languages well.

"Returning to the United States at the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese war in 1937, a year later he became director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations of Johns Hopkins University, a post he still holds. In 1941 he was for 6 months President Roosevelt's political adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, then returned to the States to enter the OWI, becoming Deputy Director to the Overseas Branch in Charge of Pacific Operations. In June 1944, he and J. Carter Vincent, later to head the Far Eastern Bureau of the State Department, accompanied Henry Wallace of the State Department on a diplomatic tour of Siberia and Free China.

"So high does Owen Lattimore stand in Washington that it is said that only two books on President Truman's desk when he announced Japan's surrender were newsman John Gunther's Inside Asia and Lattimore's Solution in Asia. Lattimore was next named special economic adviser to Edwin V. Pauley, head of the postwar economic mission to Tokyo. Though not an authority on Japan, he did not hesitate to criticize former Ambassador Joseph C. Grew's plan, adopted by MacArthur, to govern the Japanese people through the Emperor. He believed that the Emperor and all his male heirs should be interned in China and a republic set up in Japan.

"In this thoroughly distinguished orientalist's career there are many disturbing features. For example, in former Red Louis Budenz' March 19, 1949, Collier's article, entitled 'The Menace of Red China,' we read 'Most Americans, during World War II, fell for the Moscow line that the Chinese Communists were not really Communists * * * but agrarian reformers * * * That is just what Moscow wanted Americans to believe. Even many naive Government officials fell for it. * * * This deception of United States officials and public was the result of a planned campaign; I helped to plan it. * * * The number one end was a Chinese coalition government in which Chiang would accept the agrarian reformers—at the insistence of the United States. * * * We could work through legitimate Far East organizations and writers that were recognized as Oriental authorities. Frederick V. Field emphasized use of the Institute of Pacific Relations. * * * The agrarian reformers idea started from there. It took root in leading Far East cultural groups in the United States, spread to certain policy-making circles in the State Department and broke into prominent position in the American press. * * * The Communists were successful in impressing their views on the United States State Department simply by planting articles with the proper slant in such magazines as Far Eastern Survey, Pacific Affairs, and Amerasia. Both Far Eastern Survey and Pacific Affairs are publications of the Institute of Pacific Relations. This is not a Communist organization.'"

"Where does Mr. Lattimore come in? From 1934 to 1941 he was editor of Pacific Affairs. Freda Utley mentions him in two of her books. In her Last Chance in China she tells how Moscow, where she then worked as a Communist, was able to help its friends and discomfit its enemies in the Far East thanks to the Institute of Pacific Relations, and that Mr. Lattimore was among those Americans who came to Moscow for help and advice (p. 193). In her Lost Illusion (p. 194) she refers to the same 1936 Moscow meeting: 'The whole staff of our Pacific Ocean cabinet had an all-day session at the institute with E. C. Carter, Owen Lattimore, and Harriet Moore, leading lights of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I was a little surprised at the time that these Americans should defer so often and so completely to the Russian viewpoint. * * * Owen Lattimore found it difficult at first to submit to the discipline required of the Friends of the Soviet Union. He told me a few months later in London how he had almost lost his position as editor of Pacific Affairs because he had published an article by the Trotskyist Harold Isaacs. In later years in the United States it did not astonish me to find the Institute of Pacific Relations following the same general lines as the Daily Worker in regard to China and Japan.'

"Henry Wallace never claimed to be an expert on the Far East. How much if any, of his report after returning from the Siberia-China visit was written or suggested by the oriental expert, Mr. Lattimore, I do not know. One thing emerges, however: after their return, the American policy which has proved so disastrous for both Chinese and American interests and so helpful to Russia was put into effect and is still being pursued. Lattimore's Solution in Asia was described by one reviewer as 'an appeal to Chiang Kai-shek to free himself from the galling yoke (of the Kuomintang) and to set free the democratic forces which have proved effective in northwestern China,' i. e., the Chinese Reds. That book is again referred to in an article by ex-Communist Max Eastman and J. B. Powell in a June 1945 Reader's Digest article, The Fate of the World Is at Stake in China, wherein they blast the deception 'that Russia is a democracy and that the Chinese can therefore safely be left to Russian influence.' Owen Lattimore is perhaps the most subtle evangelist of this erroneous conception.

"Mr. Lattimore praised the net result of the Moscow trials and the blood purge by which Stalin secured his dictatorship in 1936-39 as 'a triumph for democracy.' He now urges our Government, in Solution in Central Asia, to accept cheerfully the spread of the Soviet form of democracy in Central Asia. His publishers thus indicate the drift of his book: 'He (Mr. Lattimore) shows that all the Asiatic peoples are more interested in actual democratic practices, such as the ones they can see in action across the Russian border, than they are in the fine theories of Anglo-Saxon democracies which come coupled with ruthless imperialism.' Does that sound as if Mr. Lattimore, a top adviser on our far-eastern affairs, is on our team?

"The same article continues with a prophecy which has just about come true: 'If Russian dictatorship spreads its tentacles across China the cause of democracy (i. e., United States style) in Asia is lost. As is well known, these tentacles need not include invading Soviet troops, but only the native Communist parties now giving allegiance to the Soviet Union and taking their directives from Moscow. When these Communist Parties get control of a neighboring state the Moscow dictatorship and its fellow travelers call that a friendly government. It is by means of these Communist-controlled friendly governments—not by Soviet military conquest—that Russian power and totalitarian tyranny is spreading from the Soviet Union, in Asia as in Europe.

"That is perhaps good background for the current slogan of Mr. Lattimore and his loyal followers, Edgar Snow, Ted White, Richard Lauterbach, Harvard's Fairbanks, and many an ex-OWI man—that there's nothing much for America to worry about because Mao Tse-tung's communism is a nationalist movement. A moment's reflection should make it clear that the very last thing a real Chinese nationalist would do would be to swallow hook, line, and sinker the doctrine of Karl Marx, a German Jew, who besides being a foreigner has a system that goes counter to every Chinese instinct and every tradition in the Chinese concept of society.

"This recalls an incident a Belgian priest related to me in Shanghai a year and a half ago. He had become a Chinese citizen, and when the Chinese Reds occupied his church in North China they followed the usual custom (which is probably news to Mr. Lattimore) of putting up the pictures of Marx and Stalin in the place of honor above the high altar, with those of Mao Tse-tung and Chu Teh below. A Chinese Red then told the priest flatly, 'We are going to get rid of absolutely all foreign influence in China. Our policy is China for the Chinese.' I can imagine Mr. Lattimore saying, 'Just what I told you.' But the Belgian-Chinese replied, 'And those two foreign gentlemen up there, Marx and Stalin? When did they become Chinese citizens?' The Red shunk silently away.

"If anyone is still puzzled by the contention that Chinese Marxists are primarily nationalists, a glance at the Communist Manifesto will clear matters up. 'Though not in substance, yet in form,' we read there, 'the struggle of the proletariat with the bourgeoisie is at first a national struggle. The proletariat of each country must, of course, first of all settle matters with its own bourgeoisie.' That, I believe, shows us what is back of the present national slogan our United States pinks apply to China's Reds. It's not authentic nationalism, of course, as the Manifesto explains later: 'The Communists are reproached with desiring to abolish countries and nationality. The workingmen have no country. We cannot take from them what they have not got.'

"The spurious nature of the nationalism of Mao Tse-tung was admitted by Mr. Lattimore himself, perhaps unintentionally, in a tape-recorded speech he gave in San Francisco, December 7, 1948: 'The Chinese Communists never made any bones about the fact that they are Marxists. They are Marxist Communists in their international relations. They never question the Russian line. They follow every twist and turn of it.' That is an important admission by Mr. Lattimore, since so many of his followers have been trying to tell us there is no Moscow control over China's Reds. If they follow every twist and turn of the Moscow line they are evidently not Chinese nationalists as we understand the term, but pseudo-nationalists.

"A. T. Steele and Andrew Roth of the New York Herald Tribune and the Nation, respectively, after getting out of Red Peiping recently, declared that the Chinese Red leaders are in every sense of the word Communists who stand squarely and faithfully for the Moscow Party line, and will join the Kremlin in the coming world war III against the imperialist powers, particularly America. They likewise agree that while Mao might possibly become an extreme nationalist at some future date, another Tito, there is absolutely no evidence that this is a factor to be seriously reckoned with for a long time, Mr. Lattimore to the contrary notwithstanding. Spencer Moosa, latest newsman out of Peiping, confirms their statements. The very first movie put on by the Reds in the auditorium of the Catholic University in Peiping after they moved in this year was the Life of Stalin. Need we say it was not anti-Russian? And so, instance after instance shows the very close connection between Moscow and Chinese Communism that has been witnessed throughout the last 28 years by intelligent observers who have lived in Red China—where Mr. Lattimore has never lived.

“To the average American, whom pro-Red propaganda is intended to victimize, it seems quite natural that Mao Tse-tung, a native of China who has never visited Moscow, should think first of China’s instead of Russia’s interests. Yet how many native-born Americans are there who, once they join the party, think nothing of selling out their country and its secrets to the Kremlin? Such is the strange mesmerism exercised by their Moscow masters. It is, then, no harder to understand Mao’s utter devotion to the party line than it is to understand that of Foster, or Dennis, or Earl Browder. After all, remember, a real Communist has no country. And surely Mao has proved he is a 100-percent Communist. Let’s not be deceived any longer, then, by this fake nationalism of China’s Reds, which is the central thesis of Mr. Lattimore’s recent book, The Situation in Asia.

“If a man who had written 10 volumes about Africa, and thereby won a name for himself as an authority, should nevertheless maintain that the Negroes in Africa aren’t really black but white, it would be a cause for wonder. Mr. Owen Lattimore, who has written 10 books on Asia and is called the best informed American on Asiatic affairs living today, is doubtless well-informed on many Asiatic matters but unfortunately, if we are to take his written words as an index of his knowledge of China’s Reds, he is very badly misinformed about the true color of that most important body of individuals and their whole way of acting. Which reminds me of a recent conversation with one of Mr. Lattimore’s OWI boys who had just returned from a 3-years’ correspondent assignment in China. I asked him why it was that practically all our foreign newsmen, though supposedly educated in the American tradition of fair play, spoke entirely of corruption in the Chiang regime but said nothing about the corruption in the Mao regime. And this man, who was being paid for giving his American readers an honest picture of conditions in the vital Far East, answered, Because there is no corruption in the Red regime! I laughed at him for wasting his 3 years in the Orient and passed him an article showing that not only is the Red regime corrupt, but from every conceivable American standpoint it is conservatively 10 times more corrupt than its corrupt opposite number.

“It is probably of such men that Mr. Lattimore, in his book Situation in China (p. 177), writes: ‘Hitherto American observers who have been acutely conscious of secret police activities in Kuomintang China have had nothing comparable to report from Communist China.’ The reason is that these official observers were allowed the freedom to observe the limited activities of KMT secret police, while they weren’t even permitted to enter Red China. Had they wished, though, they could have learned a lot from people, some of them Americans, who had lived in Red China. They would have heard, for instance, about the ‘T’ing chuang hui,’ or eavesdropper corps, who after killing off all watchdogs, creep up at night, next to the wall or on the flat roofs of North China homes, to hear what is being said inside the family about the Communists. Children are rewarded for spying on their parents and, if anyone is believed to be guilty of anti-Communist remarks, a terror gang swoops down at midnight and the chances are the unfortunate victim will be discovered next morning buried alive outside his home. This sort of secret police and terrorism combined has been so universal in Red China that if Mr. Lattimore doesn’t know about it he knows extremely little of Chinese Communism.

“As far back as 1945 the predominant sentiment everywhere in Red areas was fear, universal fear, fear at every instant, according to an official report of a Frenchman, a former university professor from Tientsin who spent the years from 1941 to 1945 in Red territory, and had been haled before both Japanese and Red tribunals. ‘It is not terror,’ he says, ‘for terror is a fear which shows itself exteriorly. Here one must not allow his fear to be seen; he must appear satisfied and approve everything that is said and done. It is a hidden fear, but a creeping, paralyzing fear. The people keep quiet. They do not criticize; they avoid passing out any news. They are afraid of their neighbor, who may denounce them. They are afraid of the Reds who might hear and imprison them. When the Reds impose a tax, it is paid without a word. If they requisition anyone for public work, the work is done carefully and rapidly, without need of any blows and curses as in the time of the Japanese, and wonderful to say, without any need of supervision. (This is amazing to anyone who knows the easy-going Chinese character.) I have witnessed groups of workers along the big highways built by the Japanese, doing exactly the same kind of work they did for the Japanese, but how different their attitude! There was no foreman there to supervise, and yet everything was done carefully, with hardly a word, without the least bit of joking.⁷ Mr. Lattimore, with his lack of background, might interpret this as a sign of enthusiasm for the Red masters. But the report states simply, 'They were afraid.'

"What was true in 1945 in Red areas is also true today according to the very latest 1949 reports that have filtered through the Bamboo Curtain: 'There isn't too much suffering from hunger in the city, but it is impossible to lay up any reserves. The Communists search every house methodically and confiscate any surplus. Anyone who complains or criticizes then disappears mysteriously, buried alive, it is said. No one dares say a word, even to his best friend. In the country districts conditions are terrible. The Reds take everything; grain, livestock, clothing, tools, and now all are being mobilised for army service. Famine reigns everywhere together with fear. The people endure this with clenched teeth, but when asked how things are going always answer, "Everything is going well." They had better.'

"These reports come from reliable people who were there and know what they are talking about, and who ridicule the fairy tales Mr. Lattimore from his distant and comfortable chair in Johns Hopkins spins for eager young Americans who believe he is an authority on China's Reds. What, for example, could be further from the truth than this statement in The Situation in China, page 160: 'In China it may be conceded' (not by anyone who knows the situation, though, if I may interrupt) 'that the Communists hold the confidence of the people to such an extent that they can probably do more by persuasion, with less resort to coercion, than any previous revolutionaries in history. But the Communists cannot indulge in experiments which the people do not accept, because the armed and organized peasants, would be able to resist them just as they have hitherto resisted the return of the landlords.' Sheer nonsense! The only real landlords left in Red areas are the Red leaders themselves, and the people know enough not to try to resist these ruthless masters. For some reason, no one seems to relish being buried alive; and so the Communists can indulge in absolutely any experiment they choose without the slightest open resistance from the peasants, who are merely awaiting patiently for better days.

"Since Mr. Lattimore is patently in error on so many vital points connected with the China Red question, it becomes more and more strange that his advice on Red China should be followed almost slavishly by the United States State Department. It has already brought China to disaster and may, if we continue to follow it, also ruin America. It might be well to consider what advice he has given for future United States policy so we shall know what a new litany of Lattimore disasters awaits us.

"He has a chapter on Japan in his 'Situation in Asia' and, though he admits General MacArthur is a first-class administrator, he dislikes his 'fatherly mysticism' and 'old-line Republicanism', hints it would have been wiser to give the Russians more say, considers the present policy as pseudo-realistic and bound to fail. 'It's likely to blow up in our faces, like a humiliating stink bomb', damaging MacArthur's reputation in the end. He doesn't like keeping the Emperor, nor the type of democracy MacArthur is giving, apparently preferring for Japan the totalitarian type Mao Tse-tung is employing in China. Mr. Lattimore doesn't like to see Japan make a bulwark against Russian expansion, and believes that since she is possessed of the most advanced technical and managerial 'know-how' in Asia she will eventually make her own terms with both Russia and China, without consulting the U. S.

"The Japanese, watching America's failure to control the situation in China through the Kuomintang, have been giggling in their kimono sleeves. In a queer way it has helped to restore their self-respect for their own failure on the continent.' He sees no future for Japan apart from the future of Asia, since she needs the iron and coal of Manchuria and the markets of China.

"In this he is probably right; that is why it was always to America's vital interest to see that the Open Door policy and the territorial integrity of China were preserved, though this adviser to our State Department did not think them very important. He considers East Asia now definitely out of control by either Russia or America, stating that it forms a group of 'third countries,' which seem to resemble Nippon's ill-fated East Asia Co-prosperity Sphere. He believes Japan, then, will come to terms both with Communist Russia and Communist China, and will end up by being more anti-American than anti-Russian. If we had only adopted his plan for a Japanese 'democracy' right after the war, what a deal of trouble we would have saved!

"What, now, are his plans for the mainland? He was long in favor of a Chiang coalition with the Reds, and blames our 80th Congress for spoiling that. The result is now Communist control—which of course would have eventuated just as well had his original coalition idea gone through. We mustn't lay down our own conditions for dealing with a Red China, he says, or we shall spoil our favorable position with the Chinese. Has he never heard how Mao's Reds detest Americans, and hold half a dozen U. S. consuls under house arrest? 'We must at all costs avoid the appearance of wanting to punish the Chinese people for having a government which we didn't approve for them in advance.' As if the Chinese were really anxious for a puppet Red regime. We must not support any rump government, for that would be dividing China. We must extend credits to poor Red China and help build it up by trade and American engineering 'know-how' as 'Ford Motors and General Electric did in Russia in the period between wars'. But let's not lay down any conditions for our aid, by insisting that Red China be hostile to Red Russia.

"And if all that isn't enough to make Uncle Sam suspect that Owen Lattimore is making a fool out of him in the interests of world Communism, the expert goes much further: 'The new government of China will claim China's Big Five position in the United Nations, including the right of veto. By the use of our own veto we could delay China in moving into this position', but of course it would be unfair to deprive Russia of another vote, especially since Russia has had nothing whatsoever to do with imposing Communism on China! See now why the pinks are so strong on their insistence that the Red movement in China is purely nationalistic? And another vote for Mother Russia?

"Let's take Outer Mongolia, that voted unanimously to be annexed to Russia in 1945—each voter being required to sign his name on his ballot. 'Mongolia,' he says, 'is between a Communist-ruled Russia and a Communist-controlled China. It would be an advantage to American policy to be able to emphasize that there is a country occupying 600,000 square miles of territory * * * inhabited by people who are neither Chinese nor Russians. It is impossible to make use of this advantage unless the separation of Outer Mongolia is emphasized by membership in the United Nations. * * * It is true that Mongolia as a member of the United Nations would mean another vote for Russia; but would this be a greater disadvantage than our present complete lack of access to this key country between China and Russia?' (p. 226.)

"Yes, Mr. Lattimore, it would. Considering that the whole United States had but one vote in the United Nations, while Russia started out with three, it is simply wonderful of Owen Lattimore to give a couple more Far East satellite votes to our 'cold war' enemy. Since he is one of the chief advisers to our Far Eastern State Department Bureau, is it any wonder that disaster has been piled on disaster in Asia for Americans while world Communism engages in frenzied applause? If Mr. Lattimore is permitted to turn over one Far Eastern vote after another to Russia, Moscow will soon dominate the United Nations, and then can safely discard the veto. Why should one man, whose writings show he has no knowledge of the character of China's Reds, be allowed to go on unchallenged promoting chaos and ruining Christianity in Asia? True, he doesn't say he wants a Red Asia; but the publisher of his 'Situation in Asia' indicates his intentions when on the jacket of the book they print a map of Lattimore's Asia, including Japan, Sakhalin, all of China, the Philippines, the Dutch East Indies, Siam, Burma, Malaya and India, in nice Soviet Red."

It is uncanny how these State Department policy makers are drawn together time after time in an organization or group or project of pro-Soviet nature.

I now hand the committee a booklet setting forth the officers and trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It will be noted that Mr. Lattimore is a trustee.

The familiar pattern starts again with Messrs. Lattimore, Hanson, Bisson, and Jessup.

In the Institute of Pacific Relations, we have such pro-Communists as: Frederick Vanderbilt Field, Philip Jaffe, Kate L. Mitchell, Andrew Roth, Nym Wales.

The Attorney General of the United States has declared the American Peace Mobilization to be a subversive organization and the House Un-American Activities Committee has placed the same stamp of infamy on the Washington Committee for Aid to China.

The American Peace Mobilization was short-lived. It existed during the days of the Stalin-Hitler Pact and was liquidated by the Communists on the very day that Hitler invaded the Soviet Union.

Frederick Vanderbilt Field, one of the country's top Communists, was Executive Secretary of the American Peace Mobilization on Tuesday evening, February 11, 1941, also.

On that date, the Washington Committee for Aid to China, held a meeting at 16th and "O" Streets, N. W., Washington.

At the time this meeting was held, President Roosevelt was under the most savage attack of his career by Frederick Vanderbilt Field and his American Peace Mobilization.

The Senators may recall that this was the occasion when the American Peace Mobilization organized and carried out a twenty-four hour picket line around the White House. The pickets carried placards denouncing Roosevelt as a war-mongering tool of Wall Street.

On June 21, 1941, the American Peace Mobilization pickets were still surrounding the White House. When Hitler invaded the Soviet Union on the morning of June 22, the pickets were withdrawn within an hour. The party line had changed in a matter of minutes and the American Peace Mobilization then became the American People's Mobilization, urging the immediate entrance of the United States into the war.

Again, associated with Frederick Vanderbilt Field, we have Owen Lattimore as the principal speaker at the above meeting on the evening of February 11, 1941, with only two other speakers: One of them was Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Here again we have the old familiar pattern of a member of the important policy-making group of the State Department collaborating with known Communists under the sponsorship of organizations officially declared subversive.

I hand you an exhibit of the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, Exhibit 30. On April 21, 1943, the House Committee on Appropriations issued a report citing this organization as "subversive and un-American." On March 29, the House Special Committee on Un-American Activities cited it as a Communist front.

On September 2, 1947, on page 12 of its Report No. 1115, the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities said, "It will be remembered that during the days of the infamous Soviet-Nazi pact, the Communists built a protective organization known as the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, which culminated in the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties."

In its 1948 report on pages 112 and 327, the California Committee on Un-American Activities, after citing it as a Communist-front organization, defending Communists, had this to say: "After the dissolution of the American League for Peace and Democracy in February, 1940, the Communist Party frantically organized a new series of front organizations. The National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights was one of the new fronts and it was filled from top to bottom with veteran Communist Party-liners."

The Maryland Association for Democratic Rights was an affiliate of the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights. At a conference of this organization in Baltimore early in 1944, we have as sponsors, Mr. Owen Lattimore and his wife.

Once again we have a policy-making State Department and attaché collaborating with those who have sworn to destroy the nation by force and violence.

I find it impossible to visualize this sort of a good security risk under the "yardstick of loyalty" outlined by Secretary of State Acheson.

I hand the committee an exhibit of the Writers' Congress of 1943, 31.

On December 4, 1947, and on September 21, 1948, the then Attorney General Tom Clark in letters to the Loyalty Review Board, cited the Hollywood Writers' Mobilization as subversive and Communistic. In its 1945 report on page 130, the California Committee on Un-American Affairs described this organization as one "whose true purpose" was "the creation of a clearing house for Communist propaganda."

On October 1, 2 and 3 of 1943, the Writers' Congress and the Hollywood Writers' Mobilization held a meeting on the University of California-LA campus in Westwood. Appearing as the representative of the Office of War Information was Mr. Owen Lattimore.

Here again we have Mr. Lattimore involved as a principal in an organization declared Un-American by the Attorney General of the United States.

In the magazine "Pacific Affairs" of September 1938, Owen Lattimore described the Moscow purge trials as "a triumph for Democracy."

In his book entitled "Solution in Asia," Owen Lattimore declares that among the people of Asia, the Soviet Union has "a great power of attraction * * *. It stands for Democracy."

I submit that the background of Mr. Lattimore, his close collaboration and affiliation with numerous Communist organizations; his friendship and close cooperation with pro-Communist individuals, leaves absolutely no doubt that he is an extremely bad security risk under Secretary of State Acheson's "yardstick of Loyalty" and in fact, his wide knowledge of Far Eastern Affairs and his affinity for the Soviet cause in that area, might well have already done this nation incalculable and irreparable harm.

So much for Mr. Lattimore.

HORACE W. TRUESDELL,

Washington Committee for Aid to China,

1410 H Street N.W., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TRUESDELL: We are of course very sorry that a simple, factual, practically statistical article should have caused so much difficulty among individuals. You ask me to explain what happened. By this time the whole thing is so involved that it would take 20,000 words to explain it. Some day when I see you—I hope soon—I can show you our complete file of correspondence on it from which you will see that it was impossible for me, as it is today, to judge the merits of any particular person's claims. But what we are immediately interested in is that such matters should not become the subject of discussion in the magazine, having, as it does, such an important function to play in the Far Eastern world. We feel that it would be indistinctly bad taste, not only for the magazine but for the individuals involved, to have such explanations published, even if I knew what to publish. Of course we are not publishing any reprint of the article, as both you and Mr. Hu requested.

I suggest that sometime when I am in Washington that all of us have a session together and try our best to solve the mystery so we may avoid such conflicts in the future.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP J. JAFFE.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald, June 6, 1946]

HOW COME?

(By Frank C. Waldrop)

Herewith an item that may be of interest to Secretary of State Jimmy Byrnes who is doing his level best these days to cope with J. Stalin's bucking broncos of the Kremlin.

Whether he finds it interesting or not, he certainly could with profit ask a few questions about a project in his own shop going by the title of the "Orientation Conferences and Training Programs for Personnel of the Foreign Service and the Department of State."

The writer of this piece sat in, uninvited, yesterday on one of those training projects and found it nothing more or less than an example to diplomats on how to needle a man whose back is turned—in this case Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

To begin at the beginning, the State Department has a "division of training services" which has the very valuable assignment of making better diplomats of the departmental forces.

As a part of this, there are scheduled for every work day from Monday through Friday all this month, a series of lectures by supposed experts on subjects of importance in diplomacy.

[Don't give up. It concerns you, too, because the State Department is supposed to look out for the interests of the United States between wars and you live here.]

Of 57 instructors listed to give the developing diplomats the real dope on their business, all but three are Government officials.

The three exceptions are: Dr. Edward C. Acheson, director of the school of foreign service at the George Washington University here and brother of Under-secretary of State Dean Acheson; Prof. Owen Lattimore, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and Prof. Frederick L. Schuman of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

Lattimore is a bosom pal of Henry Wallace, the great mind of the ages now trying to decide whether he can best save the world by staying on in Truman's Cabinet to bore from within or by resigning to bore from without.

Lattimore also hangs out with other persons less well known, to an extent that ought to give J. Byrnes some pause.

Just an item: He was formerly on the editorial board of "Amerasia," the pro-Soviet magazine that got caught in possession of confidential State Department documents in 1944 with result that an editor and a State Department employee were convicted and fined.

Lattimore also has described Stalin's blood purges of 1936-39 as "a triumph for democracy," and that, friends, is just a slight sample.

He's clever, but you invariably find him in all those old familiar places when you check up. Consider his performance of yesterday.

Most people have the impression that on the record and the evidence the welfare of the United States is better looked after in Japan with Gen. Douglas MacArthur in sole command, than in Germany where a four-cornered quarrel over the remains grows worse and worse.

To all of this, Dr. Lattimore yesterday issued an hour-long "na-a-a-a-ah, it's lousy." His line is that the Japs have outsmarted MacArthur in that they are holding onto a "conservative" agricultural policy and occasionally rescue one of their industrialists, bankers, and so forth from the hangman's rope.

Match that up, citizens, with what you've been hearing from Moscow, if you bother to listen. And match up with it the realization that such a thought is the best offered our State Department help as expert inside dope on the Far East.

How come the State Department has to drag in Owen Lattimore to tell what's what in the Orient? Hasn't the department got anybody on its own staff who knows something?

And as for the baby lined up for June 19—that F. L. Schuman—he's all too well known around here, especially to people who have read the records of the Dies committee.

But if you don't already know what he is, you can get him completely in a flash by turning to Page 582 of his latest book, "Soviet Politics At Home and Abroad," wherein he states:

"The Russian adventure marks a long forward stride toward human mastery of man's fate * * *."

That is how the State Department's expert instructor on U. S.-Soviet relations sums up Stalin's behavior and the almost 28 bloody years of Communist dictatorship in Russia.

No wonder State Department secret documents leak. No wonder Jimmy Byrnes goes to conferences with Molotov and comes staggering home asking who touched off the blast!

This writer plans to sit in on Schuman's June 19 performance, if it comes off, and will try to report on same in this space. That is, of course, if they don't lock the door first.

THE AMERICAN COUNCIL OF THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

is one of ten national councils in as many countries of the world. The Institute is a nonpartisan, private, research association supported by business corporations, by its members, and by Foundation grants. Its chief purpose is to provide Americans with the facts about economic, political and social developments in the Far East. It takes on stand on public policy, but through its publications and meetings provides an impartial forum within which Far Eastern specialists, who represent many points of view, may analyze issues frankly.

The American Council of the IPR publishes factual reports and studies in both book and pamphlet form, and conducts workshops, conferences, and study courses in many parts of the United States. Over two million copies of its popular pamphlets have been used by the Army and Navy, schools, colleges, and study groups.

In 1943, the Rockefeller Foundation Report called the Institute of Pacific Relations " * * * the most important single source of independent studies of the problems of the Pacific Area and the Far East."

In 1945 the United States Navy awarded its Certificate of Achievement to the American Council of the IPR "in recognition of exceptional accomplishment in behalf of the United States Navy and of meritorious contribution to the national war effort."

WRITERS CONGRESS—1943

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, L. A. CAMPUS, WESTWOOD. JOINT AUSPICES, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, HOLLYWOOD WRITERS MOBILIZATION, FRIDAY, SATURDAY, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2, 3

WRITERS IN WARTIME

Writers face tremendous and urgent tasks in relation to the war. The spoken and written word and the image on the screen are of crucial importance in developing civilian and military morale, in bringing the promise of victory to the countries under Axis tyranny, in cementing the unity of the United Nations, in clarifying the conditions for a just and lasting peace. In this second year of the conflict, the effective use of word and image is vital to the winning of the war.

Believing that this places a direct responsibility on all writers, and seeking to find ways and means by which the writer can understand and fulfill his obligations, the University of California and the Hollywood Writers Mobilization will hold a Congress of professional writers for the achievement of the following purposes:

To analyze propaganda techniques as weapons of victory; to sharpen the creative skill of writers by pooling their creative experience and knowledge; to investigate the most effective use of new media of expression; to strengthen firm and continuous cultural understanding among the United Nations; to mobilize the entire writing profession in a program of action for the free world of tomorrow.

EXHIBIT No. 32

SENATOR McCARTHY'S STATEMENT ON GUSTAVO DURAN

The Committee will recall that the name of Gustavo Duran was first mentioned by me as a possible bad security risk in a speech which I made in Reno, Nevada.

At that time I said: "Now, let's see what happens when individuals with Communist connections are forced out of the State Department. Gustavo Duran, who was labeled as (I quote) 'a notorious international Communist,' was made assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin American Affairs. He was taken into the State Department from his job as a lieutenant colonel in the Communist International Brigade. Finally, after intense congressional pressure and criticism, he resigned in 1946 from the State Department—and ladies and gentlemen, where do you think he is now? He took over a high-salaried job as Chief of Cultural Activities Section in the Office of the Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations."

This statement was promptly ridiculed by the Secretary of State who—through Mr. Penrifoy—merely said that this man Duran was no longer an employee of the State Department, but had been in the auxiliary foreign service from January 1943 until September 1945, and thereafter until October 4, 1946, in the Department. Mr. Penrifoy added that Duran had voluntarily resigned from the State Department on October 4, 1946.

One of the important facts that the Secretary overlooked in making this press release is that this man is still, as of today, a high salaried official in the United Nations. On March 8th my office phoned the office of Trygve Lie to find out exactly what type of work he was doing. My office was advised that information could not be given to me. The State Department advised me that Duran is now Chief of the Cultural Activities Section of the Department of Social Affairs, United Nations.

I was surprised to find that the Permanent Secretary of the United Nations felt he could not give to a United States Senator the information as to what this man was doing. However, since that time I have had the matter checked in New York and am informed he is actually with the International Refugee Organization, engaged in work having to do with screening refugees coming into this country. The financial contribution which the United States makes toward the running of this United Nations' agency amount to 45.57 percent. (Senate Report 1274, 81st Congress, 2d Session, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, prepared by Subcommittee on Relations with International Organizations.)

At the time that Acheson's man attempted to ridicule my statement, he either did not know the facts in the case or he was covering up the information which is in the files and which should have been known to him.

This information, which I shall document for the committee, was known or was available to the State Department. It shows that Duran was (1) well-known for his rabid Communist beliefs and activities, (2) that he was active in secret Soviet operations in the Spanish Republican Army, (3) that a highly confidential report was sent to the State Department by the Military Attaché at the American Embassy in Madrid which according to all existing rules called for Duran's immediate dismissal—unless the facts were proven to be wrong. Originally, I understand it was claimed that this was a case of mistaken identity. That claim, I believe, has been subsequently dropped in view of the fact that our intelligence produced pictures of him in the uniform that he wore at the time he was the regional head of SIM, which was the Spanish Counterpart of the Russian NKVD or OGPU. I now hand the committee one of those pictures.

At the time this intelligence report reached the State Department, Duran was a highly placed official in a confidential capacity with the State Department in South America.

When the American people read the carefully prepared statement put out by the Secretary of State's office in regard to the Duran statement, they were entitled to rely upon it as being the truth. Unfortunately, anyone who believed that statement got a completely erroneous impression of the actual facts.

Whichever way you wish to interpret this situation I submit to the Committee that it is typical of the carelessness of the top executives of the State Department of this country. The situation I have just discussed is typical of the type of news releases emanating from the State Department; it is typical of the half truths we hear in answer to the information which I have been developing in regard to the bad security risks in that Department.

I now submit to the committee the Intelligence Report just referred to in its entirety. It will be noted the State Department received a copy of it. There are certain matters discussed in this report which I do not feel should be made public until the committee has had a chance to thoroughly look into them. I have, therefore, deleted these sections from the copies being handed to the press and will not read them into the record at this time. The entire report, however, with nothing deleted is being handed to each of the members of the committee.

CONFIDENTIAL INTELLIGENCE REPORT FOR GENERAL USE BY ANY U. S. INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

JUNE 4, 1946.

From: Military Attaché, American Embassy, Madrid, Spain.
Source: Spanish Army Central General Staff. B-3.
Area Reported On: Spain.

Who's Who: Gustavo DURAN.

Following is the report given the Military Attaché by the A. C. of S., G-2, Spanish Central General Staff. After the M/A asked whether DURAN was known:

1. "Gustavo DURAN came to Madrid for the first time in the nineteen twenties from the Canary Island, in the company of another Canarian, a painter called Nestor, who was registered by the Spanish police for the same reasons as Duran * * *. As a friend of Nestor, Gustavo Duran became employed as a pianist in the company of Antonia Merce the 'Argentinita' and went to Berlin to participate in that capacity in dance shows. However, his * * * caused him to incur the fury of the Berlin police, which finally ousted him from Germany.

2. "Similar trouble happened to him in other European capitals. His * * * grew to the limit in Paris, which was the preferred center for his activities some years before the advent of the Spanish Republic in 1931, while he was under the protection of his friend Nestor, the painter, who was well known in certain Parisian quarters. About that time the Soviets entrusted Gustavo Duran with some missions and finally appointed him their agent.

3. "Upon the proclamation of the Spanish Republic, the 'Porcelana' (as he was nicknamed) returned to Madrid. His identity papers indicated that he was the representative of the Paramount Film Co. However, his true mission was service of the GPU. Duran was greatly successful in his activities due to the political protection he enjoyed. He soon became one of the leading members of the Youths of the Communist Party and greatly contributed to the merger of the Communist Youths with the youths of the Spanish Labor Party, thus giving birth to the JSU ('Juventudes Socialistas Unificadas'—United Socialist Youths), of fateful remembrance, since this organization committed the most cold-blooded crimes before 18 July 1936 (date of the military uprising) and during the Red revolution which ensued.

4. "During the republican regime (1931-1936) Duran continued practising his * * *. Together with other 'close' friends of his and some young pro-Communist poets, among whom Alberty was noted, Duran succeeded in becoming notorious. All them were his tools and all them were made into active Communists. In Duran's home located * * *, such meetings took place that the police had to interfere frequently, thus giving occasion to complete his record as * * * in the files of the General Directorate of Security. This record as * * * was probably removed by his friend Serrano Poncela, who was the Chief of the 'Red' Police during the months of October and November 1936 in Madrid and political reporter of 'Mundo Obrero' (a Communist newspaper) and Chief of the JSU. Duran's release from his frequent imprisonments for * * * conduct was due to his powerful political protectors, who blindly obeyed orders from the Soviet political police.

5. "Upon the national uprising (beginning of Civil War) Gustavo Duran took over the nearest convent to his house, called 'las Siervas de Maria,' located at the old Chamberi Plaza. He was there the 'responsible', or chief. He was afflicted there with typhoid fever during the month of August 1936.

The "Cause General" (General Judicial Proceedings) has information about the crimes perpetrated by the militia under the command of Duran's "chocho" (illegal prison). He was one of the principal leaders of the popular militia created by the Communists. He was a personal friend of Lister and Modesto (commanders of Red brigades, now Generals in the Russian Army) and soon became captain, major and lieutenant colonel of the "Red" Army. He belonged to the General staff of the "Red" forces which directed the "brilliant" withdrawals of Talavera de la Reina, Maqueda, Toledo, etc.

6. "When the international brigades were brought into the Madrid and Aranjuez fronts, Gustavo Duran formed part of the High Russian General Staff, with headquarters at Tarancon and its vicinity, where they left sad and hideous recollections.

7. "After Tarancon we (the Spanish Intelligence Service) lost track of Duran. It appears that he went to Moscow with a delegation of male and female members of the "Red" Army. It appears that later he was for some time in Paris.

8. "And now he is in Washington as a collaborator of Spruille Braden, Chief of a Section of the State Department."

9. M. A. Comment: A very reliable Spaniard who is anti-Franco in sympathies but is middle of the road republican and extremely pro-U. S. and democratic in his views states that he knows personally that DURAN as commander officer of an international brigade in a small town not far from Madrid ordered the execution of the town electrician and another man who was a mason, neither of whom has committed any act for which they should have suffered this execution.

1332 WENDELL G. JOHNSON,
Colonel, G. S. C., Military Attaché.

The Honorable Kenneth S. Wherry wrote to the State Department on August 2, 1946, demanding the immediate discharge of Duran. I now submit this letter:

AUGUST 2, 1946.

The Honorable JAMES F. BYRNES,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SECRETARY: As a member of the Appropriation Committee, on April 18, 1946, I asked for investigation of certain persons holding positions of trust and responsibility in your Department.

It was my purpose then and is now to withhold appropriations that finance the salaries and activities of anyone in the State Department whose allegiance apparently is to some other country rather than to the United States.

You will recall, Mr. Secretary, that when you appeared I questioned you about some of these officials and among them was a Gustavo Duran. This was just prior to the Carter Glass funeral. At that time you stated there was a question of identity of Gustavo Duran. You stated further an investigation had revealed that he was some other person than the man in the State Department, who has been an assistant to Spruille Braden.

It has now come to my knowledge there exists an extensively military intelligence report on this man, Gustavo Duran, and I am reliably informed that several copies of this report have been delivered to the State Department.

I am now making this formal request upon you in my official capacity as a United States Senator, and as a member of the State Department Subcommittee on Appropriations, that on the basis of this report you immediately discharge Gustavo Duran.

Cordially yours,

KENNETH S. WHERRY.

KSW: emm

After Senator Wherry wrote this letter to the State Department, demanding the immediate discharge of Duran, he received on September 14, 1946, the following letter from Mr. Donald Russell, the Assistant Secretary of State.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, September 14, 1946.

The Honorable KENNETH S. WHERRY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your recent inquiry about the security investigation by the Department of Mr. Gustavo Duran. As you know, the Department has a Security Committee which confines itself to reviewing security investigations and to making recommendations based thereon. Of course, this committee has nothing to do with reviewing the qualifications or competency of the person reviewed for a position in the Department other than as security is involved. I have added this because from our conversation I would assume that you seriously question the qualifications of Mr. Duran for employment, as distinguished from security consideration. That phase of Mr. Duran's employment is not within the scope of the Security Committee.

After reviewing the entire record on Mr. Duran as procured from all available sources, the Security Committee recommended favorably on Mr. Duran. I have carefully gone over the record before the Security Committee and I have approved their recommendation.

While I recognize that the above conclusions are at variance with your own feelings, I have to do my duty as I see it and I hope that you will recognize that I have attempted to exercise my judgment faithfully and honestly.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

(S) DONALD RUSSELL.

When Mr. Russell wrote this letter on September 14, 1946, he had in his files the top secret report from the Military Attaché in Madrid, which I have already referred to, outlining in detail the facts I have given on Duran.

What was the mysterious power in the possession of Duran that enabled him to continue to serve as a confidential assistant to Spruille Braden, the then head of the State Department's South American affairs?

Why was this man permitted voluntarily to resign in the face of these grave charges?

Mr. Duran obviously had powerful friends and one of his greatest champions was his immediate chief, Spruille Braden.

I now show the Committee a copy of a letter marked "secret" and dated December 21, 1943, in Havana.

HABANA, December 21, 1943.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE MILITARY ATTACHÉ

Mr. Gustavo Duran was recommended to me in the first instance by a friend of unimpeachable patriotism and integrity. He was recommended for a specific objective requiring a person of highly specialized qualifications; his duties were to be concerned with protecting United States interests through confidential surveillance over Falangist activities in Cuba.

As to Mr. Duran's background, he is a naturalized American citizen born and educated in Spain. He is of good family, and in his youth was particularly interested in the arts. When the Spanish Civil War began in July 1936, he gave up everything to fight on the side of the Loyalists and from a somewhat dilettante but brilliant young man, turned into a vital force for the Republican cause. His military record was reportedly brilliant. He was further described to me as being a man whose hatred for the Fascists, and his deep devotion to liberal principles, are not open to debate. A close association with him during a period of over a year fully support this description.

Mr. Duran arrived in Habana in November 1942 on the payroll of the Pan American Union and was to transfer to the staff of the CIAA on February 1, 1943. Instead, I urgently recommended his employment as an Auxiliary Foreign Service Office in a telegram from which I quote the following:

"I regard Duran as eminently qualified for the work he is performing and I have the highest estimation for his intelligence and character as well as for his complete loyalty and discretion. He has already proven of very great value to this Embassy and I anticipate that his usefulness will increase as he becomes more familiar with conditions in Cuba. I consider that his continuance here is particularly desirable at the present time when our relations with Spain are of such vital importance."

Mr. Duran has now served as one of my immediate associates for more than a year. His work has been excellent and outstandingly useful to the United States Government. From my personal knowledge based on close association, Mr. Duran is not a Communist but a liberal of the highest type. I consider him an unusually worthy, patriotic, and honorable American citizen, who shows great promise as a United States Government official capable of high responsibility.

SPRUILLE BRADEN.

Mr. Braden describes Mr. Duran as one recommended to him by a friend of unimpeachable integrity.

He set forth in his letter that Duran was a naturalized citizen, born and educated in Spain, of good family and in his youth was particularly "interested in the arts." Braden said that from 1936 Duran gave up everything to fight on the side of the Spanish Loyalists and said he "urgently recommended his employment as an Auxiliary Foreign Service officer."

Following Senator Wherry's letter to the State Department of August 1946, in which the Senator maintained that this man was such a bad security risk that he should be discharged, we find that he was permitted to resign on October 4, 1946.

In view of the grave charges made by Senator Wherry and the unusual attitude of the State Department in permitting this man's resignation, it would be interesting to know what, if any, investigation was made by State Department officials as to his conduct while in a responsible, confidential capacity in the Department.

But Duran's friends in the State Department did not turn their backs on him.

After his resignation, Duran almost immediately was employed as a representative of the International Refugee Organization of the United Nations. He was employed there as of yesterday.

I have received a confidential report that Duran was recommended for his UN position by a member of the present Presidential Cabinet. It has also been reported to me that Duran is the brother-in-law of Michael Straight, the owner and publisher of a pro-Communist magazine called the New Republic.

Here again it is certainly pertinent to inquire where this man got his power, what he did while in the State Department, and possibly, of equal importance, is what he did not do.

To complete this picture, I attach hereto copies of the following documents:

(1) Report from Edward J. Ruff, Assistant U. S. Military Attaché in the Dominican Republic, addressed to the American Intelligence Service dated December 30, 1943.

(2) Excerpt from the book, Why and How I Left Defense Ministry in the Intrigue of Russia in Spain, by Idalicio Prieto, former Minister of Defense for the Spanish Republican cause.

(3) A list of reference material for the committee's use in further checking into the background and activities of this man who is now with IRO, screening refugees coming into the United States.

DECEMBER 30, 1943.

REPORT FROM EDWARD J. RUFF, ASSISTANT U. S. MILITARY ATTACHÉ IN THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

I want to take this opportunity to clarify my position in connection with Report No. 428, dated 13 December 1943, subject: Gustavo DURAN, Alleged Communist Employee of the CIAA, Havana. As you know, this office received a cable from the Military Attaché, Havana, requesting that dissemination of this report to be held up on the grounds that it was "absolutely incorrect." A few days ago we received letter No. 7967 from Lt. Col. Brown, written by Ambassador Braden concerning this individual. Both these communications corroborated information which we had regarding Duran and I cannot see on the basis of their reports how our report can be branded as "absolutely incorrect." Our only statement in the report on Duran is that he was a member of the Communist Party in Spain. From further reports received, this information can now be evaluated as A-1. For your own knowledge, the information on Duran was submitted by a Spanish refugee who also served as a Lt. Colonel in the Spanish Republican Army and had served on Duran's promotion board in Spain, which board was charged with considering recommendations for promotion of Spanish Republican Officers. As our source was actually sitting on the Board at the time that Duran's recommendation for promotion came through, he himself saw all Duran's papers and letters of recommendation, and had access to complete information regarding Duran's background.

He states, dogmatically, that the records showed Duran to be a member of the Spanish Communist Party. Our source had previously made available to us the information agreeing with that sent to us by Military Attaché, Havana, except the statement that Duran entered the Army as a private. According to our Agent, Duran was commissioned directly from civilian life and given the rank of Major in the Militia. Later when the Militia became part of the Spanish Republican Army, he was made a Major in the Army. The only additional information we had, and which we did not mention in the report as it was not believed pertinent, was the reported fact that Duran is a homosexual. I do not question Duran's interest in the arts, his culture, or intelligence. However, we only stated in our report that Duran was a member of the Communist Party, and that we did not know whether he is still a member of the Communist Party. I, myself, am convinced that Duran was a Communist and consider Ambassador Barden's statement that he is a "liberal of the highest type" to be a euphemism. Under the circumstances, I believed the reliability of our report still remains as originally submitted.

The Ambassador here is inclined to concur in my report on Duran, but has asked that no further official correspondence on the subject be sent up. Hence this personal letter from me.

Sincerely,

EDWARD J. RUFF,

1st Lt., A. G. D., Assistant Military Attaché.

EXCERPT FROM THE BOOK, WHY AND HOW I LEFT DEFENSE MINISTRY IN THE INTRIGUE OF RUSSIA IN SPAIN, BY INDALICIO PRIETO, FORMER MINISTER OF DEFENSE FOR THE SPANISH REPUBLIC CAUSE

It is true that I have had certain incidents with the Russians. Certain Russian technicians proposed to me in Valencia, that a service of Military Investigations should be created. This was the Spanish counterpart of the NKVD. I confess that I opposed the project. But because of insistent pressure, I created the SIM. I was especially concerned with choosing a chief, until I gave it to an intimate friend of mine, who had just come from France, where he was with his family. In entrusting him with the task, I gave him these instructions:

"You are going to form the SIM, carefully, with elements of all groups of the Popular Front. Your only charges will be these two: Do not permit the new organization to be converted into an instrument of the Communists and do not permit Russian technicians to gain control. Listen to the advice of these technicians and follow their orientations, which can be very useful to you, but control must always be in your hands and in that of the Government, and of no one else."

I showed little tact in the selection of that comrade. A Republican named Sayagues came in fact to be the chief of SIM. Regional chiefs of the SIM were designated and they proposed to me a certain Gustavo Duran for the Madrid zone. It was not concealed from me that the person proposed was a Communist (Duran). I knew this, but in spite of that, he was appointed by me. In the decree creating the SIM of August 1937—a decree which I myself drew up, because I did not wish to follow in a slavish manner the project which was handed me—there is an article by virtue of which the appointment of all agents of the SIM rests exclusive with the Minister of National Defense. This was a guarantee which temporarily I wish to establish. No one could be an agent of the SIM who was not in possession of the memorandum book which bore duplicate the signature of the minister. Duran having been appointed chief of the demarcation of the army of the center, of his own accord and without power to do so, appointed the agents who were under his orders, which to the number of some hundreds, were Communists and only four or five were Socialists. I faced an intolerable situation, wherefore alleging, and with reason, that I lacked commanders in the army. I ordered that all military chiefs who were not in particular positions in the army should return to their former positions and thus Major Duran had to return to his military function. Because of Duran's leaving the SIM I received a visit from a Russian technician, of these services, who said to me:

"RUSSIAN AGENT. I have come to speak to you about the dismissal of Duran. What happened?"

"PRIETO. Nothing special, I lacked commanders in the army and ordered Duran to return to it.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. No. You discharged him because he appointed Communists as agents in Madrid.

"PRIETO. That is also sufficient reason, because Duran absolutely lacked authority to make appointments.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. Why did he not have the power to appoint agents?"

"PRIETO. Because by virtue of the decree creating the SIM that power is reserved exclusively to the Minister."

I read the decree and before the evidence of my statement my visitor alleged:

"RUSSIAN AGENT. Duran could make temporary appointments.

"PRIETO. Neither actual nor temporary. Here in Spain, moreover, the temporary is converted into the definitive.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. Be that as it may, I come to ask you to immediately restore Major Duran as chief of the SIM in Madrid.

"PRIETO. I am very sorry, but I cannot consent.

"RUSSIAN AGENT. If you do not restore Duran, my relations with you are broken.

"PRIETO. I am sorry, but Major Duran will go to the front of his division and will not return to the SIM. Your attitude is unjustified and I cannot yield to it." I did not yield as a matter of fact, and my relations with the Russian technician, through his own wish, were absolutely cut off. I have not seen him since that scene.

SENATOR MCCARTHY'S STATEMENT ON JOHN STEWART SERVICE

This case is that of John Stewart Service.

This man is a foreign service officer of the Department of State and at the moment is in Calcutta, India, where he is helping determine the all-important policy of our Government toward India.

The name of John Stewart Service is not new to the men in the Government who must pass on a governmental employee's fitness as a security risk.

When Mr. Peurifoy testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee, he said that Service had been cleared four different times.

It is my understanding that the number has now risen to five and I earnestly request that this committee ascertain immediately if Service was not considered as a bad security risk by the Loyalty Appeal Board of the Civil Service Commission, in a post-audit decision, handed down on March 3 of this year.

I understand that this board returned the file of Mr. Service to the State Department with the report that they did not feel that they could give him clearance and requested that a new board be appointed for the consideration of this case.

To indicate to the committee the importance of this man's position as a security risk to the Government, I think it should be noted that he is one of the dozen top policy makers in the entire Department of State on Far Eastern policy.

He is one of the small, potent group of "untouchables" who year after year formulate and carry out the plans for the Department of State and its dealings with foreign nations; particularly, those in the Far East.

The Communist affiliations of Service are well known.

His background is crystal clear.

He was a friend and associate of Frederick Vanderbilt Field, the Communist Chairman of the Editorial Board of the infamous Amerasia.

Half of the Editorial Board of this magazine were pro-Communist members of the State Department and the committee is in possession of these names.

On June 6, 1945, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, after an exceedingly painstaking and careful investigation covering months, arrested Philip J. Jaffe, late Louise Mitchell, editor and coeditor of Amerasia, Andrew Roth, a lieutenant in the United States Naval Reserve stationed in Washington; Emanuel Sigurd Larsen and John Stewart Service, who were employees of the State Department (this is the same John S. Service to whom I have just referred and who is presently representing the State Department in Calcutta, India); Mark Julius Gayn, a magazine writer of New York City, who is about to leave for Russia. They were arrested on charges of espionage in connection with the theft of the following Government records:

360 classified documents from the State Department, including some top secret and confidential classification;

163 prepared by ONI.

42 prepared by MID.

58 prepared by OWI.

9 from the files of the War Department.

Some of the important documents picked up by the FBI at the time of the arrest were as follows:

First: One document marked "secret" and obviously originating in the Navy Department dealt with the schedule and targets for the bombing of Japan. This particular document was known to be in the possession of Phillip Jaffe, one of the defendants, during the early spring of 1945 and before the program had been effected. That information in the hands of our enemies could have cost us many precious American lives.

Second: Another document, also marked "top secret" and likewise originating in the Navy Department, dealt with the disposition of the Japanese Fleet subsequent to the major naval battle of October 1944, and gave the location and class of each Japanese warship. What conceivable reason or excuse could there be for these people, or anyone else without authority to have that information in their possession and at the same time claim freedom of the press? That was the excuse they offered. They stole this document for no good purpose.

Third: Another document stolen from the Office of Postal and Telegraph Censorship, was a secret report on the Far East and so stamped as to leave no doubt in anybody's mind that the mere possession of it by an unauthorized person was a clear violation of the Espionage Act. This was not an antiquated paper but of current and vital interest to our Government and the Nation's welfare.

Fourth: Another document stolen was from the Office of Military Intelligence and consisted of 22 pages containing information obtained from Japanese prisoners of war.

Fifth: Another stolen document, particularly illuminating and of present great importance to our policy in China, was a lengthy detailed report showing complete disposition of the units in the army of Chiang Kai-shek, where located, how placed, under whose command, naming the units, division by division, and showing their military strength.

Many of the stolen documents bear an imprint which reads as follows:

"This document contains information affecting the national defense of the United States within the meaning of the Espionage Act, 50 United States Code 31-32, as amended. Its transmission or the revelation of its contents in any manner to an unauthorized person is prohibited by law."

Despite the very small circulation of 1,700 copies of this magazine it had a large photocopying department. According to Congressman Dondero, who sponsored the resolution for the investigation of the grand jury, this department was working through the night, in the small hours of morning, and even on Sundays. It could reproduce the stolen documents—and undoubtedly did—and distribute them into channels to serve subversive purposes, even into clenched fists raised to destroy our Government.

In June 1944 Amerasia commenced attacks upon Joseph C. Grew, who had during his stay in the State Department rather vigorously opposed the clique which favored scuttling Chiang Kai-shek and allowing the Communist element in China to take over.

Larsen, one of the codefendants in this case subsequently wrote a lengthy report on this matter. I would like to quote briefly from parts of that report:

"Behind the now famous State Department Espionage Case, involving the arrest of six persons of whom I was one, an arrest which shocked the Nation on June 7, 1945, is the story of a highly organized campaign to switch American policy in the Far East from its long tested course to the Soviet line. It is a story which has never been told before in full. Many sensational though little explained developments, such as the General Stilwell Affair, the resignation of Under Secretary Joseph C. Grew and Ambassador Patrick Hurley and the emergence of a pro-Soviet bloc in the Far Eastern Division of the State Department, are interlaced with the Case of the Six, as the episode became known. * * *

"It is the mysterious whitewash of the chief actors of the Espionage Case which the Congress has directed the Hobbs committee to investigate. But from behind that whitewash there emerges the pattern of a major operation performed upon Uncle Sam without his being conscious of it. That operation vitally affects our main ramparts in the Pacific. In consequence of this operation General Marshall was sent on a foredoomed mission to China designed to promote Soviet expansion on our Asiatic frontier. It was a mission which could not but come to grief and which may yet bring untold sorrow to the American people.

"How did it happen that the United States began to turn in 1944 upon its loyal ally, the Chiang Kai-shek Government, which had for 7 years fought Japan, and to assume the sponsorship of the rebel Communist regime which collaborated with the Japanese during the period of the Stalin-Hitler Pact? How did it come to pass that Washington since 1944 has been seeking to foist Communist members upon the sole recognized and legitimate government of China, a maneuver equivalent to an attempt by a powerful China to introduce Earl Browder and William Z. Foster into key positions in the United States Government? How did it transpire that our top-ranking military leader, General Marshall, should have promoted an agreement in China under which American officers would be training and equipping rebel Chinese Communist units at the very time when they were ambushing our marines and when Communists the world over were waging a war of nerves upon the United States?

"Whose was the hand which forced the sensational resignation of Under Secretary of State Joseph C. Grew and his replacement by Dean Acheson? And was the same hand responsible for driving Ambassador Patrick Hurley into a blind alley and retirement?"

In describing the arrest, Larsen had this to say about his arrival at the office of the United States Commissioner:

"There I found myself sitting next to John Stewart Service, a leading figure in the pro-Soviet group in the China Section of the State Department, and to Lieutenant Andrew Roth, liaison officer between the Office of Naval Intelligence and the State Department, whom I also knew as an adherent of pro-Soviet policies. Both of them were arrested separately the same night in Washington."

Larsen then goes on to describe John Stewart Service, John P. Davies, Jr., and John Carter Vincent as the pro-Soviet group in the China Section whose views were reflected by Amerasia and whose members were in close touch with Jaffe and Roth. In connection with this, it will be remembered that John Service, as Stilwell's political adviser, accompanied a highly secret military mission to Yenan. Upon the return of this mission, you will recall that Stilwell demanded that Chiang Kai-shek allow him to equip and arm some 300,000 Communists. Chiang Kai-shek objected on the grounds that this was part of a Soviet plot to build up the rebel forces to the extent that they would control China. Chiang Kai-shek promptly requested the recall of Stilwell and President Roosevelt relieved Stilwell of his command. It was at this time that Service submitted his Report No. 40 to the State Department, which, according to Hurley, was a plan for the removal of support from the Chiang-Kai-shek government with the end result that the Communists would take over.

The espionage cases apparently had their origin when a British Intelligence Unit called attention to material being published in Amerasia which was embarrassing its investigations.

Preliminary investigations conducted at that time by OSS disclosed classified State Department material in the possession of Jaffe and Mitchell. The FBI then took over and reported that in the course of its quest it was found that John Stewart Service was in communication from China with Jaffe. The substance of some of Service's confidential messages to the State Department reached the offices of Amerasia in New York before they arrived in Washington. One of the papers found in Jaffe's possession was Document # 58, one of Service's secret reports entitled: "Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek—Decline of his Prestige and Criticism of and Opposition to his Leadership."

In the course of the FBI investigation Amerasia was revealed as the center of a group of active enthusiastic Communists or fellow travelers. To give you a better picture of Amerasia, it perhaps should be mentioned here that Owen Lattimore was formerly an editor of Amerasia, and Frederick Vanderbilt Field, a writer for the Daily Worker, was the magazine head. Mr. Jaffe incidentally was naturalized in 1923 and served as a contributing editor of the Defender, a monthly magazine of International Labor Defense, a Communist organization, in 1933. From 1934 to 1936 he had been a member of the editorial board of China Today, which was a publication of the pro-Soviet American Friends of the Chinese People. At that time he operated under the alias of J. W. Philips. Under the name of J. W. Philips, he presided in 1935 over a banquet at which Earl Browder was a speaker. He also lectured at the Jefferson School of Social Science, an avowed Communist Party institution. He was also a member of the Board of Directors of the National Council of American Soviet Friendship. The New York Times, subsequent to his arrest, referred to him as an active supporter of pro-Communist and pro-Soviet movements for a number of years.

According to an article in Plain Talk magazine Jaffe has been a liberal contributor to pro-Soviet causes and that on one occasion he reserved two tables at a hotel banquet held to launch a pro-Communist China front in the name of "The fifth floor, 35 East 12th Street," which happens to be the National Headquarters of the Communist Party.

I realize that this history of Jaffe's activities is unnecessary for most of the members of this investigating body, but I feel that the record should be complete so that anyone who reads it will understand the background of the individual to whom his four codefendants had been delivering secret State and War Department material. His coeditor, Miss Mitchell, gave a party for John S. Service when he returned from China. Service had previously attended a special press conference held by the Institute of Pacific Relations, in which he supported the position of the Chinese Communists.

Larsen had this to say about his codefendants:

"I knew Jaffe and his group as the editor of a magazine which had almost semiofficial standing among the left wingers in the State Department."

The night Kate Mitchell was arrested, she had in her possession according to Congressman Dondero, a highly confidential document entitled: "Plan of Battle Operations for Soldiers," a paper of such importance that Army Officers were subject to court martial if they lost their copies.

Congressman Frank Fellows, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary which investigated the grand jury which failed to indict Service, wrote a minority report in which he stated:

"The author of the resolution under which this committee assumed jurisdiction stated upon the floor of the House, 'The President authorized the arrest to be made and the arrests were forbidden by the State Department'."

Under Secretary Joseph C. Grew very urgently insisted upon a prosecution of the six individuals who were picked up by the FBI on charges of conspiracy to commit espionage. He thereupon immediately became a target in a campaign of vilification as the culprit in the case rather than the six who had been picked up by the FBI.

Lieutenant Roth wrote a series of articles for a New York paper and published a book in which he vigorously attacked Grew for his opposition to the Communist sympathizers in the State Department insofar as the far eastern policy was concerned.

Under Secretary Grew, after a lifetime in the diplomatic service, resigned and President Truman announced that Dean Acheson would take over the post of Under Secretary of State. * * *

"During my conference with Mr. Jaffe in October" Larsen said, "he dropped a remark which one could never forget, 'Well we've suffered a lot', he said, but anyhow we got Grew out'."

In regard to the legal handling of this case, the following is found in Plain Talk in an article by Larsen:

"While public attention was largely focused upon extraneous issues, the Espionage Case itself was following a special course behind the scenes. It appeared that Kate Mitchell had an influential uncle in Buffalo, a reputable attorney by the name of James M. Mitchell, former president of the New York State Bar Association. Mr. Mitchell was a member of a very influential law firm in Buffalo, Kenefick, Cooke, Mitchell, Bass & Letchworth. The New York City correspondents of that law firm include the most redoubtable Col. Joseph M. Hartfield, extremely well known and extremely influential in Government circles in Washington. Colonel Hartfield, who is regarded by some as one of the most powerful political lawyers in the country, made at least four trips to Washington where he called on top officials of the Department of Justice in the matter.

In that connection I would like to quote again from Congressman Dondero's talk on the House floor, in which he stated:

"I have heretofore charged and reiterate now that the court before whom these cases were brought was not fully informed of the facts. A summary of the court proceedings has been furnished to me, which shows no evidence or exhibit obtained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation presented to the court. Jaffe's counsel told the court that Jaffe had no intention of harming the Government, and United States Attorney Hitchcock told the court there was no element of disloyalty in connection with the case. If that is the fact, may I respectfully ask what purpose did these individuals have in mind in stealing these particular files?

Had this same thing happened in certain other governments, these people would undoubtedly have been summarily shot, without a trial. Let us not forget we were still at war with Germany and Japan when these files were stolen, and Jaffe, in whose possession they were found, had been for more than 10 years a leader and heavy financial supporter of Communist propaganda causes, according to the FBI."

As I stated above, after the Grand Jury failed to indict Mitchell, Service, and Roth, the House passed a resolution in which it directed the Committee on the Judiciary:

"to make a thorough investigation of all the circumstances with respect to the disposition of the charges of espionage and the possession of documents stolen from secret Government files which were made by the Federal Bureau of Investigation 'against Philip J. Jaffe, Kate L. Mitchell, John Stewart Service, Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen, Andrew Roth, and Mark Gayn,' and to report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House, if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems necessary."

This committee then confirmed a report of a theft of a vast number of documents from the State, War, and Navy Departments, which ranged in classification all the way from top secret to confidential. This committee report indicates that a number of the members of the Grand Jury voted for the indictment of Service and Mitchell on the espionage charges, but that the required number of 12 did not so vote.

It will be noted that the committee was not appointed for the purpose of passing upon the guilt or innocence of the espionage suspects, but was appointed for the purpose of investigating the way that the case was handled and to make recommendations. The committee did not in any way question the theft of the documents. However, it seemed to place a great deal of stress upon the fact that the documents might not be admissible in evidence because of the method of obtaining them.

For example, on page five, the report states as follows:

"4. Many of the identifiable documents might have had their evidential value destroyed by reason of the possibility of the court's sustaining the defendants' motions attacking the warrants of arrest.

"VI. Judicial decisions require scrupulous care to see that searches and seizures are reasonable. While search and seizure on arrest may be made without a search warrant, yet this is not so unless the warrant of arrest issued after 'probable cause' of guilty had been established by legal evidence."

On page six, the following statement is made:

"If the warrant for arrest was not issued on 'probable cause' substantiated by facts, the evidence disclosed as a result of the search and seizure incident to the arrest based on such a warrant would be subject to suppression and, therefore, not usable as evidence of the crime for which arrest was made."

While I have not seen any testimony of any of the Grand Jurors, and do not know what it is available, this would seem to indicate that the committee felt that the Grand Jury was disturbed, not so much by the question of guilt or innocence of the defendants, but by the question as to whether or not the guilt or innocence could be proven they apparently feel that much of the material would not be admissible because of the method of search and seizure. The following comment will be noted on page seven of the committee report:

"Most of the items seized at Jaffe's office were typewritten copies. Some of such copies were proved to have been typed in one of the Government departments. It may be fairly inferred that the originals of such copies were never removed but that copies were made at the department or agency where the original reposed."

This makes it very clear that the committee felt making copies of secret documents and then delivering the copies to unauthorized persons placed the crime in a different class from the delivery of the originals. It is rather difficult to understand this reasoning in view of the fact that photostats or copies of an important secret document would normally be of as much value to an enemy power as the originals. The committee further pointed out that additional reason for not finding the Grand Jury at fault is because any of the six can still be further prosecuted on the charge of espionage. The Majority Report makes some excellent recommendations, which the Secretary of State might well read. I especially call his attention to recommendations one, two and three on page nine, which read as follows:

"1. That the head of every department and agency of our Government see to it that more—much more—care be exercised in personnel procurement. That all those considered for Government positions in every echelon be investigated so thoroughly as to insure that no one be employed unless absolute certainty has been attained that nothing in background, present attitude, or affiliations raises any reasonable doubt of loyalty and patriotic devotion to the United States of America.

"2. That the watchword and motivating principle of Government employment must be: None but the best. For the fewer, the better, unless above question.

"3. That each and every present employee who fails to measure up to the highest standard should be discharged. No house divided against itself can stand."

One of the members of the six-man committee, Congressman Hancock, was prevented by illness from participating in the report. Two of the members of the committee wrote dissenting opinions, which meant that the decision to absolve the Grand Jury of responsibility was made by a 3-2 decision.

Congressman Fellows in his dissenting opinion made the following statement:

"Jaffe either took these documents himself, or his confederates took them for him. And two of the documents found were 'Top Secret' so marked and so designated. I can see no point in arguing that these papers may not have been of much value. The thieves thought they were. The Government agencies so adjudged them. And the facts show that the defendants could have had their choice of any documents they wished; they were given no protection so far as the State Department was concerned."

This transaction, or rather a series of transactions involved, embraces the unlawful removal of "top secret," "secret," "confidential," and "restricted" files from the Department of State, in our National Government. This is a very serious offense. In time of war, this is a most serious offense. When war is in progress, or even in time of peace, it is of little or no concern whether the files removed were "Originals" or "copies," the fact that "information" of either or any classification was removed from the secret files in the Department of State and was delivered to any individual, or group of individuals, who had no lawful right to receive the same, is the essence of the offense. When that very secret information was thus unlawfully revealed to others, no matter how the same was imparted to Mr. Jaffe, whether by an original, or by copy, or by any other method, the real damage has been done.

There should not be any attempt made in the report to either minimize or acquit anyone from the magnitude of the act or acts committed. The report filed appears to be at least an attempt to either minimize or completely justify some of the unlawful acts which were undoubtedly committed.

All those who participated in any way in the removal, or attempted removal, of these documents from the Department of State—who copied such reports and thereafter delivered such copies to Mr. Jaffe, or to any other person, not lawfully entitled to receive the same, should be prosecuted, and all those participating, in any degree in the unlawful acts under investigation, should be immediately discharged from their positions in our Government. The report should speak strongly and without any reservation upon that subject.

The questions here involved are so grave and the offenses so great, that no effort should be made to protect or defend those who so offended, but the report should be made both firm and strong—to speak the truth—but to place the blame where the same rightfully belongs.

This is but a small portion of the pertinent background of Service, but certainly, beyond doubt, it forever excludes this man as a security risk by whatever yardstick it is measured.

Again we have a known associate and collaborator with Communists and pro-Communists, a man high in the State Department consorting with admitted espionage agents, and I wish to say to this committee what I said on the floor of the Senate on February 20, 1950.

When Chiang Kai-shek was fighting our war, the State Department had in China a young man named John S. Service. His task, obviously, was not to work for the communization of China. Strangely, however, he sent official reports back to the State Department urging that we torpedo our ally Chiang Kai-shek and stating, in effect, that communism was the best hope of China.

Later this man—John Service—was picked up by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for turning over to the Communists secret State Department information. Strangely, however, he was never prosecuted. However, Joseph Grew, the Under Secretary of State, who insisted on his prosecution, was forced to resign. Two days after Grew's successor, Dean Acheson, took over as Under Secretary of State, this man—John Service—who had been picked up by the FBI and who had previously urged that communism was the best hope of China, was not only reinstated in the State Department but promoted. And finally, under Acheson, placed in charge of all placements and promotions.

Mr. Chairman, today this man, John S. Service, is a ranking officer in the policy-making group of "untouchables" on duty in Calcutta, India, one of the most strategically important listening posts in the world today and since the fall of China the most important new front of the cold war.

Five times this man has been investigated as to his loyalty and his acceptance as a security risk to the Nation.

What possible reason could there have been for even a second investigation of his record.

He was not an acceptable security risk under Mr. Acheson's "yardstick of loyalty" the day he entered the Government.

He is not a sound security risk today.

PLOT TO WRECK LABOR PARTY EXPOSED

The plot to turn the American Labor Party into a "front" for the Communist Party has been exposed by Charles Belous, who was secretary of the opposition. On February 13, 1940, Belous resigned from this group which calls itself the "Progressive Committee to Rebuild the A. L. P."

On April 2nd primary elections will be held throughout the State for party positions in the American Labor Party. Members of the State Committee of the Labor Party and delegates to the Presidential Convention will be elected.

For the first time since the organization of the Labor Party there is an organized movement which has named candidates in opposition to the candidates which have the endorsement and support of the leadership and founders of the American Labor Party.

Belous has exposed the vicious conspiracy of this opposition group. It is up to the enrolled voters of the American Labor Party to do the rest. Join with other members of the Labor Party and vote right on Primary Day—April 2nd.

BELOUS QUITS ALP GROUP OVER 'RED TIE'—SAYS "PROGRESSIVE COMMITTEE" IS TOOL OF COMMUNISTS

Former Councilman Charles Belous resigned today as secretary of the Progressive Committee to Reorganize the American Labor Party, and charged it was being used by the Communist Party in an effort to assure control of the ALP.

"It is clear that the Communists are conducting a knock-down and drag-out fight to take over leadership of the ALP and make it a front organization," Belous said at his home, 28-29 Forty-first Av., Long Island City.

CALLED NEW DEAL FOES

The Progressive Committee, headed by Morris Watson and with Eugene P. Connolly and Hyman Glickstein as moving spirits, is attempting to organize a State-wide fight against the present ALP leadership in the April primary, when a new State Committee will be elected.

Belous said it was the Watson group's opposition to President Roosevelt and the New Deal which finally convinced him that its aims went far beyond a mere change in ALP leadership.

"In the election of a successor to Congressman Sirovich," he said, "I was amazed to find a group I was aligned with that was supposed to be supporting the New Deal, openly fighting the election of Edelstein, the Democratic candidate."

Glickstein, attorney for the Watson committee, joined with Kenneth F. Simpson, GOP county leader, in a successful court action to void the nomination of Edelstein by the ALP.

Belous said he had realized from the start that there were Communists in the insurgent ALP movement, but that he had been "willing to work along with them" for the common immediate objective of ousting the present ALP leadership.

FINDS REAL AIM

Later events convinced him, he said, that the real aim of the Communists went much further, being no less than to make the ALP the tail of the Communist Party kite.

He said that although he was secretary of the committee he had not been consulted in formation of many of its policies.

When the committee was first organized last December, he said, Prof. Herman Gray of N. Y. U. and other recognized liberals were "supposed to be connected with it, but they pulled away."

Belous, center of numerous political fights in Queens where he once headed the City Fusion Party, said he was going to "take a rest from politics and try to earn a living as an honest lawyer."

SEES MORE QUITTING

"Quite a few others in Queens who were in the same position that I was are going to follow suit in resigning from the committee," he said. The ALP, it was learned, probably will drop the charges of disloyalty on which it has been seeking expulsion of Belous from the party.

In a formal statement announcing his resignation, as secretary of the Progressive Committee, the former Councilman said as a member of the group he had found himself forced to condone and even justify Nazi atrocities and suppress "deep-felt sympathies for Poland and Finland."

Even more significantly, he said, he was expected to "join with the Garners and Coughlins and Dieses and O'Connors to criticize" President Roosevelt and for the defeat of New Deal candidates and policies.

[From the Daily News, Wednesday, February 14, 1940]

BELOUS DISAVOWS PRO-REDS IN A. L. P.

(By Lowell Limpus)

Denouncing "the complete sell-out and abandonment of one of the most sympathetic Presidents that labor and the common man have had since Lincoln," former Councilman Charles Belous last night repudiated the faction which has been opposing the American Labor Party's purge of Communists.

The former Queens legislator intimated that the Reds themselves are behind the movement and declared that they are now blasting away at President Roosevelt with all their political artillery.

RESIGNED POST

Belous, who was just squeezed out of office by the last P. R. count, charged that the Communists are not only demanding opposition to the New Deal in return for their support but that they also tried to make him justify Hitler and the Nazis. As a result he resigned as secretary of the "Progressive Committee to Rebuild the American Labor Party."

In a public statement, Belous told how the rebel faction insisted that "I suppress my deep-felt sympathies for Finland and Poland" and revise his attitude toward nazism. "Suddenly I must condone its atrocities, and even justify them," he said. And the final straw came when he was told that he "must now work for the defeat of New Deal candidates and policies."

Although he didn't specify directly, there was no doubt about the group to which the former councilman was pointing. "When I find my thoughts and acts limited by strange logic and argument," he said, "one suspects something more than a mere tolerant attitude toward all minorities, including Communists."

GIVING UP LIBERTIES

Belous announced he was withdrawing from Labor Party activities although he would remain a member. Political observers generally believe that he lost his Queens seat at the last election because he was reputed to be too close to the Communists, although he specifically denied the charge during the campaign. Originally a Fusion Party candidate, he switched to the American Labor Party but was nosed out by Republican John Christensen.

OCTOBER 10, 1939.

Mr. ALEX ROSE,

State Secretary, American Labor Party, 151 West Fortieth Street, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. ROSE: I have just received your letter dated October 6th which in tone suggests a pistol being put to my head. My impulse under such circumstances is to dare the damn fool to shoot. Particularly where as in this case my views, and especially my loathing of all dictatorships, are so much a matter of common knowledge that you certainly cannot claim to be in the dark about them.

However, I realize that you are probably acting for what you consider compelling reasons of party strategy and are at least trying to treat all candidates alike. That being the case let me be magnanimous and answer your questions as best I can. But remember, please, that I am running for Judge of the Municipal Court, not for United States Senator, and so my opinions on international affairs are not worth the paper they're written on.

However, here they are:

First, I regard with horror and loathing the Hitler-Stalin pact.

Second, I agree with you that any fusing of the brown and red dictatorships is a treacherous blow to world civilization.

Third, I also agree, insofar as I understand them, with the President's proposed changes in our present neutrality law. But frankly I have been far too busy lately trying to be as good a Judge as possible to have given such legislation the careful study it requires.

Fourth, it is not easy for me to be neutral when I think of either Hitler or Stalin but I try not to lose my head and I continue to believe in the traditional American civil liberties. Above all I hope that we may keep at peace and still preserve American democracy.

Fifth, it goes without saying (or I should have thought it did) that I am not a Communist or anything even remotely resembling one. I am just an old-fashioned believer in democracy who gets awfully weary sometimes of all its ructions but would never, never give it up.

Sixth, my original subscription to the Constitution and platform of the American Labor Party remains unchanged and requires no reaffirmation.

In conclusion may I remind you that I am running to succeed myself as Judge of the Municipal Court on a platform of clean government and an independent nonpartisan judiciary and that the American Labor Party has approved this platform by its indorsement of my candidacy?

Very truly yours,

(Signed) DOROTHY KENYON.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PRESIDENT:

We await your address on May 27 in the belief that you will tell what we must do to insure the security of the United States by hastening the defeat of the aggressors. We pledge to you our loyal support in the performance of this historic task.

Some of us have been your political adherents, some your opponents, but all of us are united on this firm basis: we are Americans, you are our elected President. We acknowledge the eternal truth of that fine old American principle that political differences end at the water's edge. It is at the water's edge that our people now stand, facing to eastward and westward the frightful reality of world war and world revolution.

We have prayed that we might be spared from involvement in the war. But we cannot close our eyes to the wholesale murder of liberty. Most of all we cannot ignore the threats to our own security uttered and progressively enforced by these tyrants who are dedicated to the proposition that democracy must die.

The dictators have extended their world war and world revolution from continent to continent—farther and farther out into the Atlantic Ocean—nearer and nearer to the lifeline of the Western Hemisphere. With their propagandists and saboteurs they have begun their invasion of this hemisphere.

The challenge is inescapable. We cannot meet it with mere words nor with mere dollars. We know that strong action, even armed action, entailing greater sacrifices will be required of us.

With firm determination to carry through at whatever cost the policies necessary to defeat tyranny, we await the facts and leadership which the Commander-in-Chief alone can give. We repeat to you, Mr. President, the final words of the Declaration of Independence: "With a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor."

Respectfully submitted.

EUROPEAN SECTION, USSR TRANSMITTERS, OVERSEAS & FAR EAST SERVICE

JANUARY 6, 1949.

RUSSIA HAS "FREEST WOMEN ON EARTH"

Moscow, Soviet Far Eastern Service, in English to India, January 5, 1949,
6:30 a. m. EST—L.

(Talk by Maria Sharikova, Assistant Chairman of the Moscow Soviet on the Rights of Women)

The author began by saying that the U. S. representative in the U. N. Committee on the Rights of Women, Dorothy Kenyon, in endeavoring to conceal her reactionary stand has engaged in slandering the Soviet people, in particular Soviet women. In a radio broadcast over the Voice of America she talks a lot of irresponsible drivel attempting to deny the political, economic, and social equality enjoyed by the women of the USSR, at the same time painting a glowing picture of the position of women in Britain and the United States, when she knows full well what their position really is. "I am shocked at this shameful downright lie, completely unsupported by the tiniest fact." As it happens, Dorothy Kenyon could not quote facts for that would at once disprove her assertions.

Sharikova goes on to claim that the respect in which Soviet women are held was attested by the welcome given to the USSR delegation at the International Federation of Democratic Women. She outlines her own rise from the post of a village schoolmistress before the Revolution to that she holds at present and gives examples of other women in public positions. Is there any country in the world, she asks, where women can develop politically and play such an imposing role in the life of the State?

In the USSR whatever jobs women do they feel they are all the equal masters of their country, contributing to the work of the organs of the Soviet State. Dorothy Kenyon ignores such facts as these and tries to imply that women in the USSR get only the heavy work, but in the USSR women at work are protected by labor laws, unlike in the United States "where women workers and office clerks are completely dependent on the likes and dislikes of their employers." Women doing the same work as men get 30 to 40 percent less pay, as is the case also in Britain.

Dorothy Kenyon keeps quiet about this, just as she keeps quiet about the disgraceful part played by the capitalists of the United States and Britain in exploiting female labor in the colonial and dependent countries. The commentator describes the woes of the exploited women in the colonial countries of Asia and Africa quoting from the speech of a United States progressive delegate to the International Federation of Democratic Women to illustrate the conditions of slavery in which they live.

After quoting more facts and figures illustrating the part played by women in the U. S. S. R., Sharikova declares that instead of defending women in the UN, Dorothy Kenyon had engaged in slandering the "freest women on earth, the women of the U. S. S. R." However, as any of the thousands of visitors to the U. S. S. R. can witness, "the slander indulged in by Dorothy Kenyon can hoodwink no one."

ECONOMY OF SOVIET ZONE FLOURISHING

Moscow, Soviet Overseas Service, in English to North America, December 30, 1948, 9:00 p. m., EST—L.

(Commentary by Khalamov: "The Economic Situation in the Soviet Zone of Germany

[Text]

"We know from recent history that fascist Germany was a kingdom of financial and industrial monopolies, and Prussian Junkerdom the bosses that constituted the backbone of predatory German imperialism. It was financial bigwigs and such commanders of Ruhr-Wesphalian industry as Krupp and Thyssen who summoned Hitler to power. Their aggressive idea of creating a peace-abiding and democratic Germany is unreal and illusory.

"Yet German monopolies and Junker landed property rights have been done away with only in the Soviet Zone. This problem has been successfully solved in the Soviet Zone with due consideration for insuring a stable peace and universal security and with the active participation of broad democratic sections of the population.

SUCCESS OF SOVIET LAND REFORM

"Only 4 months after the collapse of the Nazi regime, at the demand of the German people, primarily the working peasantry, a democratic land reform was successfully carried out in the Soviet Zone. This did away with Junkerdom, that bulwark of German imperialism and aggression * * *

URGE BOMB-MAKING VACATION—COLUMBIA PROFESSORS ASK DECLARATION TO AID UNO COMMISSION

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES :

In view of the establishment of the UNO Commission on the Atomic Bomb, we would like to suggest a declaration of policy of the following nature by the President of the United States, in order that the discussions of the UNO Commission may proceed in an atmosphere of full good faith and of confidence in their successful outcome for international peace :

1. The United States will at once stop the production of bombs from material currently produced. This includes the preparation of sub-assemblies and all other procedures involved in the fabrication of bombs.

2. For one year, which would seem to be a reasonable time for the commission to mature its plans and to secure action on them by the Governments concerned, we will stop accumulating purified plutonium and uranium-235, which are the essential ingredients of atomic bombs. The plants which produce these materials will be kept merely in a stand-by condition. For this purpose they will run at the minimum rate compatible with maintaining them in good order, but they will not accumulate the resulting purified and fissionable products. As produced, these will be eliminated by appropriate means, such as dumping them into the ocean or returning them to their original mixture.

3. We are prepared to have the disposition of our present stockpile of bombs considered as one of the items in an agreement to be entered into by us and the other Governments.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND APPLIED SCIENCE,
Manhattan, March 22, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have known Dr. Esther C. Brunauer since October 1946, and I am certain that she is loyal to the Constitution, laws and ideals of the United States.

My knowledge of Mrs. Brunauer is based on an official relationship that has prevailed periodically since November 1946, when I attended the General Conference of UNESCO in Paris as a delegate, and Mrs. Brunauer attended as a member of the staff of the State Department. This same relationship existed at subsequent General Conferences of UNESCO. Of course between the international meetings, my work as chairman of the United States National Commission brought me in touch with Dr. Brunauer and her work in Washington, D. C.

I would say that the present ideological warfare in the world is Dr. Brunauer's chief concern, and in this she is constantly working to uphold United States policy, as well as the democratic philosophy generally, and to defeat the devious and clever tactics of the Russians and their satellites. At the Mexico City conference in 1947, for example, she spent a full month in counteracting the efforts of the Russian-dominated Polish delegation to pin the tag of "warmonger" on the Western democracies, and especially on the United States. She worked with devotion, precision, and effect. She was completely sincere in all she did.

I could cite many similar examples which have proved to me that it is erroneous and un-American to refer to Dr. Brunauer as a Communist sympathizer.
Sincerely yours,

MILTON S. EISENHOWER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1950.

Re Esther and Stephen Brunauer.

HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
*Chairman, Special Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.*

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I was considerably startled to read that Mr. and Mrs. Brunauer had been accused of Communist leanings and disloyalty before your subcommittee.

As you may perhaps recall, I helped as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee in the Eightieth Congress to initiate investigations which I believe assisted the State Department in eliminating employees who had demonstrated Communist leanings or were shown to be poor security risks. I am as anxious as anyone to rid our Government of any employees whose loyalty is doubtful. However, erroneous accusations, even though made in good faith, hurt that objective more than they help it.

I am convinced the accusations against the Brunauers are completely erroneous.

I first met the Brunauers in 1943, and Mrs. Ball and I have known both of them intimately since 1945. We live only a few blocks apart here in Washington and have spent many evenings together. Our conversations inevitably have dealt at length with politics, with international problems and issues and with the so-called cold war.

In all of our many hours of conversation, neither Esther nor Stephen has ever revealed the slightest indication of Communist attitudes. On the contrary, both of them are most strongly opposed to the ideology and practices of communism. As you know, Stephen Brunauer was born in Hungary and spent his youth there. Many of his boyhood friends have been victims of Communist dictatorship. He is perhaps the most violently anti-Communist person I know.

I have no hesitation in vouching for the complete loyalty of Stephen and Esther Brunauer to the United States and to our way of life.

With best regards,
Yours sincerely,

JOSEPH H. BALL.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS,
Washington 6, D. C.

HONORABLE MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: It is my well-considered opinion that Esther Caukin Brunauer and her husband, Dr. Stephen Brunauer are loyal Americans and definitely are not poor security risks.

Mrs. Brunauer took her graduate work at Stanford University under my direction and I have kept in close touch with her ever since. I have the highest regard for her character, intellectual integrity, and devotion to all ideals for which America stands. Her brilliant work as a research student in the Hoover Library is a matter of record. For years she occupied an important part in the American Association of University Women and has I know been considered for a number of academic positions.

As examples may I cite first her efforts to place Hungarian diplomats in this country who refused to accept Communist Hungary and resigned from the diplomatic service. Second, the excellent talk which she gave on UNESCO at the annual meeting of this association in Boston. Third, a long conversation which I had with her in August 1947 when she was visiting Los Angeles.

The allegations made against Mrs. Brunauer I regard as baseless, appalling, and not to be left unanswered.

Very sincerely yours,

RALPH H. LUTZ

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 23, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am suffering from such a sense of outrage because of Senator McCarthy's attacks on Esther Brunauer's loyalty that I am almost speechless—I can only recite certain facts. I have known Mrs. Brunauer since 1942 when she was interim chairman of the National Committee on the Cause and Cure of War, a group organized by the great woman suffrage leader Carrie Chapman Catt, a generation ago. Mrs. Brunauer and I worked together for the Women's Action Committee for Victory and Lasting Peace when we supported the United Nations. I have known Mrs. Brunauer always as an able statesman and as an objective, farsighted hate-free thinker and it goes without say—as a most loyal and useful citizen of the United States. If an inflamed mind with the power to injure her and limit or destroy her usefulness can see in her calm and philosophical approach to great problems anything evil or subversive, our democracy is indeed in a bad way.

Yours sincerely,

(S) VERA B. WHITEHOME
(Mrs. Norman deR. Whitehome).NOANK, CONN., *March 25, 1950.*The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am the Dean of Pembroke College in Brown University on leave of absence for this year and retiring in June 1950. From 1937–1941 I was National President of the American Association of University Women, and during those years I worked somewhat closely with Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer who was the Associate in International Relations for the National AAUW.

I am happy to testify to my strong convictions that Mrs. Brunauer is a loyal and devoted citizen. She is also extremely able. Her programs for the use of International Relations study groups in the AAUW were outstandingly good and in every case were permeated by a rare understanding of the problems of the United States in those difficult years. In that field alone Mrs. Brunauer did much to rally the loyal support of the large membership of the Association for the critical problems our country was facing at that time.

Mrs. Brunauer was also a representative of the American Association of University Women at its international Conferences, several of which I also attended, and her friendly spirit and great ability did much to make those Conferences successful. I believe firmly that international understanding comes in large measure from personal relationships among groups of different nations, so her work in that field seemed to me of unusual value. The U. S. S. R. never had representation at any of those Conferences.

I have not followed Mrs. Brunauer's career closely in recent years, but I am fully convinced from my own personal knowledge that she is not only a woman of unquestionable reliability and loyalty to her country, but that she must be a great asset to any department which has had the good fortune to enlist her services.

Sincerely yours,

MARGARET S. MORRIS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., *March 22, 1950.*Senator MILLARD TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I first met Mrs. Esther Brunauer through a mutual friend in Baltimore, either in 1934 or 1935, and have known her and her husband on a social basis since that time. Never have I had occasion to have any but the highest regard for both Dr. and Mrs. Brunauer's qualities of character and intellect. As a psychiatrist, and thus specifically accustomed to evaluating personalities, I would be very much astonished if either of them (I know Mrs. Brunauer better than I do her husband), had anything except entire loyalty for the principles of American democracy.

Trusting that the charges which have recently been made concerning Dr. and Mrs. Brunauer will be proven conclusively to be wholly without foundation.

Respectfully yours,

KATHERINE K. RICE, M. D.

VASSAR COLLEGE,
Poughkeepsie, N. Y., March 25, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I feel compelled to write a vigorous protest to the statements attributed to Senator McCarthy about Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer. I have known Mrs. Brunauer since the late twenties when she accepted a position with the American Association of University Women. As a member of the International Relations Committee of the American Association of University Women, serving under the chairmanship of the late President Mary Woolley of Mount Holyoke College, I was closely associated with Mrs. Brunauer. Subsequently, I have followed her work with the greatest respect and interest. Never have I heard her express any sentiment which by any stretch of the imagination could be regarded as disloyal to her Government or as sympathetic to the ideology of communism. Quite the contrary is true. Mrs. Brunauer has repeatedly spoken to groups of American college women, and every time I have heard her I have been impressed with her devotion to the American ideal.

Mrs. Brunauer's position with the American Association of University Women was that of Staff Associate for the Committee on International Relations. She was not in the consumer field, nor was she Executive Secretary of the Association as reported by the press.

I have a profound confidence in Mrs. Brunauer's integrity and in her loyalty. She is a citizen of whom America can be proud.

I also have great regard for your leadership, and it is my hope that you and the members of your committee will refute the unjust and unwarranted charges made against this citizen of our country.

Yours very truly,

SARAH GIBSON BLANDING.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 24, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In connection with the charges leveled by Senator McCarthy against Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, I should like to offer my testimony on her behalf.

I came to this country in 1937 and was naturalized in 1943; since 1937 I have been employed as a research chemist by the Eastman Kodak Co. My entry into the United States was made possible by an affidavit given by Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer and her husband, Dr. Stephen Brunauer. Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer was at that time an Associate for International Relations in the American Association for University Women, and she generously offered her affidavit to me as to a former recipient of an International Fellowship from that Association.

During the first few months of my stay in the United States I spent most of the time in Washington and became closely acquainted with Dr. Esther Brunauer, a privilege which I highly esteem, for I found her a rare person with the highest code of personal conduct. Through her, I became aware of the ideas which are the foundation of this country; her interpretation made me understand and love it. After I left Washington we could only meet occasionally, but as friends we felt the need to discuss vital issues even on these occasions. I vividly recall Dr. Brunauer's passionate devotion to this country, her high hopes when the United Nations were founded, and later her distress over the obstructionist policy of the Soviet Union.

In the light of my personal experience, it seems more than absurd that Dr. Brunauer should have been made the target of such charges as were made by Senator McCarthy—indeed, quite unforgivable.

Respectfully yours,

GERTRUDE KORNFELD.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: Shortly after Senator McCarthy had named Dr. Esther Brunauer as a poor security risk I wrote Dr. Brunauer and said that if I could be of any help in this matter for her to let me know. Dr. Brunauer has told me that a letter addressed to you could be of some help and that is why I am writing.

The reason I offered to be of help to Dr. Brunauer is that I have known her for some time and do not feel that the charge against her is justified. I first met her early in February 1946 when I started work for the Department of State. I saw quite a lot of her for the next two and a half years since her assignment was connected with UNESCO and the work that I did was connected with UNESCO also. For a few months we were in the same division in the Department of State; after that she transferred to the newly established UNESCO relations staff whereas I remained in the Office of International Affairs. My meetings with Dr. Brunauer, dealing as they did with UNESCO, covered a wide range of subjects. It was quite obvious to me that Dr. Brunauer's views were entirely orthodox. It is easy enough in conversations such as we had to spot a person who is a "pink" and I am convinced that Dr. Brunauer was neither pink nor any other reddish color.

I never saw Dr. Brunauer associate with persons of extreme leftish or communistic sympathies and I would doubt very much that she had any such associations.

It is true that a person can be a Communist and even his best friends will not know it. However, this is something that happens very, very seldom. Ordinarily, a Communist can be spotted quite easily by his views on certain key subjects, by his mannerisms and by his actions.

I can say without any doubt whatsoever that there was nothing that Dr. Brunauer did or said during the time that I have known her professionally and socially that gives me the least reason to doubt her loyalty and I conclude that she is loyal and should be allowed to continue in her very useful Government career undisturbed by further accusations which appear to be groundless.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES P. HENDRICK.

ARLINGTON, VA., March 24, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: May I take this opportunity to assure you of my absolute faith in the loyalty and patriotism of Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer.

I had the privilege of working directly under Dr. Brunauer at the American Association of University Women from September 1, 1929, until January 1, 1941. For about 10 years of that time I was her private secretary. During that time I was, of course, very closely associated with her. I cannot imagine anyone less deserving of the accusations made by Senator McCarthy.

One of my duties as Dr. Brunauer's secretary was the stenciling for duplication or preparing for the printer of all material which she wrote during that time. I feel sure that if you will check this material, which will be on file at the American Association of University Women, you will agree with me that it clearly indicates that the writer did not believe in communism nor in any of its ramifications.

Throughout my association with Dr. Brunauer it was quite evident that she was working wholeheartedly and tirelessly for the promotion of an international policy which would benefit the United States. There again an examination of her writings at the AAUW would bear out my belief. A check of the international items of the legislative program of that organization, which she supported by written material and speeches, would shed further light on her loyalty to the best interests of her country.

I would like also to say that I considered Dr. Brunauer a personal friend of mine and have only the highest regard for her loyalty, her integrity, her honesty—in fact for her character as a whole.

I would be more than happy to give you any further information you might wish about my associations with Dr. Brunauer.

Yours very sincerely,

HELEN ALLEY
(Mrs. W. G. Alley).

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 23, 1950.

HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I understand that the Senate Foreign Relations Investigating Subcommittee is giving Dr. Esther Brunauer (and her husband Dr. Stephen Brunauer) an opportunity to appear before it in reply to the charges made by Senator McCarthy.

I am sure that you and the members of your committee can be relied upon to give fair and thoughtful consideration to the material which will be presented to you at that time. It is a very serious responsibility which has been placed upon your committee. It is essential that persons with responsibility in the Government have complete loyalty to our Government, but it is equally important that the Government should not lose the services of able and loyal citizens.

I have known Dr. Esther Brunauer personally since 1946 and have known of her work as the associate in international relations of the American Association of University Women prior to that time. Since 1946 we have worked together within the Washington Branch of the AAUW and I have had frequent occasion for contact with her. She is a thoughtful, well-balanced and mature woman. From our talks I know that she has a deep faith in the democratic process. I am convinced that she has no sympathy whatsoever with totalitarianism, either of the right or the left. Furthermore, she is sufficiently astute that it would be quite impossible for her to be used by persons with such sympathies.

I have not known Dr. Brunauer's work directly, since my own position as Director of the Statistics Branch in the Public Housing Administration does not bring me into contact with the Department of State. However, since the AAUW is an organization seriously concerned with education in its broadest sense, our contacts have not been of a frivolous nature, but have been concerned with the development of the program and policies of that organization.

I trust that your committee will take prompt action to clear Dr. Brunauer's name so that she can continue to serve in the Department of State.

In addition, I would like to call your attention to the incorrect statements made about Dr. Brunauer's activities in the AAUW. Laying aside any debate as to whether activity on consumer problems should be considered indicative of sympathy with communism, I would like to point out that Dr. Brunauer had no part in developing organization activity in that area, but was concerned solely with international questions.

I have made no reference to Dr. Stephen Brunauer only because I am not personally acquainted with him.

Respectfully yours,

RUTH LOIS LYONS.

UNIVERSITY OF DENVER,
 SOCIAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION,
Denver, Colo., March 24, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I was both shocked and angered by Senator McCarthy's attack upon Mrs. Esther Cankin Brunauer. I have known Mrs. Brunauer since the time when she completed her Doctor's degree at Stanford University and became the international relations specialist for the American Association of University Women. While she was serving in that capacity I met her several times, read her publications, and heard her speak before groups of university women. The impression inevitably formed was of a woman devoted to America, with a scholarly mind, extraordinarily well informed about world affairs, and meticulous in documenting what she said and wrote. In other words, here was a woman of the finest moral and intellectual integrity.

In more recent years, I have had the opportunity to observe at first hand Dr. Brunauer's activities in the Department of State. I was appointed by the National Commission for UNESCO as Chairman of its Committee on Secretariat in the Department of State, and in this capacity was required to analyze Dr. Brunauer's activities as a member of the UNESCO Relations Staff. The impressions formed in earlier years, set forth above, were reinforced by my study of her services in the Department of State. I found her to be extremely conscientious, a tireless worker, and utterly loyal to our Government.

I am convinced that Senator McCarthy has done a grave injury to Mrs. Brunauer, and I hope that he or your committee will take appropriate steps to clear her name before the American public.

Sincerely,

BEN M. CHERRINGTON.

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE,
New York, N. Y., March 23, 1950.

HON. MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have recently read in the newspapers the accusations made by Senator McCarthy concerning Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer of the Department of State. These accusations seem to me irresponsible and unjust. As a loyal citizen of the United States I am venturing to write you this letter in defense of a person whom I feel is unjustly accused.

I have known Mrs. Brunauer for quite a number of years and was familiar with her work for the American Association of University Women before she joined the staff of the Department of State. During 1946 I was closely associated with her when she was the United States member of the Preparatory Commission for UNESCO and I was a Deputy Secretary-General on the staff of the Preparatory Commission. During that period I was working in London and Paris. Mrs. Brunauer was frequently there sitting with the Preparatory Commission. I had many close conferences with her concerning the policy of the United States respecting the development of UNESCO. In her work at the Preparatory Commission and in all my conversations with her, I know that she was a staunch defender of the American system. In the negotiations of the Preparatory Commission she consistently opposed the plans of Communist sympathizers. She as much as any other single person is responsible for the development of UNESCO along lines consistent with American policies.

Since 1947 I have been a member of the National Commission for UNESCO and its Executive Committee. In that capacity I have seen Mrs. Brunauer at work in the Department of State and have cooperated with her on various matters concerning cultural relations between nations. I can testify that at no time has there ever been the slightest evidence of disloyalty on her part. On the contrary, she has been alert and able at defending and advancing the democratic causes to which the United States and the western world are committed.

The attack on her is unjust and can only have the effect of weakening American prestige abroad and reducing the morale of the American civil service. I hope very much that an opportunity may be given Mrs. Brunauer for complete clearance of her good name.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD E. WILSON.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CLEARING HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1950.

To Whom It May Concern:

I have known Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer since October 1945. I met her then in connection with the United States Delegation to the London Conference early in November 1945, to draft the charter of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. I was one of the advisers to the Delegation, and she was an expert for the Department of State. I saw a great deal of her in London and worked with her there on the official work of the Delegation. I have seen her since on two or three occasions in connection with meetings of the United States Commission for UNESCO, of which I was formerly a member, and on one occasion I visited her home.

I have every reason to consider Mrs. Brunauer a very faithful, conscientious, and able member of the State Department's permanent staff. She was highly regarded by our Commission to London and by everyone I have ever spoken to about her. No question of her loyalty or reliability has ever been raised in my presence, nor have I ever had any reason to doubt them. I have always considered her to be a fine example of the American career woman in the Department of State, and a person in whose loyalty and integrity complete confidence can be placed.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT EMMERICH.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: As a Maryland voter and constituent of yours, let me first salute you for the excellent job you are doing as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Investigating Subcommittee. The whole Nation has confidence in your integrity and fairness.

The purpose of this letter is to tell you and the other members of the subcommittee of my shock and utter incredulity over Senator McCarthy's charges that my friend, Esther Caukin Brunauer, was of questionable loyalty and a poor security risk. I have known her personally for many years—since the middle thirties at least. My husband, Raymond Clapper, who, as you will remember, was killed in World War II during the Marshall Island invasion, was also a great admirer of her clear, brilliant intellect. If he were alive today I am sure he would join me in vouching for Esther Brunauer's loyalty to the United States and her hatred of all subversive activities. It is simply preposterous for anyone who has known her to believe any such irresponsible nonsense as Senator McCarthy is suggesting.

Esther Brunauer was associated with the AAUW for seventeen years, 1927 to 1944 in their Department of international education. Neither the organization nor the subject of international education could possibly be considered questionable. Since 1944, Esther Brunauer has been in the Department of State as Assistant Director for Policy Liaison UNESCO Relations Staff. (Incidentally, just let me point out that Senator McCarthy's staff work must be inaccurate and sloppy. He referred to Mrs. Brunauer's work as concerned with internal security.)

In one of my regular weekly radio broadcasts over Station WCFM (March 16) I said:

"It is nauseating to listen to Senator McCarthy insinuating names such as those of Esther Brunauer, John Carter Vincent and John Davies into the Senate hearings. I can speak from personal knowledge of these three in particular. They happen to be almost lifetime friends of mine, about whose patriotism I would vouch any day. These attacks smack too much of the kind of thing Hitler as well as Stalin did so well. They create suspicion, hysteria and chaos—just what the Commies want."

I know of no franker way to voice my confidence in Esther Brunauer than I did in that broadcast.

Cordially,

OLIVE CLAPPER,
(Mrs. Raymond Clapper).

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO,
DEPARTMENT OF PHILOSOPHY,
Chicago, Ill., March 23, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have learned with surprise that Senator McCarthy has testified concerning Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer before your subcommittee alleging that she is a person of questionable loyalty and a poor security risk. Since I have known Mrs. Brunauer for a number of years and have worked in close relations with her under circumstances which would give me grounds to judge the loyalty of her attitude, actions, and statements, I think it my duty to write to you concerning my judgment of Mrs. Brunauer's loyalty to the United States.

I have known Mrs. Brunauer since 1945. I was adviser to the United States Delegation to the General Conference of UNESCO in Paris in 1946, in Mexico City in 1947, and in Beirut in 1948, and was acting counsellor on UNESCO affairs attached to the Embassy in Paris in 1947. I had repeated opportunities to see Mrs. Brunauer at work. I have served on committees with her, I have been present with her at sessions of the General Conference of UNESCO and its subcommittees, and I have conferred with her and corresponded with her on particular items of the UNESCO program and the United States policy with respect to that program. The members of a delegation learn a great deal about each other, particularly when the meetings extend to four or five weeks; and five years of acquaintance, a good part of them in close association of work and interest in an international agency like UNESCO, would afford numerous opportunities to learn about Mrs. Brunauer's basic attitudes and loyalty. In all the period of my acquaintance with Mrs. Brunauer I have never seen or heard her do or say anything disloyal to the United States. She has been an assiduous and an intelligent worker for the interests of the United States in the conferences in which I have seen her participate, and far from being a matter of question, her insight into and her adherence to the principles of the American way of life have seemed to be conspicuous in her work in the Department of State.

Yours sincerely,

RICHARD P. McKEON.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have known Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer over a period of almost twenty years and have been well acquainted with both her thought and the expression of that thought in her career as a leader in education and in public office.

Dr. Brunauer's loyalty to all which is constructive and fine in American life and in the American tradition is not to be questioned, and I am shocked that such an implication as Senator McCarthy made about her in his statement to the Subcommittee on Monday, March 13, should ever have been voiced. I am convinced that it is altogether without basis. The integrity and the loyalty of Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer are supported by her long record of conscientious, conservative, and intelligent service.

I should like to add that I am deeply troubled also by the irreparable harm which is done to persons in public careers by such unwarranted expressions as that of Senator McCarthy.

Very sincerely yours,

BLANCHE H. DOW, President.

ARLINGTON, VA., March 21, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have learned of the charges made about March 13, 1950, that Dr. Stephen Brunauer and his wife, Dr. Esther Brunauer, are believed to be Communists or to have Communist affiliations.

I wish to take this opportunity to say that I have known Dr. and Mrs. Brunauer for over ten years and have always regarded them as American citizens completely loyal to the United States. I have never had the slightest reason for believing that either of them have any Communist leanings or affiliations and on the contrary have always understood that they are, as other loyal Americans, entirely opposed to Communism.

I may add as bearing on my statement that I have been connected with the Foreign Service and the State Department for thirty-three years and am at present Assistant Chief of the Visa Division. I have an English and Scotch family background going back to the Mayflower and early Colonial days and would not hesitate to divulge any derogatory information which might come to my attention.

I am glad to say that I have complete confidence in the loyalty of Dr. Brunauer and Mrs. Brunauer.

Sincerely yours,

ELIOT B. COULTER.

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION,

Washington, D. C., March 21, 1950.

Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington 25, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have noted the statements in the newspapers emanating from Senator McCarthy reflecting upon the loyalty of Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer. I wish to take this occasion to inform you and other members of the Committee that I have known Mrs. Brunauer over a period of approximately 15 years. This acquaintanceship covers the period when she was a member of the staff of the American Association of University Women and the period of her service in the Department of State beginning in March 1944.

In the course of my contacts with Mrs. Brunauer, I have had occasion to be acquainted with the nature of her work at the American Association of University Women and more particularly since she has been in the employ of the United States Department of State. As President of the American Council on Education I have had many and frequent contacts with her particularly in connection with the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

During all of this time I have admired the earnest self-sacrificing zeal with which she has pursued her work as a Federal employee. She has the respect and confidence of her associates, who, so far as I know, have never in any way questioned her loyalty and devotion to the principles of our Government. I am making this statement entirely without reservation.

Parenthetically, may I say that the character of the investigation which so far has resulted from Senator McCarthy's charges seems to me to reflect very unwisely upon innocent people and especially to injure the effectiveness of our diplomatic relationships in this exceedingly critical period of our history. It seems to me that we have thoroughly normal channels, well established, for testing the loyalty of government employees. I believe the present hearings have performed no useful service and on the other hand have been injurious to the character of innocent people and in our effectiveness in foreign relations.

Yours very sincerely,

GEORGE F. ZOOK, President.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

MY DEAR SENATOR: As you are interested in obtaining all possible information about those members of the Department of State who have been attacked as "Communists" or as "poor security risks" by Senator McCarthy, I should like to send you my unconditional endorsement of Esther Brunauer.

I worked with Mrs. Brunauer when she was Associate in International Education of the American Association of University Women, and in the National Committee on the Cause and Cure of War. At that time I was Chairman of Foreign Policy for the National League of Women Voters and frequently discussed international relations with her. Since the establishment of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO I have been associated with her at Commission meetings, committee meetings and at the General Conference in Paris, Mexico City and Beirut where I was a member of the U. S. Delegation.

I have never known a more devoted public servant than Mrs. Brunauer. She is careful, conscientious and loyal.

I hope that your Committee will speedily prove to your own satisfaction and that of the public that Mrs. Brunauer is a dependable and valuable member of the Department of State.

Sincerely yours,

LOUISE LEONARD WRIGHT.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY,

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: May I bring to your attention a statement in behalf of Esther Caukin Brunauer, who has been accused by Senator McCarthy as one of the officials of the Department of State whose loyalty is questionable?

I have known Mrs. Brunauer for some twenty-five years. I first became acquainted with her at Stanford University where she studied with me as a graduate student. Her work was so outstanding that I recommended her highly for a position as instructor at Scripps College. Before the decision was made she was offered a position with the American Association of University Women in Washington, D. C., which I felt would offer her greater possibilities so I urged her to accept it.

I have kept in touch with her and her work ever since that time. While working in the Department of State as head of the War History Unit, I had occasion to consider her work and found that she was doing a very excellent job. Later while I was writing a book on the history of the Department of State—which has recently been published by Macmillan—I again studied her work and that of the division to which she was attached and found both most satisfactory. Owing to the limitations of space and the cost of publication, I was compelled to eliminate from the manuscript the brief but praiseworthy evaluation which I gave of Mrs. Brunauer and her work.

I feel qualified to state categorically and unreservedly that I regard Esther Cankin Brunauer as the highest type of public servant, one who can be depended upon to serve her country to the best of her ability and with wholehearted loyalty and devotion.

Sincerely yours,

GRAHAM H. STUART.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 23, 1950.

HON. MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: For nine years Dr. Esther Brunauer has been known to me as the intelligent and loving mother of two little girls.

During the nine years I have been in the Brunauer home at irregular hours of the day and night and have never seen anything which would lead me to suspect otherwise than a typical home life, composed of Mr. Brunauer, Mrs. Brunauer, Sr., and the children.

I have been wondering how there could be much else than a typical home life in the Brunauer house without my knowing it, as Mrs. Brunauer, Sr., and the children are the type who tell all the family activities to the Doctor. I usually have had a good account of Dr. Brunauer's activities. Also the children show the result of much time spent upon them by the parents.

There has never been an accident or sudden illness during the nine years, when I was not able to immediately locate Dr. Brunauer. Both Dr. Brunauer and Mr. Brunauer seem to spend a lot of time with the family, and appear to enjoy home life and their children.

Sincerely,

MARGARET MARY NICHOLSON.

Re: Esther Cankin Brunauer.

HON. MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have been associated with Esther Brunauer in various undertakings for a decade or more. To me she has been the ideal among women consecrated to the interests of their country.

I remember at the San Francisco Conference, where I served as a Consultant, that she had her young children along, due to the fact that she had no one to leave them with in Washington. Most women would have said it was impossible to attend the Conference because of the children—but not Esther Brunauer.

She has worked with me in projects of the League of Nations, the United Nations Association, the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace, etc., etc.

My observation of her from first to last leads me to conclude that we need more—not fewer—women in American public life like Esther Brunauer.

Very truly yours,

HUGH MOORE.

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 21, 1950.

HONORABLE MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As a life-long Republican, I have been deeply shocked by Senator McCarthy's current accusations, particularly against Dorothy Kenyon and Esther Brunauer, both of whom are well known to me personally.

Esther Brunauer I count as a friend of many years' standing. We served together for almost 20 years, beginning in 1927, on the Committee on Selections for Oxford University of the American Association of University Women. Dr. Brunauer was the very able and highly respected secretary of the committee, upon whose sound judgment and careful, scholarly approach to questions the other members constantly relied.

It is inconceivable that anyone with her fine intelligence, knowledge of history, mental and emotional poise should have Communist leanings or be the dupe of Communist agitators.

Throughout the years I have known her, I have never heard Esther Brunauer express any remotely questionable opinions.

If loyal, competent Government officials are to be branded as renegades, without proper redress, no matter how unfounded the charges, we shall inevitably lose the benefit of their services, and the country will suffer immeasurably.

Sincerely yours,

MARGERY B. LOENGARD.

THE WASHINGTON POST,
Washington, D. C., March 21, 1950.

HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am writing you in behalf of Dr. Esther C. Brunauer, of the State Department, a valued friend of mine, who in my opinion has been falsely and irresponsibly accused by Senator McCarthy of disloyalty to her Government.

As an editorial-page columnist for the Washington Post, I have known Dr. Brunauer personally and professionally for nearly 5 years. Before that I was generally familiar with her activities as international relations secretary for the American Association of University Women.

From the time that Dr. Brunauer was appointed a consultant for the London meeting to draft a constitution for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, on through her successive service with UNESCO, including her representation of this country with the rank of Minister at the first general conference of UNESCO in Paris, November 1946, I have frequently met with her to discuss the aims and purposes of her work. I have always found her strongly devoted to the freedom of knowledge and free exchange of ideas for which UNESCO stands. What is more, all her attitudes, utterances, conduct have always expressed a devotion to the ideals on which the American Government rests.

Dr. Brunauer's associates, insofar as I have known them, have been definitely anti-Communist. Personally I consider her reliability and honor beyond question. It is incredible and inconceivable that she should be accused of disloyalty.

Yours sincerely,

MALVINA LINDSAY.

AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington 25, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This letter is addressed to you and your associates in the Government of the United States as an expression of greatest personal confidence in the loyalty and integrity of Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer of the Department of State.

I have personally known Dr. Brunauer for a period of 14 years. She is most highly respected among university women, in both this country and others, as a woman who, in her writings, public addresses, activities in organizations, and in her capacity as a national and international conference consultant, has steadfastly served to build up the best interests of democracy.

Dr. Brunauer's leadership activities have at no time been other than consistent with the welfare of this country. It would be impossible for her, by the very nature of her interests and of her character, to be other than a person of highest reliability and good faith.

My closest association with Dr. Brunauer have been in the work of the American Association of University Women, an educational organization which, in all its activities, is soundly American. From 1936 to 1944, while Dr. Brunauer was Associate in International Relations on the Headquarters Staff of the American Association of University Women and while I was on the faculty in psychology at the Pennsylvania State College, I served also as AACUW State president for Pennsylvania. During that period, I closely followed the work and leadership of Dr. Brunauer. Her loyalty to her country, then and now, is a matter of established record and dependability.

The Government of the United States is fortunate to have on the Staff of its Department of State a woman of the caliber and integrity of Dr. Brunauer.

Very truly yours,

(MRS.) HELEN K. KNANDEL,
Educational Consultant, Traffic Engineering & Safety Department.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I want very much to express to you my deep conviction as to the loyalty to our country of Esther Caukin Brunauer which has been questioned by Senator McCarthy before your subcommittee.

I have known Mrs. Brunauer since 1925 when I was a freshman at Stanford University in California. She was then a graduate assistant to my professor of European history, Dr. Ralph Lutz. Dr. Lutz, as you may know, has been for many years associated with former President Hoover in the work of the Hoover War Library at Stanford. I know that Dr. Brunauer is held in the highest esteem by the faculty under whom she worked at Stanford for her doctorate.

My friendship with her continued when I came to live in Washington in 1930. Since that time I have had regular contact with her, sometimes in various organization activities: The American Association of University Women; the Committee on the Cause and Cure of War headed by Carrie Chapman Catt; the Committee on the Organization of Peace, headed by Dr. James T. Shotwell, and sometimes in purely social gatherings.

I have always considered her contribution to popular discussion of public affairs of the highest quality. She has been one of those professionally trained women who has accepted the responsibility of citizenship—to help people generally become informed about public issues in order that they may act on informed judgments. To me there is no greater contribution to the democratic way of life.

I have also known her husband, Stephen Brunauer, since the time of their marriage, primarily in a social capacity. I have had no grounds whatsoever to question his loyalty to this, his adopted country. Contrariwise, I have always respected his defense of free institutions and his service to the cause of freedom during the last war. I know, too, that members of his family have suffered in Hungary at the hands of both Fascists and Communists.

If there is anything else that you think I might do to help clear the names of Mr. and Mrs. Brunauer before your committee, I would be most happy to be called upon.

Yours sincerely,

ANNE HARTWELL JOHNSTONE.

P. S.—I should identify myself as a housewife and mother of two daughters. I am currently a Director of the League of Women Voters of the United States. I am married to William C. Johnstone, for 20 years associated with George Washington University and now Director of the Office of Educational Exchange, Department of State—A. H. J.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS,

Washington, D. C., March 22, 1950.

Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: This letter is in reference to Esther Caukin Brunauer.

I have known Dr. Brunauer for the past twelve years. I have known her in special reference to her work in the State Department. The American Association of University Professors, of which I am the General Secretary, has always been interested in the programs of the State Department concerned with higher education and cultural affairs, and representatives of this Association frequently confer with members of the Professional Staff of the State Department in reference to higher education and cultural affairs. I have participated in a number of conferences with Dr. Brunauer and others of the State Department. I regard Dr. Brunauer as an able scholarly woman and as a loyal American.

At the Thirty-third Annual Meeting of this Association, which was held in Boston, Massachusetts, on February 22-23, 1947, Dr. Brunauer was a participant on the program. She spoke on the general subject: "UNESCO: Its Background and Its Role in Building for Peace." Also participating in this meeting and speaking on this subject was Mr. Charles A. Thomson, Executive Secretary of the United States National Commission for UNESCO. Both Dr. Brunauer and Mr. Thomson contributed immeasurably to the success of the meeting and to the consideration of the significant subject on which they spoke.

I have had occasion to work with Dr. Brunauer in other connections. When members of the Staff of the Hungarian Embassy resigned from that Embassy at the time the Soviets took over the Government of Hungary, Dr. Brunauer sought the help of this Association in finding academic positions for some of these persons and our joint efforts resulted in the placement of some of them. This is but a small bit of evidence, but very good evidence, that Dr. Brunauer is not only not a communist but is not in any way sympathetic with communist regimes.

There has never been and there is not now any doubt in my mind concerning Dr. Brunauer's complete loyalty to the Government of the United States.

Very sincerely yours,

RALPH E. HIMSTEAD.

Hon. MILLARD TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I recently read in the newspaper about my patient Mrs. Esther C. Brunauer and I feel it is my duty to make some statements about my experiences with her.

I am an Obstetrician and I delivered Mrs. Brunauer three times: on July 31, 1934, October 24, 1938, and on May 11, 1942. She first came to me on January 10, 1934, and at that time she was about 2½ months pregnant. She came to my office frequently for prenatal care. I delivered her the first time after a 28-hour labor. I came in contact with her many, many times. Similarly with the second and third pregnancies. I came in close contact with her on numerous occasions.

As she is highly intelligent and quite an interesting person I discussed with her various topics aside from our Doctor-patient relationship. I can honestly and conscientiously say that she had never made any remark that would reflect upon her loyalty to our form of government or Constitution of the United States. In my estimation she always was a valuable asset to the community and our country. If necessary, I am willing to state these facts under oath.

I never heard her make any remark favoring any subversive movement or foreign "ism." In other words, in my estimation she is a good American citizen as anyone I ever met. I saw her last in my office on September 11, 1947, and at that time her conduct was no different than at any time before.

Respectfully yours,

H. HERTZBERG, M. D.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: For the past twenty years, in various capacities in relation to the American Association of University Women—as member of the National Board of Directors, Regional Vice President, Director of the South Pacific Section, etc.—I have been in active contact with Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer. During that time I have had ample opportunity to observe the character of her work, the facets of her personality, and the nature of her relationships with various groups. These have been consistently straightforward and unimpeachably constructive.

Furthermore, I have read with care and attention, as they appeared, a good number of the pamphlets and brochures which Mrs. Brunauer brought out during her distinguished service with the American Association of University Women.

Although my home is on the West Coast, I have frequently been in Washington, particularly during the war, when I served on the seven-woman Advisory Council set up by the Navy Department. During that period I was in fairly continuous touch with Mrs. Brunauer, as also during the San Francisco Conference, where I was a consultant to the American Delegation, representing the American Association of University Women.

Throughout these two decades I have never heard, and I think, until Senator McCarthy included Mrs. Brunauer in his sweeping challenge, no one of my acquaintance had ever heard her integrity or her deep loyalty to her country questioned.

Mr. Brunauer I have known for a much shorter period, but always with the sense of his unflinching integrity. Mrs. Brunauer is a woman who, with her husband, has quietly, unostentatiously kept her home, raised her family, and served her country. Few have maintained a more honorable or a more truly American record.

Sincerely yours,

(Mrs. M. W.) GLADYS MURPHY GRAHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 21, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am writing to you because I should like to go on record regarding the loyalty of Esther Caukin Brunauer. I am now serving on the Policy Planning Staff and have been with the Department of State for seven years. Prior to that time I was instructor in government and sociology at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts.

I have known Mrs. Brunauer since I worked with her in the Department of State in preparation for the Dumbarton Oaks Conference in 1944. I was closely associated with her in these preparations and during the San Francisco Conference on International Organization in 1945. Subsequently, I have worked with her in connection with the development of American policy in the United Nations Educational and Scientific Organization (UNESCO), and she and I worked closely together on the Delegation to the Mexico Conference of UNESCO in 1947. These associations resulted in my knowing Mrs. Brunauer intimately and in having a very full insight into her thinking.

I want you to know that anyone who knows her as well as I do can have no doubt whatsoever as to her complete integrity and loyalty as an American. In all my experience with her I have never found her to depart in her thinking from basic American principles of democracy, and her devoted and energetic action on behalf of those principles in her government work testify to her complete sincerity. She is a person of great character and deep convictions, and those convictions are unqualifiedly dedicated to promoting our national interest.

I did not want to let this opportunity pass to add this word on behalf of one of our most useful and most highly regarded government servants.

Sincerely yours,

DOROTHY FOSDICK.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am addressing you in regard to Esther Caukin Brunauer, whose loyalty and fitness for service in the State Department have been questioned by Senator McCarthy.

The charges made against Miss Brunauer seem to me to be fantastic, utterly without basis of evidence, from the knowledge I have of Miss Brunauer. She has been known to me for many years, earlier in connection with her executive position in the Association of University Women, and more recently in connection with the United States Delegation to London, in 1945, to establish the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization.

In April 1944, I was appointed by Secretary of State Hull under the Roosevelt Administration as a member of the Commission headed by Representative, now Senator, Fullbright, to London for consultation with the Allied Ministers of Education as to the uses of education as an instrument of peace after the war. Miss Brunauer of the State Department prepared much of the material which gave helpful information to the American Commission during our labors in London during the month of April 1944.

In November 1945, under President Truman's Administration, I was again appointed as a Delegate on the Commission of the United States to London to the constituent assembly which set up the charter for UNESCO. On this Commission Miss Brunauer served as an Expert Adviser from the State Department.

For the month of November 1945, I worked in daily consultation with Miss Brunauer. During that period, in thrashing out all sorts of questions which our delegates had to consider, never did I hear a word from Miss Brunauer, either in official or unofficial dealings, which would reveal even the slightest Communist or pro-Communist leanings. Nor have I ever hear in general rumor even the faintest whisper to suggest that Miss Brunauer might be a Red, or even a Pink.

The strong impression I had, and still have, of Miss Brunauer is one of steady admiration for her clarity of thinking and for her expert, accurate knowledge of American international affairs. I had and have complete faith in her high sense of patriotism and complete loyalty to this country. I shall be glad if my word of testimony can help to right the grievous wrong against Miss Brunauer in the charges which appear to me false and entirely without evidence to support them.

Sincerely yours,

C. MILDRED THOMPSON,

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: Immediately upon learning that Esther Caukin Brunauer's name had been mentioned in connection with the investigation of the loyalty of State Department employees, I wish to convey to the committee in some form, any information which I may have which would be of use, however slight, in the attempt to arrive at a true picture of the situation.

I have known Dr. Brunauer for a period of approximately 15 years and during much of that time I have worked with her on matters of broad public interest particularly in the field of economics. I have known her and her husband socially and have had many pleasant talks on matters of national concern. During these years I have never had the slightest reason to question the complete loyalty and patriotism of Dr. Brunauer. I feel I have a reasonably clear understanding of her attitudes and political views and have reason to think that they are very close to my own. While I am not in a position to judge what information would be of use to your committee, I should like to make this general statement and if you should desire it, would attempt to add more specific information if I had some indication of what would be useful.

Very sincerely yours,

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: For many years Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer has been intimately connected with the American Association of University Women. She is at present an advisor on the Board of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women.

There is no one whose sound advice and good judgment I value more than Dr. Brunauer's. She is a person of excellent ability and of great integrity. She is a great humanitarian and a loyal American.

I sincerely hope that your committee will speedily correct the misinformation used by Senator McCarthy.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am writing you about Dr. Esther Brunauer, who, according to recent press releases, was among those whose loyalty to the Government of the United States was questioned by Senator McCarthy.

It has been my privilege during the last three or four years to work fairly closely with Dr. Brunauer on matters relating to UNESCO. At no time have I known her to make a statement or to take a position that would lead one to doubt her loyalty to our Government. When questions of policy have arisen that required a definite position to be taken there was never any uncertainty that she stood solidly for the American form of government.

It is indeed to be regretted that any Member of the Congress should resort to measures resembling those employed by the forms of government of which we so heartily disapprove.

Respectfully yours,

A. J. BRUMBAUGH.

ARLINGTON, VA., March 27, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: I should like to comment on the recent charges that Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer is a bad security risk.

I served as Dr. Brunauer's secretary for a period of two years from the time of my appointment in the Department of State on January 24, 1947. I was not acquainted with her prior to this assignment, and have not been officially associated with her since January 1949, when I was transferred to another Division within the Department. I assure you that this letter is purely voluntary on my part.

During the two years of my association with her I came to know her intimately and to discover that she is a truly great woman and in equal measure a great American. Patriotism, with Dr. Brunauer, is not something she tucks away for special occasions as most of us do. It is the essence of her daily thinking and motivates her daily life.

When, three years ago, Representative Busbey charged her with disloyalty to her country I assisted in her preparation of a categorical denial of the charges. I therefore am familiar with the exact charges and with the exact rebuttals. It was my observation that the charges were completely disproved by the facts presented. The denial was accepted by the Senate and published in the Congressional Record in July 1947. It is, therefore, difficult to understand how these disproved charges can now be used against her.

Dr. Brunauer prepared herself to take a responsible part in the international affairs of her Government by many years of study both here and abroad. She continues to take a scholarly approach to every aspect of her work of relating the policy of United States representation in UNESCO to the total American foreign policy.

The esteem and honor which is accorded her name were earned by twenty years of constructive work in the interests of her country. I know how she operates. She is modest. She seeks no personal acclaim. She is concerned only with the ultimate goal of mutual understanding and peace among the nations of the world. Were she a person of lesser stature, her idealistic approach might seem naive, but her sincerity often leaves others abashed. As her secretary I realize the depth of her sincerity and her content in making her contribution. Many join me in the opinion that she is making a greater individual contribution than any woman in America.

I was working daily with her at the time when the Hungarian Government was taken over by the Communists. I was familiar, through her, with the names and identities of the outstanding Hungarian figures in that event. I was a witness to the strain Dr. Brunauer and her husband were under during those critical days in Hungary. I was a witness to the grief they shared when the coup was complete and many of their friends in Hungary, who had held out to the end, succumbed to the pressure of communism. And I was a witness to their sympathetic attitude towards those members of the Hungarian Embassy staff in Washington who resigned their posts. It was abundantly clear which side the Brunauers were on.

The recent charges against Dr. Brunauer can very easily be disproved. No one who has ever been closely associated with her gives the smallest credence to the charges. However, the general public has no basis on which to form an opinion. It is hoped that the same spotlight can be turned on clearing her as was turned on accusing her—in simple justice—and in recompense for the unwarranted injury done her.

Sincerely yours,

(Mrs.) EIRE STEVENS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 27, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS.

Foreign Relations Committee, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have known Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, and her mother, and her father for thirty-three years. Both the charges which have been made against her publicly before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, and the circumstances under which they have been made shock me deeply.

Because there exists in the Executive Branch of the Government an adequate procedure for determining whether any employee is fit for and worthy of employment by the Government in a particular position, it should be unnecessary for any individual to speak in behalf of another individual who is employed by the Government. I have confidence in and respect for those procedures. By the use of them, it has been determined that Dr. Esther Brunauer is worthy of employment by the Federal Government in the position of responsibility and trust which she now occupies.

Nevertheless, and in spite of the application of those procedures, and the availability of other confidential procedures in the Government for ascertaining facts, for making determination of who may be or may have become undesirable, it has been charged publicly, in the Senate of the United States that Dr. Brunauer is not a proper person for such employment. This is a very serious matter and, yet, mere unsubstantiated assertions have been made about her. Resort has been made to anonymous allegations, malicious assertions, hearsay, gossip, and innuendo. Inaccurate and untrue statements have been made about her. The attack upon her is defamatory to her reputation and good name. But because it has been made within the areas of privileged communications to the Senate, and of the immunities of Members of the Senate, Dr. Esther Brunauer is deprived of the protection of fundamental legal procedures, of the right to defend her good name in court, and of obtaining remedies for injury to her name and reputation.

The very procedures in the Executive Branch of the Government which exist to protect both the Government and the individual, procedures involving the safeguarding of privacy, the right to present evidence and to obtain hearings, appeals and reviews, all of these are set to naught and nullified by the circumstances under which attacks have been made upon Dr. Esther Brunauer.

I deeply deplore those circumstances. But since they exist, it becomes necessary for those who know Dr. Brunauer to state publicly the facts about her which they know, and their opinion of her. Therefore, I desire to make the following statement:

Esther Caukin, now Mrs. Stephen Brunauer, is the daughter of Grace Blackwell Caukin and Ray Caukin, and was born in California. Her ancestors on both sides fought in the American War for Independence. Her ancestors were of English, Irish, French, and Dutch stock. On her mother's side, her ancestors settled in Connecticut in 1630. Her great grandfather, Ed. Riley, settled in San Francisco in 1858. He was Boston Irish.

Her father, Ray Caukin, served in the Army, in the Signal Corps, in World War I. He is a member of the American Legion, a past commander. He was a United States Post Master in Sierra Madre, California, and is now retired.

Her mother, Grace Blackwell Caukin, was a leader in the Woman's Suffrage movement in California; was Secretary of the California Woodrow Wilson Campaign Committee; and was executive secretary, at one time, of the California Democratic State Central Committee.

Both of her parents are living. They are splendid Americans, and solid citizens.

I attended the San Francisco Girls High School with Esther Caukin Brunauer, where we became close friends. We participated together in certain school activities, and attended certain classes together. I know her character and her attitudes very well, from long acquaintance. We have kept in touch with each other from the time of our youth. From 1933 to the present, I have known Dr. Brunauer closely in Washington, D. C.

From the time I first knew Esther Brunauer in 1917 until now, she has made a record for which she deserves the highest commendation and respect; she had the highest record in her class in high school; she received scholarships in Mills College, California, and at Stanford University. At Mills College she won the Senior Class Prize for Scholarship, and there she founded The Honor Society (the equivalent of Phi Beta Kappa), and was the vice president of the Associated Students.

At Mills College she attracted the friendship of the President of the College, the late Dr. Auralia Henry Reinhardt. At Stanford University she was a protégé of the late Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of Stanford. Later, she became a friend of the late Carrie Chapman Catt. Throughout her life, she has enjoyed the friendship and high regard of leaders in the field of education, and in public life, and of good and reputable people.

A distinguished scholar of history and international relations—A. B., 1924, Mills College; M. A., 1925, and Ph. D., 1927, Stanford University—she became a member of the staff in Washington, D. C., of the American Association of University Women, in 1927, where she was director of its International Relations Section, directing research and study programs for members of the Association, and acting as its representative to the International Federation of University Women. She held this post for seventeen years, until March 1944, when she received an appointment in the State Department, Division of International Security and Organization. She is still employed in the State Department. She has, therefore, held only two jobs in twenty-three years, which is evidence of both competence, trustworthiness, and faithfulness.

She married Stephen Brunauer in 1931. I have a high opinion of him. She has had three children, two of which are living. She has been as competent in her home as she has been in her professional work. She is a devoted wife and mother. Her two daughters are well reared and well cared for, and all that parents wish their children to be.

Esther Caukin Brunauer has certain traits of character which are predominant: She is loyal, sincere, honest, thorough, and possessed of good judgment. She has devoted herself to her family and to her professional work all of her life. She has concentrated upon her professional work to the exclusion of varied and miscellaneous pursuits; and she has not been a joiner of organizations. Because her professional work took her into the study of international problems, in which she acquired a high professional reputation, she was chosen to serve on the National Committee of the Cause and Cure of War. That national committee was made up of representatives of about eleven national women's organizations, and she was one of the representatives of the American Association of University Women. She was chairman of a very important committee of the Committee of the Cause and Cure of War, a committee appointed in 1936 to make a study of our national defense. This committee reported its findings in a printed pamphlet, and its findings created substantial public support of the program of the Army for strengthening the United States military organization.

Dr. Esther Brunauer has belonged to very few organizations, most of them professional; and none of the few she joined have ever been put on any list of subversive or Communist "front" organizations.

People sometimes are judged by their associates. In my long acquaintance and friendship with Esther Brunauer, I have observed that her associations, contacts, and friendships have always been with persons who are respected and honored.

What people think, say, and write is often an index of their points of view. I can say unequivocally that Esther Brunauer thinks, talks and acts in accordance with the highest concepts of a loyal, American citizen, and a Christian. She is not and never has been a faddist, a soft-headed or a soft-hearted "sympathizer," a believer in any of the ideologies of advocates of un- or non-democratic political or social systems. She is not a Communist "sympathizer" or "fellow-traveler." She is not and never has been a Communist, or a Fascist, or anything other than a real American and democratic citizen.

I know of nothing in the record of Esther Brunauer which would provide a basis for questioning her loyalty to her country, or her fitness for any position of confidence and trust in any department of the Government, or anywhere else. I have complete faith in her. I respect and admire her.

My opinion of Dr. Esther Brunauer is as follows: She is a loyal citizen of the United States. She is a real American. She is an honorable woman, possessed of the highest character and integrity in every respect—intellectually, morally, and spiritually. She is possessed of keen intellect, sound judgment, strength of character, and outstanding ability.

A great many women in the State of California, and throughout the United States, are very proud of Esther Brunauer. Her story, her life, and her achievements have been what we consider the best of womanhood that can be produced in our country. I resent deeply (and I know that I speak for many women) the irresponsible charges and insinuations which have been lodged against her. They are preposterous, scurrilous, and outrageous.

Esther Brunauer, an honorable and distinguished woman, a leader among women, and a competent and loyal public servant, has been unjustly humiliated before a committee of the United States Senate, and before the public. I am confident that the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate will find no merit whatsoever in the allegations which have been made against her. And when that conclusion becomes evident, I sincerely hope, Senator Tydings, that your Committee will publicly absolve Esther Brunauer from the charges which have been made, so that in that way, there may be restored to her, as far as possible, the full confidence and eminent status which she enjoyed before this extremely unfortunate incident occurred, and so that she may be completely vindicated.

Respectfully yours,

Marion J. Harron.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN
National Headquarters, 1634 Eye Street, N. W.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

STATEMENT REGARDING THE WORK OF MRS. ESTHER CAUKIN BRUNAUER AS A MEMBER OF THE STAFF OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN, 1927-44, ANNEXED TO THE LETTER OF MARCH 22, 1950, ADDRESSED TO SENATOR MILLARD E. TYDINGS, CHAIRMAN OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE ASSIGNED TO INVESTIGATE CHARGES OF DISLOYALTY AMONG EMPLOYEES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

(Prepared by the General Director of the American Association of University Women)

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy is reported to have said that Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer was for many years executive secretary of the American Association of University Women; and further, that she was instrumental in "committing this organization to the support of various front enterprises, particularly in the so-called consumer field." Both these statements will be shown to be untrue.

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN

Organization and purpose.—The American Association of University Women was organized in Boston in 1882 for the purpose of uniting the alumnae of different colleges and universities for "practical educational work." It is an educational organization, composed of women graduates of approved institutions; at the present time its membership numbers approximately 110,000 women, graduates of 271 colleges and universities. The purpose and policies of the Association are promoted through the joint efforts of its members, organized into local branches in every state. At present there are 1,157 branches, representing a cross section of women graduates of colleges and universities of the highest standing. The policies of the Association are voted by delegates representing the membership in the biennial convention of the Association, and are carried out by appropriate committees.

A major activity of the Association in its various branches is an extensive program of adult education. This program represents a sense of responsibility on the part of the women college graduates who make up the Association to be informed themselves, to cultivate intelligent public opinion on major issues, and to take action on the basis of a study of the facts.

Professional staff.—For each of the Association's committees there is a professional staff member at the national Headquarters, who carries on research and study and directs and counsels the membership in cooperating toward the Association's objectives in the field which she represents. The staff associates carry out the policies voted by the convention and developed by the national committees and the national Board of Directors. Staff members do not make policy.

In 1927 Mrs. Brunauer was appointed as a staff associate at national Headquarters for the Committee on International Relations, a position which she occupied continuously until March 7, 1944. During that time her work was confined solely to international education and international relations.

AAUW CONSUMER ACTIVITIES

The statement of Senator McCarthy that Mrs. Brunauer was "instrumental in committing this organization to the support of various front enterprises, particularly in the so-called consumer field," is completely at variance with the facts. Mrs. Brunauer had nothing whatever to do with the Association's consumer program. While the consumer activities of the Association are therefore not involved in this investigation, since this program has been attacked by Senator McCarthy, I wish to state emphatically that the consumer program of the American Association of University Women could not by any stretch of the imagination nor in any particular be considered a "communist front" activity.

Senator McCarthy has referred specifically to an instance reported in the New York Times for April 27, 1943. We find no reference to the American Association of University Women in the New York Times of that date; we do find an item in the Times of April 26 to which Senator McCarthy probably refers. This item states that a request, signed by 15 organizations, was presented to Price Administrator Prentiss M. Brown, urging that grade labeling of canned fruits and vegetables be required as a feature of price control, in order that price maintenance should not be defeated by a lowering of quality. In this suggestion the Association was joined by the American Home Economics Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Council of Jewish Women, and other reputable organizations. To imply that a request for information to enable housewives to know what they are buying is a "front enterprise" is manifestly absurd.

MRS. BRUNAUER'S RECORD

But as I have stated, Mrs. Brunauer had nothing to do with the above or any other consumer activity of the Association. Her responsibility was to help in carrying out the objectives of the Association's Committee on International Relations, which were: (1) "to foster closer international relationships among university women throughout the world," and (2) "to assist in building up an informed, vigorous American foreign policy."

Mrs. Brunauer gave wholehearted cooperation and leadership in the carrying out of both these purposes—and both are completely alien to the communist philosophy. As international relations associate, she devoted much time and effort to the International Federation of University Women, an organization which the university women of the U. S. S. R. never joined, although the way was open.

To the second purpose, the "building of an informed, vigorous opinion on American foreign policy," Mrs. Brunauer contributed continuously and effectively. She prepared, or arranged to have prepared, materials to assist local groups in studying international issues objectively—a purpose entirely at variance with the propaganda tactics of communism. By her honest, objective, and scholarly approach to controversial questions, she did much to develop the techniques and standards which have given the Association a place of leadership in the adult education field. The Association benefited greatly by her knowledge, integrity, good sense, intelligence, and logical thinking.

While Mrs. Brunauer's whole record as an AAUW staff member exemplified the best traditions of American democracy, I wish to call the attention of your Committee particularly to the part she played in the Association's international activities in the critical period of 1939-41. This was the period of the Nazi-U. S. S. R. friendship pact, when communists in the United States were violently isolationists and anti-British. At this time, the American Association of University Women was following the opposite line. Some instances of the Association's activities which were in direct contradiction to the policies advocated by communists may be cited:

(1) In the summer of 1940, the Association appealed to its members for homes for British children who might be sent to the United States for safety; more than 3,000 members offered their homes.

(2) In September 1940, the Association cabled £1,000 to the British Association of University Women for war relief.

(3) In September 1940, the Association cabled $2,000 to the University Women of Finland, a country then suffering from the effects of Russian aggression.

(4) On January 1, 1941, a letter which Dr. Brunauer helped to draft, which was signed by the Headquarters staff, was sent to all AAUW branches and State divisions, urging them to promote public discussion of aid to Britain, and asking that branches and members individually communicate their opinions on this issue to their Congressmen.

(5) As a preliminary to the 1941 convention, an inquiry was sent to all branches asking their opinions as to the extent of aid this government should give to those resisting the Axis powers, and encouraging study of the question.

(6) On May 8, 1941 (while the Stalin-Hitler pact was still in effect and communists were demanding, "Keep us out of war!") the American Association of University Women in its biennial convention voted:

(a) Recognition of a common cause with all nations resisting totalitarian aggression and the furnishing of whatever aid we can give to make this resistance effective.

(b) Development of a closer international collaboration to be begun now among the people resisting the Axis powers, and expanded as rapidly as possible into suitable international institutions.

(The Association was, as far as I know, the first of the large women's organizations to advocate such a step, and the convention delegates voted in full understanding that military aid might be involved.)

(7) Immediately after this convention action, Mrs. Brunauer quickly furnished AAUW branch and state international relations chairman with study materials on how to make U. S. aid effective, urged continuous study of the crisis in American foreign policy, and transmitted the convention request that members communicate their opinions to members of Congress.

In these activities—all in direct opposition to the "party line" of that time—Mrs. Brunauer was not a passive or reluctant participant; she was a leading spirit in promoting all of them. Indeed, some members criticized her for too openly favoring aid to Britain before this country entered the war.

Senator McCarthy is reported to have accused Mrs. Brunauer of being "instrumental in committing this organization [the American Association of University Women] to the support of various 'front' enterprises." As I have stated, Mrs. Brunauer had nothing to do with the particular enterprise which Senator McCarthy cited. But it is true that she was instrumental in carrying out other enterprises, outlined above—enterprises undertaken for the preservation of democracy and directly in opposition to the policies advocated by communists and communist sympathizers.

STATEMENT OF DUTIES OF HALDORE HANSON WITH DEPARTMENT OF STATE 1942 TO DATE

I. FEBRUARY 1942-DECEMBER 1944: DIVISIONAL ASSISTANT, DIVISION OF CULTURAL COOPERATION

This was principally a recruiting job, arising out of the program of wartime aid to China, and involving the recruiting of American civilian technicians for service in China, including engineers, agricultural experts, and health specialists.

II. DECEMBER 1944—SEPTEMBER 1947: EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT TO THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC AFFAIRS

I served as Executive Assistant under two Assistant Secretaries, covering a period of two and one-half years. I was responsible for their correspondence and visitors, and the management of their office.

During this period, I had the special assignment of drafting the legislation authorizing the United States Information and Educational Exchange Program. I worked with congressional committees for three years on this legislation which is now known as the Smith-Mundt Act (or Public Law 402, 80th Congress). Incidental to this legislative work, I represented the Department of State in hearings on Senator Mundt's resolution for an International Office of Education, the bill authorizing United States participation in UNESCO, and Senator Fulbright's legislation establishing scholarship funds from surplus property proceeds.

III. SEPTEMBER 1947—NOVEMBER 1948: ACTING CHIEF, FAR EAST BRANCH, PUBLIC AFFAIRS OVERSEAS PROGRAM STAFF

The Program Staff was an organization under the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs. The Far East Branch was responsible for recruiting the overseas staff for five countries in the Far East, and for advising the Media Divisions (such as the Divisions for Broadcasting, Press, Libraries) regarding public attitudes of the various peoples in the Far East. During this period I made an inspection trip to all of our information posts in the Far East.

IV. NOVEMBER 1948 TO DATE: EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL COOPERATION

This Committee has for ten years conducted a program of technical cooperation with Latin America, providing technical training and technical advisors to foreign governments in such fields as agriculture, health, education, and engineering. Recently, under authority of the Smith-Mundt Act, the Committee has expanded its activities on a small scale to Asia and Africa.

I spent much of the year 1949 in travelling away from Washington. During the months of January through March, I was on an inspection trip of our present technical activities in Latin America. During July and August I served as advisor to Assistant Secretary Thorp at the meeting of the United Nations Economic and Social Council in Geneva, Switzerland. This Council was drafting the United Nations resolution on technical assistance. During September and October, I was an advisor on the American delegation to the United States General Assembly which was reviewing the same resolution. In November, I was an advisor to the American delegation at the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization which met in Washington. Again my assignment concerned a resolution on technical assistance.

In December 1949, my office and staff here transferred from the jurisdiction of the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs to the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, in preparation for the Point IV Program. My staff is part of a new office in the Department entitled the "Interim Office of Technical Cooperation and Development." The duties of the Interim Office and the responsibilities of the other offices of the Department in relation to this Program are set forth in Departmental Announcement 41, a copy of which is attached.

TEXT OF HANSON LETTER TO SENATOR TYDINGS

What happens to a man's standing in his community when charged with pro-Communist leanings was told yesterday by Haldore Hanson, chief of a technical staff working in the State Department on the Point 4 program for aiding backward areas of the world.

Mr. Hanson wrote of his experience to Chairman Tydings of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee investigating charges by Senator McCarthy, Republican, of Wisconsin. Senator Tydings released the letter to reporters last night.

Mr. Hanson lives here at 1233 Thirty-seventh Street NW., during the winter and at his farm in Loudoun County, 12 miles south of Leesburg, the remainder of the year.

Text of his letter follows:

MARCH 24, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: On March 13 Senator McCarthy in sworn testimony before your subcommittee accused me of having pro-Communist proclivities and of being a man with a mission to Communize the world.

Immediately afterward, both at a press conference and in two radio broadcasts, I flatly denied these irresponsible charges. I pointed out that Senator McCarthy's charges were based solely on my public writings in China twelve years ago and that he had withheld from your committee and the American public the following facts which are public knowledge: First, that my assignment to cover the Chinese Communists was as a correspondent for the Associated Press in 1938; second, that the Chinese Communist armies were then under Chiang Kai-Shek's Supreme Command and were resisting the Japanese invasion; third, that the work of the Chinese guerrillas was one of the great news stories of 1938, and I wrote the story as I saw it. There is no mystery about any of my writings and I shall be glad to discuss them.

On the day that Senator McCarthy mentioned my name, I made known to my superiors in the Department of State that I desired the opportunity to appear before your committee and publicly defend myself against these charges and to answer any questions that members of the committee might have concerning me.

I knew that an examination of my record by your committee could quickly establish the complete falsity of Senator McCarthy's accusations. For the record, I submit that I was the subject of a favorable investigation by the Department of State at the time of my appointment in 1942. In 1947 as a result of irresponsible statements by Representative Busbey of Illinois, I was investigated by the Department with favorable results. After the inception of the President's loyalty Program I was processed under the government-wide investigation by the FBI which was completed in 1948. In these investigations my activities in China, as well as in the United States, were covered and my writings were reviewed. On the basis of this investigation I was again given a complete loyalty and security clearance by the Department of State.

In view of these circumstances I expected that I would be quickly vindicated by your committee, and that the slurs upon my devotion to the United States would be removed by your official action.

However, during the short time which has since elapsed, I am shocked to find that, as a direct result of Senator McCarthy's untrue accusations and insinuations, my family and I have been subjected to a series of humiliating incidents. Each of these incidents is probably trivial in itself, but shows what a chain reaction such irresponsible charges can have and, I fear, will continue to have.

For example, a man who feeds cattle on my farm in Virginia has been asked why he continues to work with "that Communist." One neighboring farmer began last week to refer to me as "that Russian spy." A man near my farm made public remarks which could reflect on my credit standing, an indispensable asset in the cattle business.

A petition calling my family undesirable and urging that we get out of the community was circulated in a village near my farm. Most people approached refused to sign it. Several of them were good enough to report the story to me. I understand a lawyer has now advised the drafter of the petition not to continue his activities.

If these incidents were the work of an occasional gossip, I would not dignify them in a letter to a Senate committee. But these cumulative actions occurred in a decent, educated, church-going community where I have owned a farm for five years, helped others, been helped by them, and enjoyed a reciprocal friendship and respect with many of my neighbors. I hold no resentment against those involved in these incidents, but I deeply resent the false accusations of a United States Senator, speaking irresponsibly and protected by senatorial immunity which can start such whisperings of suspicion and hate.

Therefore, I feel that it is of urgency for me to be granted a formal hearing before your committee at its earliest convenience, not only for the purpose of refuting Senator McCarthy's charges, but also in order that I may personally tell you and the other members of the committee what damaging effects such false accusations as Senator McCarthy makes can have upon an innocent American in his relationships with his neighbors and his community. I would like to do anything within my power to prevent others who are innocent from going through such experiences.

EXHIBIT No. 68

HEADQUARTERS OF THE GENERALISSIMO, CHINA,
Chungking, Szechuan, 12 January, 1942.

President FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am happy to have the opportunity afforded by Mr. Lattimore's return to America on a short visit, to send you a word of greeting, and to thank you for recommending him as my political advisor.

Mr. Lattimore has fully measured up to our expectations and has entirely justified your choice. You merrily detected the right man to select to act as a counsellor at a time when decisions which will affect the whole world for generations to come are in the balance. He has not only a wide knowledge of our language, history, and geography, he has in addition an invaluable understanding of our contemporary political affairs. His absolute integrity is manifest in everything that he does or says, and I never have the slightest doubt that any suggestion that he may make is based upon a genuine desire to assist China to the utmost of his power.

The various Missions that you have sent to China are doing valuable work. They, and the visits of various members of your Government, have greatly helped to bring America closer to us. Personal contacts necessarily tend to promote closer and more understanding relationship and friendship. You may be assured that all the American Missions are going about their duties with a zeal that promises permanently useful results.

Since the Japanese attacks on Pearl Harbor, the Philippines and Hongkong, the Pacific problem has become more acute. It is fortunate that under your wise and steadfast leadership, the future outcome of our concerted struggle against treachery and barbarity is assured. I assure you that I shall do my utmost to help bring about a world order based upon justice tempered with mercy.

Mr. Lattimore will personally convey to you my views on some important matters upon which I have not touched above. If there are messages you wish to send me, I should appreciate you entrusting them to Mr. Lattimore to be conveyed to me upon his return to China.

Madam Chiang joins me in sending best wishes to you and Mrs. Roosevelt

Yours sincerely,

CHIANG KAI-SHENG.

Minutes of the Third Meeting

Dr. Graf raised the question of disposition of specimens. The Chairman recommended that a paragraph be inserted in the minutes to the effect that type collections would be given to the Smithsonian Institution but that the privileges would be retained of keeping compared specimens. Dr. Graf moved—

"That the minutes of the third meeting be approved as amended."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Schairer and passed unanimously.

Minutes of the ARLAB meeting 8 February 1949

Dr. Irving stated that he did not wish to be included in the list of those attending this meeting, inasmuch as he did not arrive until the conclusion of the meeting. The Chairman suggested that an asterisk be placed after the name of the Scientific Director and a note be made to the effect that the Scientific Director did not arrive until the conclusion of the meeting.

There was a brief discussion of whether this meeting should be called the "Fourth" meeting of the ARLAB, as indicated in the minutes. Dr. Schairer said that the meeting was merely a discussion on policy and planning of the ARLAB. Dr. Graf moved—

"That a paragraph be inserted in the minutes to the effect that no formal action was taken by the Board at this meeting and that it consisted merely of a discussion by the Board members, consequently it was not to be called the 'Fourth' meeting."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Schairer and passed unanimously.

Report of the Executive Secretary

This report consisted of a number of items which the Executive Secretary wished to bring to the attention of the Board for discussion and suggestion.

(1) Contractor's Manual: a draft of this manual was made and submitted to the Board with the agenda for final consideration and comment.

(2) Internal Administration of ARL Manual: A draft of this was submitted to the Board for final consideration and comment.

(3) Report of Action based on recommendations that ONR seek out and attempt to stimulate a university of proper stature and graduate interest which would find itself in a position to support the laboratory on an operational basis.

In February at the invitation of Dr. Bronk, President of The Johns Hopkins University, a meeting was held with Dr. Shelesnyak, Dr. Irving, Dr. Prof. Cloos, Carter, Lattimore, Lee, Wilber, President Emeritus Bowman and others. Several weeks later the University submitted to ONR a proposal for the operation of the laboratory. This was included in the agenda submitted to the Board.

(4) Statement to the effect that a renewal of the contract with the Smithsonian Institution for the ARLAB is being processed and will be effected on the first of July, the beginning of the fiscal year.

(5) Item 5 consisted of a proposal which the Executive Secretary wished to submit to the Board. In view of the unique characteristics of medical research and need for active medical research programs in the Arctic, and because of the integrated activities with the planned Arctic Health program at College, Alaska, the U. S. Public Health Service and Territorial Health interests, the Secretary wished the Board to consider establishing a medical advisory group.

(6) Policy and program on library facilities, promotion of interests among the other libraries and universities for forwarding material to the ARL in the form of an association. It was the opinion of the Executive Secretary that such an association would be in a better position to build up the ARL library than individuals.

(7) Request from the Executive Secretary for a statement of policy on publications of research reports carried out at ARL, bulletins of activities and other types of publications.

(8) Request by Executive Secretary for statement on planning an educational program for the laboratory relative to the matter of exhibits (periodic and program exhibits) and local publications.

The Chairman stated that items (1) and (2) would be designated to a working group to consider and to report at the Thursday session of the meeting. The group designated consisted of Dr. John Graf, Chairman, Prof. G. E. MacGinitie, Dr. Laurence Irving, Mrs. Yvonne Reamy.

Commodore Greenman informed the appointed committee that the office of the Director of Naval Petroleum Reserves and the Officer in Charge of Construction have reviewed these two items insofar as administrative procedure is concerned and that the committee need not consider that factor.

Dr. Shelesnyak said that the proposal for operation of the ARL as submitted by Johns Hopkins was under negotiation. It would have to be renewed on a fiscal year basis.

The Chairman stated that this was the first time there had been a contract proposed specifically for operating the laboratory.

Dr. Shelesnyak said that the laboratory was initiated under the leadership of Dr. Irving, from Swarthmore College. Its operation and existence would be completely impossible without Pet. 4, as all activities which are called "logistics support" are provided by Pet. 4. Money for this support is made available from ONR to the Bureau of Yards and Docks. Certain activities of the laboratory of an operations and "housekeeping" nature (clerical work, plant management, shop facilities, etc.) were of a research nature and the Arctic Contractors which provides these general services for Pet. 4, felt this type of activity was not within their realm and did not wish to carry it. In August of last year, additional funds were made available to the Swarthmore contract for operational support. However, no specific additions were outlined in the contract.

Dr. Irving indicated interest in the terms under which Johns Hopkins wishes to undertake direction of the laboratory. He asked the Chairman for additional time in which to study the proposal before discussion. The Chairman suggested that this proposal be postponed until a later session of the meeting.

Regarding renewal of the contract with the Smithsonian Institution, Dr. Shelesnyak stated that it is the policy of ONR to have advisory panels composed of specialists in those particular fields. These panels are appointed to advise the CNR regarding research and policy in these fields. This Board is an advisory panel to advise the CNR regarding operation, policy and planning of the ARL. The contract for the Board is renewed on an annual basis at the beginning of the fiscal year. No action on this is required by the Board.

In relation to the medical advisory group suggested by Dr. Shelesnyak, the Board was asked its opinion of such a group. He explained the function of advisory panels. This particular panel would be composed of specialists in Medicine who would report through the Board but would not necessarily be members of the Board. He felt that perhaps the Chairman of such a group could be a member of the ARLAB.

Dr. Killian explained the types of panels instituted by ONR. He did not feel that paid consultants were necessarily the best consultants. Dr. Graf felt that the Board might be limited to non-paid consultants. There followed a discussion as to what type of panel constituted the best and most desirable type.

Dr. Washburn asked if a medical advisory group were any more necessary than any other group and if such problems could not be handled when they arose.

Dr. Shelesnyak replied that there is perhaps less information and less organized activity relative to medical geography in the Arctic than any other field. At the same time there are whole series of groups with responsibilities for health and medical research in the Arctic. In view of the fact that one of the functions of the Board is in nurturing research in the Arctic, he believed the advice could be gotten by having one member of the Board who would seek such advice from colleagues but that this type of arrangement would not have the effect that the appointment of a regular group would have.

The Chairman stated that if the need arose in any of the other disciplines the establishment of such groups would not be out of line.

Dr. Lattimore said that one point worth considering is that if Johns Hopkins takes over the operation of the ARL, it would be wise to avoid any appearance of monopoly on their part and that proposing a group to consider medical problems would be better than appointing or designating one person.

Dr. Graf said that the Navy had organized the laboratory ostensibly for defense and from that point of view, medical research assumes an important position.

The Chairman said that there had been some emphasis in some fields and not others simply because there was no adequate representation in those fields, but he did not favor any special emphasis given to any discipline beyond what was appropriate.

Mr. Rowley asked if the proposed medical group was supposed to advise on all medical problems or just those affecting ARL?

Dr. Shelesnyak replied that it was primarily concerned with medical research in the Arctic as focused around the activity of the ARL. He felt the NPR camp represented a highly industrialized scene where the impact of a high degree of technology on a native population exists. Not too far away there are native groups not under this impact and therefore he felt it rather unique and gives somewhat of an accent to the problem.

After considerable discussion Dr. Graf moved—

"That a member of the ARLAB be designated to consider problems of medical research appropriate to the ARL."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Schairer and passed unanimously.

A committee to consider library facilities of the ARL was appointed by the Chairman. This committee was for the duration of the meeting only and was instructed to report at a later session. Members were Dr. Killian, Chairman, Dr. Schairer, Dr. Washburn.

In regard to the educational program, Dr. Field stated that (a) he was particularly interested in seminars as he felt under such isolated conditions the need was more acute. He felt they gave opportunity for criticism of work and for suggestions. (b) Talks on less technical levels for the entire Arctic Contractor's camp were also desirable. Both types of discussions were needed.

Dr. Munk said he had noticed a strong tendency of people working on research problems not to bother about what has happened in the past. He suggested any educational program should include an attempt to familiarize people with past work. Secondly, he felt the library should purchase accounts of classic expeditions for reference as they contained much of value to current researchers.

Dr. Irving believed there was the question of just how far the library should go in expansion. The task of building up a true research library would have to be near university magnitude. He felt it might be more expedient to work toward a university library at Fairbanks to which the researchers could turn, or to work toward enlarging the University of Alaska library. He did not believe the educational program harmonized with field research.

Dr. Shelesnyak said the laboratory should have every aspect of continuity and as much of its own substance as possible in order to acquire a group of people who will work in the field.

The Chairman appointed a group to consider an education program for the laboratory, as follows: Prof. MacGinitie, chairman, Dr. Carter, Dr. Field.

The Board recessed at 10:30 p. m.

SECOND SESSION

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman at 7:15 p. m., May 18. This portion of the agenda was designated to acquaint the Board members and consultants who were not acquainted with the organizational background in Arctic Alaska with that background. Attendant at this session were employees of the Arctic Contractors and local residents of Barrow Village.

Dr. Shelesnyak explained the organization of the Office of Naval Research and its interrelationships with the Arctic Research Laboratory. He explained the situation as one where the laboratory is far removed from the campus and from ONR. ONR is engaged in basic research although not necessarily immediately pertinent to the Navy. Illustrative remarks were accompanied by an organizational chart as the explanation progressed.

Commodore Greenman gave the administrative and organizational background of Pet. 4 and how it is integrated with other branches of the Navy. He stated that the Secretary of the Navy has supervision of all operations of Naval Petroleum Reserves. The Secretary established an operating committee to advise NPR. NPR serves only as an administrative office as the Bureau of Yards and Docks is the actual directing agency. The actual project manager is a group with whom the Bureau of Yards and Docks has a contract to carry on the work.

Dr. Reed called attention to the fact that Commodore Greenman has done a great deal to aid in the development of programs of other organizations such as the Geological Survey, ARL, Army, Air Forces, and a number of others.

The Scientific Director of the ARL reported on the scientific and general progress of the laboratory since the previous meeting. He reported that, after a year's use, the design and construction have proved satisfactory and well suited to its purposes. The local operating system of the laboratory was given credit for the effective work of the staff. A more complete report was reserved for a later session of the meeting.

THIRD SESSION

The third session of the meeting convened at 4:15 p. m. on 19 May 1949. Dr. Graf moved—

"That the Chairman of the Board prepare a letter of the Secretary of the Navy telling of the trip and giving credit to such people as desired."

Vote: Dr. Schairer seconded the motion and it pass unanimously. Dr. Graf further moved—

"That the Chairman of the Board send a letter to personnel at various points who were instrumental in making the trip a success."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Schairer and passed unanimously.

The Scientific Director gave the second half of his report to the ARLAB. He felt that the work done by the Naval Ordnance Laboratory over the course of a year revealed that the periods assigned researchers for work have been too brief to be entirely effective, and recommended that more economical and purposive procedures be evolved if the work is to lead to justifiable research.

He felt that the practice of urging researchers to spend more time at Point Barrow has discouraged them from viewing arctic research as part of a longer career.

He was of the opinion that the examination of the research programs shows the necessity for a senior scientist experienced in field and arctic research to attend to the development of arctic research programs.

In regard to the building program, he stated to the Board that construction for married people was postponed until the winter of 1949. Dr. Shelesnyak advised the Board that materials have been ordered and all arrangements completed and construction would be initiated in the summer of 1949 and completed before winter 1949.

Dr. Irving stated that he did not think direction of research, critical stimulation of interest in arctic research and routine direction of the laboratory were too much for one man, although they could better be performed in a scheme of rotation among a group of investigators within a university. He felt difficulties resulted from incomplete information as to funds, construction, and research projects.

He expressed dissatisfaction with the routine flow of information and stated that in his opinion this deficiency has greatly retarded preparations for research.

Improvement, he added, appears to depend upon better use of the experience of the operational staff of the laboratory and more appreciative attention to their proposals.

Regardless of such difficulties, he stated that he believed the operating system of the laboratory is well established. For the support of the ONR and for the advice of the Board he expressed sincere appreciation on behalf of his colleagues and himself.

Dr. Schairer moved—

"That the report of the Scientific Director be received by the Board and filed."

Vote: Dr. Graf seconded the motion and it passed unanimously.

A discussion followed on the Johns Hopkins proposal for operation of the laboratory. The proposal contained the position of administrative assistant.

Dr. Shelesnyak explained that this person would be employed by the home base to expedite travel, administrative matters, etc. He added that the need for this type of position had been pointed out by the SDARL and inasmuch as ONR is now doing part of the work that should be handled by such a person, his employment was felt necessary.

Both Johns Hopkins and ONR feel that the proposed project is in one sense a research project. It is research in how to maintain a distant laboratory in cooperation between a university and government. The Board has continued to point out the need for a graduate school for a home base.

Dr. Schairer said that if a stateside base existed, there would be a need for a responsible person to accomplish a successful relation between the laboratory and ONR.

Dr. Graf said that if Johns Hopkins was willing to take on the contract, the Board should be willing to approve the university conditions, including whatever personnel they considered necessary.

Dr. Washburn said that as a consultant he was in favor of having a university assume administration and specifically, the Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. Field stated that he would like to comment on the general policy of having a university contract. He felt one of the greatest needs was to have a university base where researchers can go with data and get adequate criticism and have adequate facilities for research. He thought Johns Hopkins very well adapted for this type of program.

After considerable discussion it was moved by Dr. Schairer:

"That the ARLAB advise the CNR that the Board approves the proposal of Johns Hopkins University and recommends its acceptance."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Munk and passed unanimously.

The Board recessed for dinner at 6:20 p. m.

FOURTH SESSION

The Board reconvened at 7:30 with the Chairman calling for committee reports from the Board as assigned in previous sessions.

Committee on Oceanography.—(1) The committee supported one phase in the Archeological and Dendrochronological Research proposal, that dealing with study of ocean currents from driftwood.

(2) The oceanographic program of the Hydrographic Office was reviewed and the committee was in accord with the previously expressed view of the Scientific Director that short periods of research were expensive and relatively unproductive. Whereas the committee considers present oceanographic research problems of general interest, especially the collection of aerial photographs taken on Pitarnigan of arctic ice conditions, the committee thinks the time has come to make definite recommendations of long range goals.

There are essentially two oceanographic programs which might be carried out from the ARL:

(a) Support of biological work at ARL.

(2) The oceanography of the Arctic basin.

It is regrettable that present oceanographic work has largely been confined to studies of the shelf, when so little is known about the Arctic Ocean. The fundamental oceanographic work in little known regions has been to measure the distribution of temperature and salinity with depth, and from it to compute circulation. The measurement of temperature and salinity from ice drifts has the disadvantage of leading to oceanographic section parallel to the currents, whereas the most meaningful sections are perpendicular to currents. To obtain controlled sections perpendicular to currents one might, in winter, be able to establish airborne oceanograph sections covering perhaps the region from Barrow to the Pole. This is largely a problem of logistics and furthermore one that is not peculiar to oceanographers, but will have to be considered for any type of studies in the Arctic Basin. The committee recommended that this Board energetically pursue this problem on the appropriate level, and to help designate the most suitable agency for organizing an airborne Arctic expedition.

The oceanographers should consider drawing up rather definite plans for such an expedition, and to list the instruments and the modifications necessary, that would be required. Such a program might include a limited amount of meteorological observations, plankton collections, and some bottom samples. The committee suggests that with concerted effort it might be possible to occupy an experimental station in the winter of 1950.

Dr. Schairer moved—

"That the report as outlined should be submitted to the CNR and that the Board accept and concur with the report of the committee."

Vote: Seconded by Dr. Graf and passed unanimously.

Committee on Medical Research.—Dr. Field as Chairman recommended that (1) the work on lipid metabolism by Dr. Wilber be continued. (2) The work of Dr. Wennesland and party on thermal adaption on tissue should be approved. (3) In regard to the proposal submitted by Dr. Levine, the committee felt it would properly involve a large number of persons for a good many years. The program properly should take about ten years. The proposal was not focused enough for the Board to consider it and the committee suggested that Dr. Levine be requested to confine activities to one field where results could more efficiently be achieved.

Dr. Schairer moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the committee."

Vote: Dr. Graf seconded and the motion passed unanimously.

Committee on Biology.—Dr. Graf as chairman said the committee felt that the projects submitted by Prof. MacGinitie and Mr. Spetzman were very meritorious and although no request for continuation of the Swarthmore program had been submitted by Dr. Irving, he felt it should be continued.

The Biological Survey of Anaktuvik Pass was recommended for acceptance. The committee felt that in all surveys there should be specified the simple collection of forms. Such things as behavior, distribution, ecology, etc., should be considered. This is useful to other workers in other projects and assures publication within reasonable time limits. This additional information will aid in building the reputation of the laboratory.

The Ecological Studies of Marine Fauna proposal, with Prof. MacGinitie as principal investigator, was considered excellent. The committee felt in connection with this it might be important to encourage projects in limnology. The work might have very important applied aspects. The committee said that projects where additional research will result in completion of well-run investigations should be continued, and secondly that the Board should give study to the possibility of working out two and three year projects. This would have a very great effect on the planning of a project and would have the added advantage of assigning funds in one year, removing that project from future competition for funds.

Dr. Galler added that the committee recommends that the attention be invited of inland water specialists to determine some specific problems unique in Arctic environments.

Dr. Shelesnyak moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the Committee on Biology."

Vote: Seconded by Dr. Schairer and passed unanimously.

Committee on Geophysics and Geology.—Dr. Kilian reported for the committee, giving a review and evaluation of the work in progress, and made recommendations on proposals as follows:

(a) Measurement and Study of Arctic Phenomena: This work divided itself into two parts (1) a study of infra-red phenomenon in the Arctic and (2) a study of chemical and physical properties of sea ice. The first has been exploratory to date. The second could be made more valuable by the addition of petrographic studies to reveal past history of the ice. In regard to Permafrost studies, the work has just begun and good progress has been made by Dr. MacCarthy in familiarizing himself with the area. This program will be enlarged in the fall when additional investigators will attempt to study the nature and distribution of permafrost. The committee believed that strong support should be given to this program.

(b) Paleontological Studies: The committee recommended that this project be made part of the planned program of ARL.

(c) Determination of Beach Conditions Relating to Photo-Analysis and Trafficability Studies in the American Arctic: The program called for a widely varied series of undertakings which the committee did not feel such a small group could undertake in the three to four weeks proposed. They recommended that no action be taken by ONR until a clearer and more definitive proposal was submitted. The committee recommended that the work be encouraged in the study of geomorphic influence by the Arctic.

Dr. Munk moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the Committee on Geophysics and Geology."

Vote: Motion seconded by Dr. Graf and passed unanimously.

Committee on Anthropology and Social Sciences.—Dr. Lattimore reported on the following projects for the committee:

(a) Archeological and Dendrochronological Research: The committee felt this proposal was thoroughly justified and was the type of project that should be used as a pilot project. Its acceptance was recommended.

(b) Regional Geography and Climatic Research: This proposal was considered inadequate and it was noted by the committee that a rather negative report had been submitted by the Branch Office. The committee concurs with this report.

(c) Geographic Research Study of Point Barrow Area: There was no indication of the stature of the researcher and the committee felt such a project should be undertaken by a more mature investigator with an adequate geographic background. The committee stated that in not encouraging this particular proposal it did not wish to discourage the idea of undertaking both studies of adaptation and social impact of the Eskimos at Barrow who are affected by the NPR project.

(d) Medical and Biological Study of the Eskimo: This committee concurred with previously expressed opinions of the Medical Committee that this project was too ambitious for the personnel proposed.

The committee raised the question as to whether the Board should consider the fact that social sciences are thus far on a lower level than natural or physical sciences. From the point of view of a number of interests, it is not too early to make an attempt to raise the social sciences somewhere nearer the level of the natural and physical sciences.

The committee suggested that the Board recommend appointment of a committee with power to decide what should be classified as fundamental research in the social sciences appropriate to the Arctic environment as a whole and appropriate to research conditions available at the ARL and not only to set up standards but to indicate priorities. Social sciences should not neglect economics as the committee feels it is within the proper framework of social sciences. The committee also felt that this proposed committee should include Canadian representatives.

Dr. Schairer moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the Committee on Anthropology and Social Sciences."

Vote: Seconded by Dr. Irving and passed unanimously.

Committee to Consider Manuals for Contractors and Internal Administration.—Dr. Graf reported the committee was well satisfied with these proposed manuals and agreement was also expressed by Dr. Irving. Prof. MacGinitie also agreed, adding that cooperation would be needed for their effective administration.

Dr. Schairer moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the Committee."

Vote: Seconded by Dr. Lattimore and passed unanimously.

Committee on Library and Publications.—Dr. Killian reported that the committee assumed that the primary functions of a research library at ARL is to assist the research workers of a frontier field establishment to the fullest possible extent. Among means by which this may be accomplished are—

(1) Act as repository of general scientific handbooks, guide books, basic texts, and references.

(2) Through cooperation of other libraries to arrange for the long and short term loan of books and publications.

(3) Subscriptions to a limited number of technical journals so that they can be made immediately available.

(4) In cases where loan is not practicable, to secure photostats or reprints.

(5) To provide other visual presentation material, including moving pictures, slides and micro-film.

The library problem should be continually studied. This can be done by a small staff library committee to advise the SDARL. This committee should be appointed by the SDARL and report to the ARLAB annually. A recommended budget of $2,000 yearly was considered necessary by the committee. Close coordination of the library with the ONR library in Washington, which will act as representative for the ARL library, was recommended.

In regard to publications the Board was informed that there were no new publications from ARL at this time. The committee felt that mailing lists should be established as well as exchange lists. Monographs may be indicated later. Dr. Killian reported that Dr. Washburn had indicated that a section of the publication Arctic would be reserved for news notes from the ARL.

Dr. Lattimore moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the committee."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Graf and passed unanimously.

Committee to consider Education Program.—Dr. Field reporting for the committee said it recommended a system of scheduled and professional seminars be set up at ARL, primarily for the common benefit of the staff. These seminars should afford opportunity for discussion of work in progress or in contemplation. All interested, competent persons in the area should be invited to attend.

The committee also recommended a series of lectures on a less technical level designed for the benefit of the intellectual life of the community. Navy and Arctic Contractor personnel should be cordially invited to attend these lectures and to participate in the program.

Dr. MacGinitie added that a program should be formulated for the ensuing year and should be flexible enough to allow for visitors to be included.

Dr. Lattimore moved—

"That the Board accept and concur with the report of the committee."

Vote: The motion was seconded by Dr. Irving and passed unanimously.

Following the report of committee chairmen, The Chairman announced that Dr. G. E. MacGinitie would take over as Scientific Director of the ARL upon the expiration of Dr. Irving's appointment on 30 June 1949.

The Chairman stated that he had been requested to raise the question of housing and construction. There have been complaints about the adequacy of the present BOQ, principally because of lack of privacy.

Members of the Board expressed the opinion that scientific workers have a real need for privacy in their quarters, but Dr. Shelesnyak pointed out that the facilities of Barrow are those of an advanced exploratory camp and not a community. He stated that BuDocks and DNPR feel it would be desirable to establish good living quarters but there is a temporary aspect to the entire program of NPR. There are legal as well as financial limitations on the amount of housing that may be constructed. The cordial relation of the ARL and Arctic Contractors must be maintained. The long range position is jeopardized by making special demands in housing. Housing occupied by ARL personnel is identical with that of employees of Arctic Contractors in comparable positions.

A request for special housing was made by Dr. Irving through channels and was forwarded without approval at each endorsement. An attempt is being made to recruit more married couples. Two additional MOQs are to be constructed. A shop is to connect Buildings #250 and #251.

The Chairman said that as long as the matter of housing is a subject of discussion among the working personnel, it is up to the Board to note the fact and to move toward recommending remedial measures for the situation. It is incumbent upon the Board to push the need for improved quarters just as far as it is expedient.

Dr. Graf felt that trying to make a special elite corps of the researchers would result eventually in a loss to the laboratory.

Dr. Irving said that he wished to emphasize there was no suggestion that there has been any discrimination against the laboratory personnel in the matter of quarters. He added when the proposals for better quarters were returned marked with disapproval, Dr. Shelesnyak wrote to the Chief of Naval Research requesting consideration. The CNR answered that the matter should be referred to the Board.

The Chairman said the Board would write to the CNR advising him of the opinion of the Board.

Dr. Shelesnyak made a statement to the Board regarding the role of ONR in arctic research. He said that from the earliest days of ONR it has been the conviction of many in that office that the only method by which the vitality of a government agency engaged in research administration by contractual relations with universities may be maintained is for that organization to sustain a continuing influx of new professional personnel with an opportunity for those associated with the ONR to return to academic centers. In Navy parlance, we speak of the need for "sea duty" in order to keep able officers abreast of developments and better quality personnel. To this end ONR has been attempting to induce qualified scientists to join the staff of ONR on a leave-from-university basis and afford opportunity for others at ONR to re-associate themselves with universities and laboratories outside of the government.

This original conviction has with time become increasingly firm and within the past several months planning has been under way for the association of Dr. John Field with ONR in the billet now occupied by Dr. Shelesnyak. Dr. Shelesnyak in turn is to be associated with a nongovernmental group. The Board of governors of the Arctic Institute of North America feels it propitious to establish a Washington-Baltimore office to be primarily concerned with arctic research. The office will be housed on the campus of Johns Hopkins University and will be associated with that university. Dr. Shelesnyak has been invited to be Director of that office and is planning to join the group on or about 1 September 1949.

Dr. Shelesnyak said that he felt the change in geographic location would be a step toward the achievement of the goal of stimulating nurturing and encouraging arctic research. The furtherance of this program demands the cultivation of a university center with strong academic and professional guidance. Such a center must, of course, work closely and constantly with the federal agencies interested in research in the north regions. Without such close collaboration it is certain that neither the university center nor the federal agencies can achieve fullest effectiveness. Dr. Shelesnyak added that it was his hope and definite intention to continue in as close a relationship as possible with the research and activity of ARL and other research in the arctic, and that he would be most unhappy if continuing demands were not made on his time and energy for such counsel as he might be able to give in reference to the ARL at Barrow specifically, and arctic problems of the Navy in general.

Dr. Washburn stated that he would like to express the continuing interest of the Arctic Institute of North America in the Arctic Research Laboratory.

Mr. Rowley expressed his appreciation at being invited to the meeting and added that he had learned quite a lot as a result of the trip.

Prof. Lattimore said that Johns Hopkins University feels very much that it hopes to be in the fore-front of those institutions which have been stimulated by the Office of Naval Research and that if the contract between the university and that office is activated, the university will be on its toes because of what has been said at the meeting, because of the stimulus of Dr. Irving's leadership at ARL, and because of the AINA establishing its Baltimore-Washington quarters with the university.

The meeting adjourned at 11:50 p. m.

EXHIBIT No. 70

AN ANALYSIS OF MR. ALFRED E. KOHLBERG'S CHARGES AGAINST THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS (American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, 1 East 54th Street, New York

22, N. Y.)

FOREWORD

The following pages contain a somewhat detailed analysis, made early in 1945, of an 88-page photostatic document prepared and widely circulated by Alfred Kohlberg in November 1944 which purports to show that the publications of the American and Pacific Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations follow the Communist Party "line." In a court action brought by Mr. Kohlberg to compel the American Council to make available to him the names and addresses of its members, so that he might circulate this and other documents, he further charged the staff writers of the IPR with being "unpatriotic, biased, uninformed, and incompetent."

While a superficial examination of Mr. Kohlberg's document reveals it to be unscholarly and unscientific in its approach, the Executive Committee of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations felt that a careful analysis of his charges should be prepared out of justice to the members and friends who might be disturbed by an attack on the IPR's integrity. Although this was prepared in February 1945, it was not widely circulated at the time because (a) it was a long document and might unduly burden the Trustees and members at the expense of more important matters on the IPR program agenda and (b) the officers of the Council did not desire at that time to broadcast voluminous documents about Mr. Kohlberg and incur the heavy expense involved.

Inasmuch as Mr. Kohlberg has thus far felt unable to accept any of the IPR's efforts to meet his wishes but apparently is determined to continue court action, it has seemed wise to send this lengthy analysis to the Board and to those members who wish it so that they might have the background in the event of Court action leading to wholesome and unwholesome press publicity.

The manner in which materials have been selected from IPR publications to buttress these accusations indicates little understanding of the aims and methods of scholarship as exemplified by the publications program of the IPR. The Institute, as an international, nonprofit, educational organization, does not express opinions on public affairs; and it has consistently adhered to "the principles of complete freedom of scientific inquiry, broad hospitality to all points of view but subservience to none." The analysis in the following pages shows that principles of objectivity and fairness in the presentation of controversial materials have been faithfully observed. The alleged parallel between statements in IPR publications and the Communist "line" breaks down completely when the IPR publications of each period are viewed as a whole. While it is natural that over a period of years a critic should be able to find selections which thoroughly parallel Communist views on some issues, there is also much material that is highly critical of the Communist position. The same could be said of reputable newspapers like the New York Times or the Christian Science Monitor.

The small proportion of IPR publications which Mr. Kohlberg finds suitable for quotation is perhaps the best indication of the weakness of his case. His charges are based on selections from 33 articles and book reviews, 3 pamphlets, and one book, covering a seven-year period in which the organization published 1,961 articles and book reviews and 384 books and pamphlets. Fragmentary excerpt from these articles and pamphlets are quoted in the 88-page document on which he has based his court case. These appear out of context and without explanation. In the following pages these same excerpts are shown in context and, where, as in some cases, they appeared as part of a symposium in which opposing viewpoints were presented, that fact is set forth. Attention is also called to many articles in IPR publications and to other quotations from the very articles cited by Mr. Kohlberg, which express views directly opposite to those which he seeks to attribute to the Institute. The fact is also brought out that several of the publications criticized by Mr. Kohlberg, notably Wartime China, were highly praised by Government officials and extensively used in Army and Navy orientation courses. As a matter of fact, so useful were the publications of the Institute to the war effort that the American Council was awarded the Navy E in 1945.

Further evidence of the reckless nature of Mr. Kohlberg's charges is found in his attempt to impugn the integrity, competence, and patriotism of the IPR staff writers. In his petition for court action against the IPR he declares that many IPR staff writers had an extensive background of Communist activity and that their articles presented untrue, false, and misleading facts. No evidence is presented to support the charge of Communist activity because none exists.

Further proof of the irresponsibility of this charge is shown by the fact that Mr. Kohlberg obviously has never taken the trouble to find out who the staff members of the American Council are. Of a total of 25 authors and contributors to IPR publications cited in his document, the following pages show that 13 had never been on the staff of the IPR and only four were on the staff at the time of his charges. Of these, only one was employed by the American Council. Among the distinguished authors not on the staff of the IPR whose writings were cited as incompetent or subversive by Mr. Kohlberg were: Nathan M. Becker, formerly professor of economics at a midwestern university; Brig. Gen. Evans Carlson, leader of the famous Carlson's Raiders; Tyler Dennett, former president of Williams College; Foster Rhea Dulles, professor at Ohio State University; Edgar Snow, associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post; Owen Lattimore, formerly political adviser to Chiang Kai-shek, Deputy Director for the Far East, Office of War Information, and Director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations of Johns Hopkins University; and George E. Taylor, head of the Far East Department of the University of Washington who, during the war, was Deputy Director for the Far East, Office of War Information, and until recently was connected with the State Department.

Of the four persons on the IPR staff whose work was criticized by Mr. Kohlberg, two—T. A. Bisson of the International Secretariat and Miriam Farley of the American Council staff—now hold responsible positions on General MacArthur's staff.

Another interesting sidelight on Mr. Kohlberg's criticism of the handling of China by Pacific Affairs in the period before Pearl Harbor may be found in the fact that the magazine was edited at that time by Owen Lattimore, noted Far Eastern expert. If Mr. Lattimore was as unfair to China as alleged by Mr. Kohlberg, he scarcely would have been called directly from this post to become confidential adviser of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek upon the recommendation of the President of the United States. As a matter of fact, Mr. Lattimore's appointment was hailed by T. V. Soong, the present Premier of China, as "a major token of increasing understanding between China and the United States."

Further evidence of the general competence of the Institute in handling controversial issues with respect to China is demonstrated by the harmonious cooperation between the China Council of the IPR and the Pacific and American Councils. The Chinese delegation to the Hot Springs Conference of the IPR in January 1945 contained many of the country's leading educators and political figures, and a notable Chinese delegation headed by former Ambassador Hu Shih cooperated with the Americans on the most friendly terms in the subsequent meeting of the Pacific Council at Atlantic City later that year.

The first twenty pages of the analysis which follows document in detail these and other facts which demonstrate the irresponsibility and inaccuracy of Mr. Kohlberg's charges.

The rest is devoted to a detailed review of the publications from which portions are quoted out of context in his 88-page document. In an effort to reconcile the fact that IPR materials include various points of view, particularly on controversial issues, he adopts the strange device of dividing the years from 1937 to 1944 into four periods during which he endeavors to prove that Institute publications indulged in "severe criticism of the Chinese Government, alternating with praise, closely following the alterations of the Soviet Union's foreign policy and that of the Communist press."

Needless to say, this claim collapses under careful scrutiny as shown from pages 21-52, which follow. Even a hasty review of the books and magazine articles published by the IPR, if read in toto and not out of context, reveals the absurd inaccuracy of such a charge.

In selecting materials for publication, the organization is guided by various considerations, including the scholarly merit of the material, the importance of the subject, and its public interest. So far as is humanly possible, it endeavors to assure the accuracy of all facts appearing in its publications. Most of its books and pamphlets are sent out in manuscript form to a number of competent critics. It does not attempt to impose censorship on opinions, neither does it solicit manuscripts exclusively from persons of a single viewpoint. On the contrary, believing that truth is arrived at only in an atmosphere of free discussion, it aims to present information reflecting different and often conflicting opinions.

It is hoped that anyone who is inclined to give credence to Mr. Kohlberg's accusations will take the time to study the following pages and read the recent biennial report of the American Council, Windows on the Pacific, before passing final judgment on his charges.

SEPTEMBER 1946.

A. INTRODUCTION

On February 13, 1945, Alfred Kohlberg, Inc., through its president, Alfred E. Kohlberg, submitted a petition before the Supreme Court of New York County, requesting a judgment (1) enjoining the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations from holding its regular annual membership meeting scheduled for February 29, 1945, and (2) compelling it to make available to Alfred Kohlberg, Inc., the names and addresses of its members.¹

The petitioner based his reasons for this demand on the charge that many of the publications of the Institute of Pacific Relations were—prepared by staff writers employed by the American Council, which writers had an extensive background of Communist activity, and which staff writers in said articles presented inaccurate, untrue, false, and misleading facts, opinions, and conclusions which, in effect, constituted effective Communist propaganda and which, being published and circulated during the course of the war between the United States of America and the Government of Japan, has given aid and comfort to the enemy by tending to create dissension and disunity among the Chinese people and between the Chinese Nation and the United States Government who are allied in the war effort against Japan."

The petitioner further charged the staff writers of the American and Pacific Councils of the Institute with being "unpatriotic, biased, uninformed, and incompetent."

As evidence for this thesis, the petitioner cited an 88-page document, circulated on November 9, 1944, by its president, Alfred Kohlberg. Of this document, 34 pages list excerpts from Institute publications, taken out of context, and 41 pages of it are devoted to quotations from Communist and left-wing publications, which, it is alleged "follow the same line."

Instead of sending this document to the Secretary or officers of the American Council, it was mailed, together with an accompanying letter, to the trustees and certain large contributors of the American Council and to four or five score of other people whose names Mr. Kohlberg has declined to divulge. Although the accompanying letter was addressed to Mr. E. C. Carter, the Secretary-General of the Institute, it and the document were mailed to the foregoing without prior notice to, or consultation with, Mr. Carter.

After an exhaustive study of the articles cited in this document, and of many other books, pamphlets, and articles published by the Institute during the seven-year period in question, the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the American Council of the Institute believes that Mr. Kohlberg's charges are invalid. Here are a few statements from other individuals and their opinion of the work of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

STATEMENTS ABOUT THE WORK AND PROGRAM OF THE IPR

SUMNER WELLES—FOOTBOY Under Secretary of State:

"* * * I am glad to say that in the opinion of the officers of the Department of State who are especially familiar with the activities of the Institute of Pacific Relations, the publications of this Institute have been of interest and value. The Institute has been making a substantial contribution to the development of an informed public opinion."

HERMAN BEUKEMA—COLONEL, U. S. A., The United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.:

"* * * I am convinced that no other civilian research organization in the country presents as wide, thorough, and up-to-date coverage of the Far Eastern field as that of the Institute of Pacific Relations."

EUGENE STALEY—School of Advanced International Studies, Washington, D. C.:

"The American Council of the IPR has made the most important contribution of any organization to the knowledge and understanding in this country of Far Eastern affairs. I can testify from personal experience to the great value of its background publications to Government Agencies when they were suddenly faced with the war emergency against Japan, and of their present value to agencies planning Relief."

RAYMOND SWING—Radio Commentator, Washington, D. C.:

"The research work of the IPR has for years been acknowledged as an invaluable source of information by men in and out of our Government and other Governments on the Far East; and an attack upon it should be inconceivable. The charges you mention against the IPR (i. e., by Alfred E. Kohlberg) would in effect indict official American policy to aid in the promotion of unified China. It is so irrational as to be incredible and ludicrous."

JAMES L. McCONAUGHY—President, United China Relief:

"I have examined Mr. Kohlberg's charges against the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, and do not believe they are valid. On my recent trip to China, I found no evidence of any feeling that the American Council was pro-Japanese or pro-Communist. I believe the publications are scholarly and objective. I believe Mr. Kohlberg's efforts, if successful, will harm American friendship for China, and American efforts for international peace."

EDWARD R. EMBREE—President, Julius Rosenwald Fund, Chicago, Illinois:

"The charges are absurd and sound as if they were motivated by a desire to cause dissension among the United Nations. The Institute is devoted to fact finding in conferences and publications and not to propoganda. The officers and members of the American Council are loyal Americans determined on the destruction of Japanese aggression and the creation of world peace and order under the United Nations."

W. W. WAYMACK—Editor and vice president, The Des Moines Register and Tribune, Des Moines, Iowa :

"It is obviously possible, very readily possible, for a person to approach the broad and diverse activity of the IPR in research, in publication, and in conferences, with the determination to pick out every expression that resembled some other expression by a Communist, and argue that the IPR was Communist. It would be equally possible for any person to set out in the same way to bolster his already fixed notion that the IPR is pro-Japanese, and in the same sense do it. Alternatively, it would be, I am sure, quite as easy to apply the same methods and come out with the same sort of "proof" that the IPR is anti-Communist or anti-Japanese or, indeed, pro or anti nearly anything you might propose."

GALEN FISHER—Former YMCA Secretary in Japan; now retired, San Francisco, California :

"* * * I believe the Institute Staff and Board have been usually objective and thorough and have given the utmost aid to the war effort."

HUNTINGTON GILCHRIST—American Cyanamid Co., New York, N. Y. :

"The Institute of Pacific Relations has rendered distinguished service for many years as a private research organization. The officials of our own State Department, and of Canadian, British, Chinese, and other governments attended the recent Hot Springs Conference. The Institute should be proud to stand on its record."

It is the further opinion of the Executive Committee that Mr. Kohlberg's charges are based upon evidence that is biased and insufficient.

1. The document of November 9 covers only a fraction of the material published by the Institute during the seven-year period in question—less than 2 percent of the articles which appeared in its periodicals, and 0.002 percent of its books.—It bases its conclusions on about 33 articles and book reviews, 3 pamphlets, and 1 book, during a period when the publications of the organization totaled 1,961 articles and book reviews, and 384 books and pamphlets.

2. Mr. Kohlberg charges that the staff employed by the IPR is pro-Japanese and "unpatriotic."—It is interesting to note, however, that the Japanese Government does not share this opinion. A Japanese Government spokesman, broadcasting from Shanghai on February 20, 1945, said :

"The Institute of Pacific Relations, which, in prewar days proved itself to be strongly anti-Japanese, is professedly an organization to serve as a clearing house of international information on economic, political, social, and cultural affairs."

The attitude of the IPR toward Japan was clearly stated in the following statement, made on December 17, 1941, by Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, President of Stanford University, and at that time, chairman of the American Council of the Institute :

"* * * The immediate job of the American people is the prosecution of war against the military imperialism of Japan and the other Axis powers, whose defeat is the condition of any peaceful adjustment in the Far East and elsewhere. The tradition of the IPR does not permit 'neutrality' on this issue; on the contrary, military aggression, in complete disregard of the rights of other peoples, contradicts everything the IPR has stood for."

Mr. Kohlberg also states that his study of IPR publications revealed "no criticism of Japan in these seven years, except of her rural land system."—There are numerous statements critical of Japan's policy, in IPR publications. One example is the pamphlet, Know Your Enemy Japan of which nearly 200,000 copies have been sold, and which is widely used by the Army and Navy. This pamphlet includes such paragraphs as the following :

"Japan is a dictatorship without a dictator. She has no Hitler, but dictatorial powers are exercised by a ruling clique dominated by the Army. Like the Nazis, Japan's dictators have but one object: oppression of their own people and despoilment of their neighbors. * * *"

"The real ambitions of Japan's militarists are accurately described in the words of the 'Tanaka Memorial' of 1927 :

"With all the resources of China at our disposal, we shall proceed to the conquest of India, the Archipelago, Asia Minor, Central Asia, and even Europe. * * * In order to conquer the world, we must first fight China * * *. But if we want the gainful control of China in the future, we must shatter the United States'" (pages 17 and 10, Know Your Enemy Japan).

A study of editorials and broadcasts based on articles from IPR publications makes it clear that columnists and commentators have not had the same difficulty in finding material critical of Japan.

SAMUEL GRAFTON—Radio Commentator and Columnist, New York Post, January 29, 1941:

"The Far Eastern Survey for January 29 tells how Japan has recently stopped publishing vital statistics, that her people may not read in black and white the story of their death."

NEW YORK WORLD TELEGRAM—Editorial—April 14, 1943:

"Whether or not one agrees with the recent report of the Institute of Pacific Relations that 'Japan is our No. 1 enemy,' most Americans probably share the Australian fear that it would be 'suicidal' to give Japan time to consolidate her gains in strategic materials and bases."

3. A natural problem for those engaged in evaluating Mr. Kohlberg's charges, is the question of his qualifications for passing judgment on the research findings of dozens of authorities.—Mr. Kohlberg has released public statements on China which would indicate that his factual information on that country is inadequate. On his return from his last trip to China, for example, he reported on The Fighting Condition of the Chinese Army. This report was released by the East and West Association on February 7th, 1944. In describing his contacts with Army men at forward headquarters, Mr. Kohlberg says:

"One morning I had breakfast with Lt. Gen. Chang Teh Nun, Commander of the Fourth Army (known as the Ironside Army) at his headquarters in Changsha. Gen. Chang is typical of the new spirit and the new leadership in the Chinese Army."

The New York Times of Monday, August 28, 1944, however, contained the following short release:

"Chinese Execute General for Changsha Dereliction: Chungking, China, Monday, Aug. 28.—It was announced officially today that Gen. Chang Teh-neng, commander of China's Fourth Army, was executed August 25 for dereliction of duty during the defense of Changsha."

Furthermore, according to Mr. Kohlberg's own document of Nov. 9 (p. 45), he was reported in the New York Times of November 25, 1938, as stating that "according to information given by sources within the Chinese Government" Soviet aid to China was to end. The full quote follows:

"An agreement giving a free hand to Japan in China has been reached by Russia, Japan, and Germany, according to information given by sources within the Chinese Government to Alfred Kohlberg, president of the Art Embroidery Linen Importers Association. He returned yesterday from a seven weeks' tour of Chinese territory on both sides of the battle lines there.

"Mr. Kohlberg's understanding was that during the summer, Russia, Japan, and Germany had arrived at an agreement by which Russia either joined the German-Japanese alliance, or, if she did not go so far, made peace with Japan and Germany. The arrangement, he understands, calls for cooperation with Russia by Japan and Germany rather than antagonism, and provides for withdrawal of Russian support of Chinese forces."

As a matter of fact, however, further commercial agreements were signed between representatives of the Soviet and Chinese governments in 1939 and 1940; in addition four barter agreements were reached. In his study Far Eastern War, 1937-1941, published by World Peace Foundation, Boston, 1942, Professor Harold S. Quigley (University of Minnesota) states:

"The Soviet Union and New Zealand were the only members of the League Council to urge strong measures against Japan in 1938. Mr. Litvinov criticized the Council's report [of September 30, 1938], which stated that sanctions under Article 16 of the Covenant were left to the discretion of individual members of the League. 'My Government,' he said, 'would be happy to take coordinated measures but since other governments will not do so my Government is compelled to accept the report.' Again, in May 1939, Ivan Maisky stated to the Council, after the British and French representatives had declined to support Chinese proposals of economic sanctions, that 'I would like to support the proposals put forward by the Chinese representative * * * China is the victim of brutal and unprovoked aggression and she is fighting hard and heroically for her independence * * *

"The commercial accord signed by Sun Fo and A. I. Mikoyan in Moscow on June 16, 1939, provided for the exchange of Chinese raw materials for military supplies. A second agreement was signed in July 1940. Preceding and paralleling these broader conventions were four barter agreements, the first in October 1938 (250,000,000 rubles or approximately U. S. $50,000,000), the second in February 1939 (U. S. $50,000,000), the third in August 1939 (U. S. $150,000,000), and the fourth in December 1940 (U. S. $50,000,000), a total of U. S. $300,000,000. Tungsten, antimony, tea, and wool were the principal Chinese products desired by the U. S. S. R. In return China received planes, trucks, tanks, guns, and bombs, transported along the Turkestan-Shensi and Vladivostok-Urga-Ninghsia land routes or by sea via Hanoi and Rangoon.

"The rapprochement of the Soviet Union and Japan, culminating in the Neutrality Pact of April 13, 1941, appeared to undermine this program of assistance * * *. The Soviet Government, however, was not moved from its policy of friendship and assistance to China. It assured the latter of its desire to implement the barter agreements and gave proof of its attitude by sending munitions, planes, and pilots" (pp. 256-58).

4. Mr. Kohlberg's charges and his document reveal that he has little understanding of the aims and objectives of a scholarly organization like the IPR, which may be described as follows: The Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc., is a non-partisan, nonprofit, international organization engaged in research and educational activities. It was founded in 1925 for the purpose of promoting scientific investigation and rational discussion of the problems and mutual relations of the peoples of the Pacific area, and is composed of National Councils in ten countries with interests in Asia and the Pacific area. The American Council is the IPR affiliate in the United States.

The Institute, governed by a Pacific Council, made up of representatives of the various National Councils, does not engage in propaganda. It is contrary to its policy to express opinions on public affairs, and a statement to that effect is carried in most of its publications. The Institute does not, however, seek to escape responsibility for the scholarly standards maintained in its publications, nor for the selection of material which is published. Its policy in this regard has been publicly stated as adhering to "the principles of complete freedom of scientific inquiry, broad hospitality to all points of view but subservience to none."

In selecting materials for publication, whether articles, pamphlets, or books, the Institute is guided by various considerations, including the scholarly merit of the material, the importance of the subject, and its public interest. So far as humanly possible, it endeavors to assure the accuracy of all factual statements appearing in its publications; and most of its books and pamphlets are sent out to a number of competent critics—professors, State Department people, etc.—before publication. It does not attempt to impose a censorship on opinions, nor does it solicit manuscripts exclusively from persons who share a single viewpoint. On the contrary, believing that truth is arrived at only in an atmosphere of free discussion, it aims to present materials reflecting different and often conflicting viewpoints.

Each issue of The Far Eastern Survey, published by the American Council of the Institute contains the following statement:

The American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations does not express opinions on public affairs. Responsibility for statements of fact or opinion appearing in the Far Eastern Survey rests solely with the author.

The Institute does not feel it necessary to apologize for the fact that certain materials which it has published are critical of conditions in China. It has, on occasion, published materials criticizing not only the policies of China, but those of Great Britain, Russia, and other Allied nations including the United States. This it believes to be an integral part of the principle of freedom of scientific inquiry. The same right of criticism has been freely exercised by other American institutions, including the press, publishers' and research organizations.

The publications of the Institute have not shown any special bias against China, as is shown by the fact that (a) many criticisms of countries other than China have appeared in IPR publications, and (b) that Institute publications on China have included not only criticisms but also, as admitted by Mr. Kohlberg, praise of China and support for China.

There are, of course, occasional similarities in subject material between articles published by the Institute and those appearing in the Communist press.

But this does not constitute proof that the Institute is biased in favor of communism or that it is disseminating Communist propaganda. Equal similarity can be found in the subjects covered by the IPR and the New York Times, Life, or The Christian Science Monitor.

5. In his petition to the court, Mr. Kohlberg states that his study of IPR publications revealed that many were "prepared by staff writers employed by the American Council, which writers had an extensive background of Communist activity, and which staff writers in said articles presented inaccurate, untrue, false, and misleading facts, opinions, and conclusions * * *." He declares that " * * * the refusal of the Executive Committee * * * to seriously consider the said charges * * * constitutes gross mismanagement * * * and tends to give comfort and aid to the enemy of the United States, namely, the Japanese Government during time of war, by enabling unpatriotic, biased, uninformed, and incompetent staff writers of the American Council and Pacific Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations to continue writings which constitute Communist propaganda, causing disunity, dissension, and misunderstanding, both within the Chinese Government and among its peoples, and between the Chinese Government and the American Government which are allied in the war effort against the Japanese Government."

Elsewhere in this report we shall give detailed attention to the material he has quoted, and the facts and points of view expressed therein. In this section we are interested specifically in the reference made above to "unpatriotic, biased, uninformed, and incompetent staff writers * * *." These statements impugn the integrity, competence, and patriotism of our staff and our contributors. A few facts are presented below—it is our belief that the record speaks for itself.

In his selection of material Mr. Kohlberg quotes a total of 25 authors and contributors. Of these 14 have never been employed on the staff of the IPR, although they may have contributed to its publications or engaged in specific studies for the IPR on Far Eastern subjects. An additional 7, although formerly employed, are not now on the staff. Only 4 of the 25 quoted by Mr. Kohlberg are now on the staff, and only one of these is working for the American Council. It is of interest to glance briefly at the record and background of each of the persons quoted in Mr. Kohlberg's charges.

The persons listed below are the only ones of the 25 quoted by Mr. Kohlberg who are on the staff of the IPR at the present time:

The references cited above are not in any sense a complete review of the positions held, the publications written, or the other qualifications of the authors cited. A compilation of favorable critical comment on their published works would undoubtedly make a substantial volume in itself. It may be of interest, however, to cite two typical reviews—one from the New York Times, one from the Herald Tribune, of books by two of the authors mentioned.

NEW YORK TIMES—February 21, 1945

Re: Solution in Asia, by Owen Lattimore:

"Owen Lattimore is one of the best qualified of all Americans now writing on Oriental affairs * * * devotes the greater part of Solution in Asia to a review of recent political history in Japan and China."

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE (Sunday Edition)—June 5, 1938

Re: Japan in China, by T. A. Bisson:

"Japan in China (by T. A. Bisson, 1938) is an extraordinary book. It is beyond all doubt the soundest and most scholarly volume which has yet appeared on the more immediate background and origins of the Sino-Japanese conflict, and on its earlier phases. Nor is it likely that its position in this field will soon be usurped. For until the archives are thrown open and the memoirs of those who have been close to the seats of power during the last five years are published, it is difficult to see how any historian could surpass Mr. Bisson's work. It represents the quintessence of years of painstaking research, and of lengthy conversations, during 1937, with leader and rank and file in China and Japan, by a first-class authority on Far Eastern social and political developments."

NEW YORK TIMES—January 28, 1945

Re: China's Wartime Politics, by Lawrence K. Resinger:

"This is an absorbingly interesting and important monograph which includes fourteen documents of outstanding significance, particularly with reference to Kuomintang-Communist aims and relations, with which half of them deal. It is heartening to serious students (and it behooves Americans to become serious students) of contemporary China that the author and his patrons of the Institute of Pacific Relations should have seen fit, in a study so limited in scope, bulk, and chronology, to have used and rendered accessible so many fundamental source materials.

Clearly written, coolly objective, essentially sound as to facts, this essay presents the highlights, with comparatively few contrasting shadows, of the period touched upon. Never does Mr. Resinger wax enthusiastic; never is he ironical or condemnatory, never does he guess, suggest, or imply, and rarely does he attempt explanation or interpretation. Facts are facts, without nuances."

Finally, reference might be made to the many qualified persons at present carrying on the work of the IPR, and to those others who have left the IPR to assume important and responsible positions with the United States Government. The latter group includes:

CATHERINE PORTER: On the staff of the IPR, 1942-44, formerly assistant editor of Pacific Affairs, and chairman of the Board of Editors of the Far Eastern Survey. At present Regional Specialist on the Philippines for the Office of War Information.

W. L. HOLLAND: On the staff of IPR, 1929-45, formerly editor of Pacific Affairs, and International Research Secretary of the Pacific Council; on leave at present as Assistant Chief, China Outpost, Chungking, Office of War Information.

WILLIAM W. LOCKWOOD: On the staff of the IPR, 1935-42; Secretary of the American Council, 1941-42. Office of Strategic Services (1942). At present in China with the U. S. Army Air Corps.

RUSSEL G. SHIMAN: On the staff of IPR, 1:33-41. United States Tariff Commission, 1941-43; Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture, 1943-44; UNRRA, 1944-45.

PHILIP E. LILIENTHAL: Pacific Council Staff 1938-42; in charge of International Secretariat's Shanghai Publication Office, 1940-41; now with Office of War Information, San Francisco.

KATRINE R. C. GREENE: American Council staff, 1938-42. At present with American Red Cross in North Africa.

LAURA MAYER: Pacific Council staff, 1942-43; now with Red Cross in New Guinea.

ELIZABETH DOWNING: Pacific Council, 1936; Shanghai Publications Office, 1937-38; American Council, 1941-43; at present with Office of War Information, New York.

ISABEL WARD: Pacific Council, 1936; 1940-41; at present with OWI in San Francisco.

6. The Kohlberg document attempts to prove that the IPR publications followed a definite pattern with regard to China: i. e., that, prior to the Hitler-Stalin pact of August 23, 1939, they praised China; from then till June 22, 1941, they abused China; from then till the summer of 1943, they praised China; and since the summer of 1943, they have again concentrated on abuse of China.—This, according to Mr. Kohlberg, represented shifts in the Communist Party line.

In order to prove his case, the author of the document has resorted to the device of taking passages of articles out of context. Yet in a number of instances, these same articles contain other paragraphs which, if similarly taken out of context, could be used to prove the opposite. The IPR pamphlet, Wartime China, is a good example of this.

The pamphlet sets out neither to "praise" China nor to "abuse" China, but to present what, in the opinion of the author and many expert critics who read it in manuscript form, is a balanced view supported by the best available evidence. Mr. Kohlberg has taken from its pages quotations which indicate criticism of China. However, as is demonstrated below, it is possible to select numerous quotes indicating praise of the country and its leaders, which give an entirely different picture. The fallacy of this method of selection is apparent, and it illustrates the weakness of Mr. Kohlberg's assertions: Wartime China states:

"We have been filled with admiration at the way in which the people of China, in the face of almost incredible hardships and disappointments, have stood up to the Japanese year after year without giving in * * *" (page 6).

"From a military standpoint, the remarkable thing is that the Chinese were able to maintain resistance in the face of great inferiority of arms and supplies of all kinds. Comparatively little help has been obtained from broad * * *" (page 10).

"Against this historical background, the degree of national unity that has been achieved in China since 1937 under Chiang Kai-shek's leadership is truly remarkable. Without it, the miracle of military resistance could not have taken place * * *" (page 16).

"When measured against the handicaps which she has had to overcome, China's war effort is truly impressive. Try to imagine that an enemy power has occupied both sea coasts of the United States and most of the country east of the Mississippi. The capital has been moved to Denver and is flooded with refugees. Then take away nearly all of the factories, railroads, highways, telephone and telegraph lines, electrical equipment, coal, iron, and oil fields from the unoccupied area. Even so, we should be better off than China for we should still have an abundance of skilled labor and trained technicians and administrators. For the political picture, go back to 1776 when our country consisted of thirteen "sovereign" states with hardly any organized national government, and plenty of conservatives who saw no sense in fighting for that new and unfamiliar idea, the 'United States of America.' Keep up the enemy pressure for seven years with little help from outside. That might give you a rough idea, in American terms, of what China has been up against" (page 20).

"The fact that Chiang is President of the Republic Prime Minister and Commander in Chief of the Army has led many people to think of him as a dictator. This is hardly accurate. Although on paper his powers are great, actually he serves as a sort of balance wheel, stabilizing the conflicting forces of the various groups * * * (page 42).

"Most of all, perhaps, Americans can help China by trying to understand the magnitude of the task which she faces in transforming an ancient medieval society into a modern democratic nation. Only if we appreciate her difficulties as well as her achievements can we deal fairly with China. And we must remember that many of the difficulties which she faces today and in years to come are the result of seven years of war in which China fought our battle almost unaided" (page 63).

In his letter accompanying the November 9 document, Mr. Kohlberg termed Wartime China as "from start to finish * * * a deliberate smear of China and the Chinese Government." The above paragraphs would not bear this out, however. Neither would such letters and reviews as the following:

"Maxwell Stewart's booklet seems to cover very well the ground about the internal conditions in China. Probably the Chinese will not like it but it seems to me that he almost went out of his way to give all the extenuating circumstances and to qualify the criticisms. It's about the best booklet I have seen out of the IPR."

"Here we have two splendid additions to the illuminating series of pamphlets produced by this publisher. The first describes the stresses and strains behind the fighting lines in China. The second is a popularly written history of Japanese aggression from Perry's time to Pearl Harbor. Like the rest of the series, these booklets are written by specialists in their fields and have been carefully checked by experts; their scholarship is sound."

AMERICAN SOCIOLOGICAL REVIEW—December 1944

Re Wartime China:

"This Institute of Pacific Relations pamphlet on China by the editor of the widely circulated Public Affairs pamphlets gives an authoritative, balanced discussion of the problems, resources, personalities, and confusions in that much misunderstood land."

7. Mr. Kohlberg is much more sensitive to criticism of China than many Chinese.—Unlike Mr. Kohlberg, the China Institute of Pacific Relations is not hostile to the work and publications of the IPR. One of the basic practices of the IPR has been not only to provide for criticism but to welcome and stimulate it. The research publications and monographs of the National Councils and of the International Secretariat are submitted to a number of competent critics before publication, and at the International Conferences of the IPR every effort is made to stimulate the frank expression of every point of view.

This procedure is important because neither the Institute itself nor any of its National Councils express an "institute" point of view on any political or economic questions. Every article, pamphlet, book, or oral statement rests solely on the authority of the individual author.

There have recently been vivid examples of this policy of frank criticism at the January 1945 International Conference of the Institute at Hot Springs, Va. There was frank and forceful criticism of statements of American members by French, British, and Dutch members. There were Chinese criticisms of American statements, and vice versa. There were Indian criticisms of British statements, and vice versa. Many of these will be reflected in the preliminary report of the Hot Springs Conference which will be published sometime in April 1945.

At the Atlantic City meeting of the Pacific Council of the IPR in January 1944 there were likewise British criticisms of some of the articles of members of the International Secretariat. There were similarly American and Chinese criticisms of the International Secretariat. On one occasion there were criticisms of the International Secretariat because it was too "pro-Chinese," too "pro-American" and too "pro-British."

At Hot Springs, one Chinese member criticized the International Secretariat for the writings of some of its members on Chinese problems. This was countered by the Chairman of the China IPR, Dr. Chiang Mon-lin, former Minister of Education in China, who said that he personally had no sympathy with such criticisms, that the essence of the IPR was frank criticism and freedom of speech. He felt that criticism of China both by Chinese and by foreigners was an asset and that he welcomed the criticisms of people of whatever school of thought, who were interested in the problems of China and China's relationship to other countries.

There is a wide difference between friendly criticism and hostility. If the Chinese IPR were hostile to the parent organization, it could take one or both of the following steps: (1) it could cease or reduce its financial support of the International Secretariat. As a matter of fact in both 1943 and 1944 the China IPR made a larger financial contribution to the International Secretariat than any other of the ten National Councils with the single exception of the American Council. (2) It could either withdraw from membership in the Pacific Council or give notice that it was considering withdrawal. It has adopted neither course.

On the contrary, its cooperation has been substantial and important. It contributed several data papers to the Hot Springs Conference. It is actively cooperating in the International Research Program. The services of its National Secretary in Chungking have been loaned for a period of six months to the International Secretariat in New York without cost to the International Secretariat for traveling expenses or salary.

At very large expense the China IPR sent a truly representative group of Chinese to the Hot Springs Conference (January 6-17, 1945). They include the following:

They both have been invited to visit China again as soon as possible.

B. ANALYSIS OF MR. KOHLBERG'S DOCUMENT

Section I, p. 49 (1937—August 23, 1939)

On page 4 of his document, Mr. Kohlberg states that the IPR was not critical of Chiang Kai-shek and the Kuomintang from the time of the agreement, early in 1937, between the Kuomintang and the Communists, and August 1939, when Germany and the Soviet Union made their nonaggression pact.

By this statement, Mr. Kohlberg implies that the IPR is following the "Communist line." However, a careful study of the issues of the Far Eastern Survey of that period of 2½ years reveals that in no instance did the Survey make comparisons, invidious or otherwise, between the Chinese Communists and the Kuomintang and did not praise the Chinese Communists. References to Chinese Communists had no political coloring.

In that period there were three articles relating to Chinese guerrillas. One was a half-page in length, one less than a page, and one five pages. In none of the three articles does the word "communist" appear. The guerrillas are treated as Chinese, not as partisans within China of an alien ideology. The three articles are factual descriptions of what Chinese termed "guerrillas," were doing to aid in the war against Japan. The three articles are "Guerrilla Industries May Displace 'Scorched Earth' Policy." page 179, Far Eastern Survey, 1938; "Chinese Guerrillas Spike Japanese Raw Cotton Hopes." page 201 of the same year; and "The War Economy of China's Guerrillas." page 265 of the same year.

Mention in other articles of Chinese Communists include neither criticism or praise of either the Communists or the Kuomintang. For example, an article entitled "Revitalizing British Interests in China." states, on page 139 of the 1937 volume: "There is little doubt that the degree of political unification which has been achieved by the Nanking Government, together with the stabilizing effects of the financial reforms, would under any circumstances have served to attract new British capital to China"; in an article entitled "China's Domestic Transport System." page 255 of the 1937 volume: "* * * the excellent high-ways of Kiangsi, for example, grew out of the needs of the recent anti-Communist campaign"; in an article entitled "The War and Western Interests in North China." page 231 of the 1938 volume: "Moreover, the widespread continuance of guerrilla warfare has prevented the consolidation of the Japanese position and the restoration of peace and order."

Had the Far Eastern Survey been following a "Communist line," it would have taken opportunity to praise the Chinese communists at the expense of the Kuomintang. This it did not do in the period under review, a period stated by Mr. Kohlberg to be a time when the IPR was following the "Communist line."

Mr. Kohlberg quotes the Survey twice, presumably to support his contention. The first is from an article by Frederick V. Field on page 57 of the 1937 volume entitled "The Chinese Communists Re-merge." The sentence to which Mr. Kohlberg takes exception is apparently the following: "If this information is correct [that an agreement has been reached between the National Government and the Communists] it means that for the first time since 1927 the Communists have been officially recognized, the government has agreed to give up its anti-Communist campaigns, and—most important—an actual beginning to an anti-Japanese military and political front has been established." To anyone who was following Chinese affairs at that time, regardless of his political views, this seems to be a mere statement of fact.

The other statement from the Far Eastern Survey quoted by Mr. Kohlberg in this section of his document (page 7) seems to have no connection with his general argument, and cannot therefore be dealt with. A study of the four issues of Pacific Affairs quarterly of the year 1937 quoted in the Kohlberg document, also fails to indicate that there was any following of the "Communist party line."

Mr. Kohlberg quotes only from one article during the year 1937, namely, the article entitled "Soviet Society in Northwest China" by Edgar Snow. From that article he quotes the sentence: "In Fundamental Laws of the Chinese Soviet Republic (by Martin Lawrence, London, 1934) the First All-China Soviet Congress in 1931 set forth in detail the 'maximum program' of the Communist Party of China—and reference to it shows clearly the ultimate aim of Chinese Communists is a true and complete socialist state of the Marxist-Leninist conception." Mr. Snow's next sentence (not quoted by Mr. Kohlberg) reads, "Meanwhile, however, it has to be remembered that the social, political, and economic organization of the Red districts has all along been only a very provisional affair." This second sentence gives the point of the article, which as the title indicates, is a description of the Chinese Communist area based on Snow's first-hand knowledge of it. Mr. Snow writes for the Saturday Evening Post on the subject of Chinese Communists, as well as other subjects. He has also written several best sellers, published by reputable firms. But it is doubtful if this fact makes these publishers open to the charge of following the "Communist line."

Note is taken below of all other articles and book reviews which touch on the question of either the National Government of China or the Chinese Communists during this period.

In the March 1937 issue there is an article entitled "The Dragnet of Local Government in China" by Norman D. Hanwell, which, in pointing out the defects of local government, is indirectly critical of the National Government.

In the issue of June 1937 there is no criticism, either favorable or adverse, of either the National Government or the Chinese Communists. The matter is ignored.

In the September 1937 issue, which contains the article by Edgar Snow referred to by Mr. Kohlberg, the only other article referring to either the National Government or the Chinese Communists is an article entitled "Japan and China: A War of Minds" by Robert S. Morton, in which the writer expresses his own views as follows: "To many Chinese the Kuomintang now seems tame, even reactionary; and highly subservient to Japan in yielding territory and influence repeatedly, without daring to risk its own position by real struggle for defense" (page 312). "By most Chinese * * * Communism is opposed, whether domestic or Russian" (page 312).

"Moreover, the predominant Chinese view is that internal Communism has steadily lost ground for five years, despite the spectacular flight of guerrilla bands through sparsely settled areas. A subcurrent of Chinese opinion is inclined to listen to Communists, not so much because of their social program or their actual record in China, as because they denounce and oppose Japanese imperialism more openly than does the cautious Chinese Government" (page 313). The article praises neither the National Government nor the Chinese Communists.

In the same issue, in an article entitled "The New Era in Chinese Railway Construction" by "Asiaticus," is a statement that "The only danger points which signify yielding to foreign pressure by Nanking are to be seen in leaving North China, menaced by the Japanese, to its fate, and a tendency to compromise with the Japanese plans for usurping control of all railway interests in this zone." Except for this statement the article is descriptive of accomplishments in railway construction and does not praise or criticize the National Government.

The only book review in this issue which falls within the current study is a review of China Calling by the Reverend Frank Houghton, a British missionary. The book is reviewed by Eugene E. Barnett, and he quotes a sentence from the book "Probably no Chinese government has ever included so large a proportion of energetic and public-spirited officials as those now at work in Nanking." Quoting this statement was no "Communist line." Anyone who had association with the government at Nanking at that time would subscribe to the statement.

There is no article in the December 1937 issue which refers to the National Government or to the Chinese Communists. The opening article, however, is by Frederick V. Field. The title of the article is "American Far Eastern Policy, 1931-1937." Mr. Field, however, fails to mention either the National Government of China or the Chinese Communists, although the subject of the article gave him room to do so if he wished.

With regard to book reviews, Dr. Shuhsi Hsu is given an opportunity to make objections, in more than two pages, to a review in the same issue of Dr. Hsu's book The North China Problem. In the review of that book the reviewer,

Owen Lattimore, states that Dr. Hsu describes the position of the Chinese Communists as "virtually laying down their arms" and then Mr. Lattimore states, "I was in the Red territory about two weeks before I read Professor Hsu's book, and I saw no signs of any such docility. The Chinese Communists still appear to think that they have improved their local footing in the Northwest and at the same time won a stronger position in national politics by their negotiations in Nanking since the release of Chiang Kai-shek from Sian, and that as a result they will be able to press their old demands for a general national resistance against Japanese aggression."

Mr. Lattimore's review is an honest and unheated criticism of a book which was obviously incomplete in its content, not only with regard to the Chinese Communists but with regard to the Mongols of Inner Mongolia, a subject on which Mr. Lattimore is an outstanding authority.

The Lattimore review is followed by a review by a Chinese (Chen Han-seng) of a book by Harry Gannes entitled "When China Unites: An Interpretive History of the Chinese Revolution." Mr. Chen does not seem to approve of Gannes' treatment of the Chinese Communists. The criticism of this aspect of the book, however, is less than one-half of a page out of a review of more than two and a half pages.

Taking up the four issues of Pacific Affairs for the year 1938:

The only item in the issue for March 1938 which Mr. Kohlberg quotes is a review of Edgar Snow's book Red Star Over China, the reviewer being Mr. Edward C. Carter. The review on the whole commends the book, in common with practically all reviewers of the book at the time of publication. Mr. Carter's review, however, is not entirely favorable, pointing out "the author's tendency to ignore the very substantial achievements of the Nanking Government" (page 110).

Mr. Kohlberg fails to point out that ten pages in front of that review, four pages are devoted to an attack on the Chinese Communists by W. W. Wheeler 2d, in which Mr. Wheeler refers to the Chinese Communist forces as follows: * * * "such unattached free-booting armies are an old and even stereotyped evil" and "the present Communist army is notable chiefly for the length of its retreat, its proclivity for plunder and its avoidance of pitched battle." In final paragraph of this almost four pages statement is contained the sentence, "The bulk of the Communist Army is recruited from vagabonds" (pages 101-104).

This issue contains two articles on the military situation in China. The first, entitled "China's advance from Defeat to Strength" by "Asiaticus," praises both Chiang Kai-shek and his armies and the Communist armies. The second article, "The Strategy of the Sino-Japanese Conflict" by Herbert Rosinsky, praises the armies of Chiang Kai-shek and refers favorably to "guerrilla tactics" and to the vindication of the Red Army's reputation by its "outstanding bravery in the fighting in Shansi." In this connection it should be remembered that there was every reason to praise both Chiang Kai-shek and the Communists at that time. It seemed that unity had been achieved between them and during that period Chiang Kai-shek's troops were doing magnificent fighting at Shanghai and Taierehuang, fighting such as has not been attained by the National Government forces since then.

There is also an article in this issue "The Revolution in Chinese Legal Thought" by N. H. van der Valk, which inter alia adversely criticizes the new Criminal Code of 1935 of the Chinese government.

In Pacific Affairs of June 1938 no article deals either with the National Government or with the Chinese Communists.

Mr. Kohlberg quotes some statements made by Edgar Snow in this issue. These statements occur in five pages given to Edgar Snow in which to reply to more than six pages of criticism of Snow's "Red Star Over China" by "Asiaticus." It is an indication of a dispassionate publication to permit two writers to air their opinions pro and con on a controversial subject.

There are no book reviews in the June 1938 issue relating to either the National Government or the Chinese Communists.

Regarding the issue of Pacific Affairs of September 1938, it is impossible to perceive why Mr. Kohlberg quotes what he does from the article by Haldore Hanson entitled "The People Behind the Chinese Guerrillas" (page 285). This article is a factual account of Mr. Hanson's visit to those places in North China (not Communist Northwest China) where "self-defense governments" had "sprung up everywhere in the wake of the Japanese Army," these groups being led "jointly by Communist agents and patriotic University students." The activities of these "self-defense governments" were watched during that period with the greatest sympathy and enthusiasm by all Westerners in the cities of North China, regardless of the political views of those people, because of their effective hampering of the Japanese. This article is a factual recital of eye witness experiences of a man of excellent reputation who has been serving for the past two years or more in the Cultural Division of the Department of State.

Mr. Kohlberg quotes from an item in this issue entitled "Why the Chinese Communists Support a United Front." This is in its entirety an interview which Nym Wales had with a Chinese Communist. It is in quotation marks to show that everything said in this article was said by the Chinese Communist. It is an interview and it is clearly published as such (page 311).

No other article of this issue deals with either the National Government or the Chinese Communists.

Mr. Kohlberg quotes from two pages of comment made by Owen Lattimore (pages 370-72) in regard to a criticism by William Henry Chamberlin (of four pages in the June issue of Pacific Affairs entitled "The Moscow Trials." which appeared under "Comment and Correspondence"; a brief article which did not refer to the Chinese Communists but only to the Moscow trials. Mr. Kohlberg fails to point out that immediately preceding Mr. Lattimore's comment are four pages of comment by Mr. William Henry Chamberlin adversely criticizing the Moscow trials. Again, this is the procedure of a dispassionate publication—to print the opposing views in close juxtaposition so that both sides may have an equal opportunity to reach the readers of the publication.

Mr. Kohlberg does not quote from Pacific Affairs of December 1938. This issue does not have any material which might be regarded as following the "Communist line." However, in fairness to the Institute, Mr. Kohlberg might have referred to a four page editorial (pages 495-8) in which reference is made to the practice of Pacific Affairs in presenting both points of view in regard to a controversial subject. In the final paragraph of that editorial it is stated: "While avoiding the practice of presenting every controversy through two 'selected' spokesmen, we have also done our best to increase the representation, in Pacific Affairs, of national points of view—a policy which is not inconsistent with our major policy of trying, first and foremost, to establish the real course of events and the real trend of development."

In Pacific Affairs for March 1939 there is one article dealing with the resistance to the Japanese, "The Good Iron of the New Chinese Army," by Olga Lang (page 20). This is primarily a case study of Chinese who are fighting the Japanese. Mr. Kohlberg quotes the final three sentences: "All of this does not mean that the Chinese Army is already perfect. Far from it. Much remains to be done: But what is important is that the way to victory is found." Mr. Kohlberg evidently intends to suggest that a statement so favorable as this about the Chinese forces early in 1939, is incompatible with recent statements regarding the present malnutrition of the National forces of China, and the present neglect of troops by some Chinese generals. The two statements are not incompatible. A deterioration has taken place in the past two or three years in the treatment of the Chinese forces by their leaders, just as there has taken place deterioration in its resistance to Japan.

There is nothing else in this issue either praising or criticizing the National Government of China or the Chinese Communists, not even among the book reviews.

In the June 1939 issue of Pacific Affairs there are two articles dealing with China's resistance: one, "The Nature of Guerrilla Warfare" by Major R. Ernest Dupuy (pages 138-48), and the other, "The Failure of Civil Control in Occupied China" by B. Ward Perkins (pages 149-56). The first article is a study of aspects of guerrilla warfare in history, and other countries, and its purpose is to discover what one may hope for from guerrilla warfare in China. It is unemotional in character. The second article is critical of the Japanese and speaks favorably of the guerrillas.

The third article in this issue is "The War in China and the Soviet Press" by Martin R. Norins (pages 157-68), from which Mr. Kohlberg quotes extensively in his document. This article is composed of reports from Communist sources and these reports are always identified as such. Taken in conjunction with the preceding two articles it forms one of three serious studies, and to drop any one of them would result in giving a less complete picture of the situation that is obtained from the three together.

In "Comment and Correspondence" there are two letters with regard to guerrilla warfare, one by Captain Evans F. Carlson of the United States Marine Corps (pages 183-84), and one by Haldore Hanson (pages 184-85), both of them men who have had first-hand experience in guerrilla areas. The purpose of each letter is to comment on Dupuy's article, "The Nature of Guerrilla Warfare," and they deal with Dupuy's statements from a legal and technical viewpoint rather than from a partisan viewpoint.

Quotations Critical of China in I. P. R. Publications, 1937-Aug. 23, 1939

The following excerpts demonstrate that in the period under review the I. P. R. (American and Pacific Councils) published materials critical of both Kuomintang and Chinese Government policies (as well as other materials commending them).

As many of these quotations are from the Far Eastern Survey, it should be noted that before 1941, the Survey was devoted to economic topics and avoided discussion of political or controversial issues. Nevertheless the tenor of many articles was clearly critical of Chinese Government policy.

MR. KOHLBERG'S PERIOD OF PRAISE OF CHINA

"Merchant Capital and Usury Capital in Rural China," by Leonard T. K. Wu, Far Eastern Survey, March 25, 1936

"Rural credit is the crux of the great financial problem facing China today" (p. 63).

"Certain conclusions seem to the present writer, to be the only logical implications.

"(1) The operation of the present system of usury-merchant-landlordism must lead to the disintegration of rural China. With interest rates as high as 100 percent or more * * * it is inevitable that the middle class peasants will be reduced to small peasants, small peasants to poor peasants, and poor peasants to hired or unemployed persons.

"(2) Under the present system, the bulk of the peasants are hardly able to keep body and soul together. It is therefore absolutely impossible to expect them to make any technical or other scientific advance in methods of production * * *

"(3) The pauperization of the peasantry and decline in agricultural productivity means a shrinkage in national purchasing power * * * Usury-merchant-landlordism in China is destroying, instead of creating, markets * * * (p. 68).

"Rural Bankruptcy in China," by Leonard T. K. Wu, Far Eastern Survey, October 8, 1936.

"If any one problem can be said to overshadow all other internal economic questions facing harassed China today, it is the rural crisis." (p. 209)

"The present state of rural China may be summarized in one word—bankruptcy" (p. 209).

"The poverty and desperation of the peasants is indicated in the growing restiveness which often spontaneously breaks out into open opposition. In famine regions the eating of bark of trees and grass roots, and the sale of children is commonplace" (p. 211).

"The central and fundamental cause of the rural crisis is what Chan Han-song has aptly termed the contradiction between land owning and land using'. * * * The dire need of no less than 65 percent of China's rural population is for land" (p. 212).

"The Rajchman Report [report by Dr. Ludwik Rajchman to the League of Nations] states: 'The number of tenants is on the increase, since owner-farmers are being forced, because of the depression and the decline of agriculture, to sell their land or to mortgage it on such terms as to leave them little better than tenants.'" (p. 212).

(Note that the report of the eminent scholar, Dr. Rajchman, to the League of Nations parallels Dr. Wu's findings as reported in the Far Eastern Survey.)

"Exorbitant rents, arising from this system of land tenancy, further provokes the seriousness of the rural problem" (p. 214).

"The second structural cause of the rural crisis is the assessment of all kinds of exorbitant taxes and tolls. While the very lifeblood of the tenants and partial tenants is poured into high land rents, that of the peasant proprietors and small landlords is poured into stiff taxes and tolls" (p. 214).

"Chinese Reconstruction in Practice" by Frederick V. Field, Far Eastern Survey December 19, 1936

In this article Mr. Field surveys the efforts of the National Government toward national reconstruction and finds them very inadequate.

"The aspects of reconstruction on which we have already touched—landlordism and tenancy, taxation and cooperation—are those in which the social problem is conspicuous. A survey of the application of the reconstruction program in these fields throws grave doubt on whether fundamental reform can be achieved under the present auspices. The compromise necessarily made in the interests of political expediency and economic support seem practically to frustrate the basic readjustments called for in blueprints * * *" (p. 268).

"In relation to the immense problem [of water control] the energy and resources the government has devoted to it are pitifully insignificant" (p. 270).

"The key to understanding the whole current reconstruction movement is found in the purposes and methods of the communications program * * *. Considerable emphasis has * * * been put * * * on highway construction. Yet * * * the highways * * * have been developed less to supplement the economy of the Chinese farmers * * * than to force the provinces into a central federation by military coercion. Unification of a sort has been achieved, but it has been achieved in such a way as to * * * establish a military dictatorship over an already oppressed people. * * * It is this factor which throws doubt on the validity of the entire reconstruction effort. The evidence would seem to indicate that below the surface of construction activities of the sort represented by highways there remain all the fundamental maladjustments of a feudal, agrarian society (pp. 270-71).

"The Financial Stability of the Nanking Government" by Kate Mitchell, Far Eastern Survey, July 1, 1936

"Internally the Nanking Government faces problems fundamentally more serious than those presented by foreign political and financial pressure. Its political authority is far from complete, and there is increasingly widespread discontent, aggravated by economic distress, at the Government's failure to take action against the inroads of Japan. The majority of Chinese farmers are increasingly impoverished. The extortionate demands of tax collector, usurer, merchant, landlord and military leaders; the ruining of the land by flood and drought; the decline in agricultural prices; and the lack of rural credit facilities have resulted in widespread bankruptcy" (p. 139).

"* * * 'rural reconstruction' remains largely a much used phrase rather than an actuality. The problems of land ownership, land taxation and rural credit remain untouched. The trend toward economic deterioration, though slightly checked, has not yet been reversed * * *" (p. 139).

"On the credit side of the balance sheet a comparison of the financial organization today with that in 1928 reveals a marked degree of progress * * *.

"On the debit side of the ledger, however, we find equally convincing evidence. * * * Throughout its nine years of existence the Nanking Government has never been able to escape from the perilous financial position of a government fighting for its political life. Among the outstanding features of government finance throughout this period have been a heavily unbalanced budget, a current deficit necessitating large-scale borrowing by costly methods, the expenditure of a large percentage of government revenue for military purposes, lack of effective budgetary control over government expenditure and inability to fix and enforce the areas of taxation for the various grades of government * * * (p. 144).

"The whole question of the Central Government's financial position thus provides an excellent illustration of the many external and internal forces which are complicating, if not completely blocking the way to political stability and economic reconstruction in China. Predictions as to the future course of events are extremely hazardous. Internally, Nanking's political power is challenged both by the Southern and the Communist factions. There is no clear indication as to which of several possible lines of action Nanking is likely to choose. Externally, the policies of Japan, Great Britain, and the United States are all uncertain quantities, dependent perhaps as much on the course of events in Europe as on conditions in eastern Asia. Barring the possibility of some form of foreign assistance, it would seem that Nanking's only chance of continuing to finance its operations and carry on the administration of government depends upon whether such revenues as remain to it are devoted solely to the objective of improving the economic welfare of the people and thereby eliminating the principal cause for internal revolt against its political control" (p. 146).

Review of Chiang Kai-shek, by Gustav Amann. Reviewed by Bruno Lasker, Pacific Affairs, March 1937

"Mr. Amann is especially successful in describing the miracle of how even so much as is now visible of the structure of China's national government could arise in so short a time. To have 'enthroned' the middle classes by giving them workable instruments of rule, appears to Mr. Amann the outstanding achievement of Chiang Kai-shek. One of China's greatest strategists, the generalissimo is pictured nevertheless as the relentless enemy of 'neo-militarism.' This is done by a literary form of flood-lighting which keeps in the shadow the essential nature of the scene: the concentration of power in a small group above the party, the suppression of public discussion, censorship in an extreme form, devitalization of the labor movement—in short the adoption of many of the methods if not the whole ideology of fascism" (p. 88).

The conclusion one reaches after a study of all of the material in both the Survey and Pacific Affairs for the years 1937, 1938, and the first half of 1939—during which period Mr. Kohlberg claims that the I. P. R. followed the "Communist line"—is that views on both sides are presented; that there was both criticism and praise of the National Government.

Section II The Period from August 23, 1939, to June 22, 1941

During this period, according to Mr. Kohlberg, the Institute of Pacific Relations in general, and the American Council in particular, followed what he called the "Communist line," i. e., abusing (but not praising) the Chinese Government.

In order to prove this, he quoted some lines from two articles and book reviews in Pacific Affairs and six short articles in the Far Eastern Survey. During these twenty-two months the Pacific Affairs published approximately sixty-five articles and one hundred reviews. Thus, Mr. Kohlberg could find fault with less than three percent of the articles and two percent of the reviews in Pacific Affairs. During the same period there were 47 issues of the Far Eastern Survey in which there were published more than 280 articles. Thus, again, the articles quoted by Mr. Kohlberg constitute only about two percent of the total number of articles. Beside this, during the period under consideration, the Pacific Council and American Council published many books which were ignored in Mr. Kohlberg's accusations. Of the articles published in Pacific Affairs during this period, there were twenty-five dealing more or less directly with China; Mr. Kohlberg used only two of them. In the Far Eastern Survey about twenty-five of all articles had direct relation to China, but Mr. Kohlberg used only six of them.

Furthermore, during the period under consideration until June 24, 1941, the editor of Pacific Affairs was Owen Lattimore, who left that post to become confidential adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. If Pacific Affairs was abusing the Chinese Government to the extent charged by Mr. Kohlberg, during the period under consideration, it is strange that Mr. Lattimore on June 24, 1941, was recommended to such a position by the President of the United States and stranger still that the Generalissimo accepted the recommendation. Yet according to T. V. Soong, this appointment of Mr. Lattimore was regarded in Chungking as "a major token of increasing understanding between China and the United States."

The aim of Pacific Affairs is to give information on the developments in the Pacific area as broadly and as completely as possible. During this period in question, the magazine published articles on China or on the Far East in relation to China by the following authors:

- E. SCHUMPEIER, of the Harvard-Radcliffe Bureau of International Research.
- L. ROSINGER, who is now an expert on the Far East of the Foreign Policy Association.
- E. CARLSON, famous colonel of the U. S. Marines, hero of Makin, Saipan, and other battles.
- N. WALES, a well-known writer on problems of China.
- K. BLOCH, writer on the staff of Fortune magazine.
- T. A. BISSON, now with the I. P. R., formerly with the Foreign Policy Association and with the Board of Economic Warfare.
- E. K. LIEF, Chinese economist in service of the National Economic Research, Chungking.
- FRANZ MICHAEL, Professor, University of Washington.
- PHILIP C. JESSUP, Professor, Columbia University.
- WEI MENG-PU, formerly Professor, the Northwestern University of Mukden.
- W. BRANDT, an Australian economist.

GALEN FISHER, former Y. M. C. A. Secretary in Japan.

OWEN LATTIMORE, formerly Personal Adviser to Chiang Kai-shek, and later connected with the Office of War Information, now Director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University.

M. NORRIS, in service with the Library of Congress, Washington.

ANNA LOUISE STRONG, a well-known leftist writer, who has visited China frequently.

It is clear, from this list, that it would have been difficult for Pacific Affairs to have confined itself, even if it had been inclined to do so, to a Communist line.

Let us now examine the record of the Far Eastern Survey. According to Mr. Kohlberg, after August 23, 1939, this publication pursued a policy of abuse of the Chinese Government. Yet the first signs of such "abuse" listed by Mr. Kohlberg are in articles published January 29, 1941, or seventeen months later. The quotations used by Mr. Kohlberg for this period are confined to three months between January 29 and May 5, 1941.

A careful reading of these quotations does not reveal abuse of the Chinese Government. It does, however, show concern over the possibility of a break in the United Front in China, a concern shared, for example by the New York Times. The following items from that newspaper, which certainly cannot be suspected of following the Communist line, reveal considerable interest in the Kuomintang-Communist conflict, certainly no less than that appearing in the Far Eastern Survey:

New York Times:

Jan. 8: Maj. E. F. Carlson reports military forces of China formidable and national spirit high, but cites widespread economic corruption involving trade in Japanese goods; reports Kuomintang-Communist crisis past and United States popularity high, sees continued U. S. S. R. aid.

- May 1: Chungking says USSR war materials transshipment ban does not apply (to Chinese) since all supplies from USSR are Soviet-made.

It is worthy of note that the New York Times of May 2, 1941, includes the following paragraph, which would seem to indicate that the Chinese did not recognize the extensive "abuse" of their country by the IPR, which, according to Mr. Kohlberg, existed during this period:

"Kuo Tai-chi, foreign minister of China, honored by American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations (and other organizations) in New York City."

Perhaps our Chinese friends were more aware than was Mr. Kohlberg of such article as the following in publications of the Institute, which asked for more help for China. As early as in December 1939, for example, Mr. Bisson wrote in Pacific Affairs in an article entitled "Japan Without Germany":

"The Chinese people are fighting for their own independence, but also for the best interests of all the democratic, nonaggression nations. China does not ask for military assistance. It merely asks that these nations, among which the United States now holds a position of decisive power, cease being the armory of its assailant. The time for an answer is long overdue."

Kurt Bloch wrote in the Far Eastern Survey, April 7, 1941:

"Since this information was received, no incidents of civil conflict have been reported here except from Japanese sources. During this time, it is safe to say that the weight of the American Government and of American public opinion has been thrown on the side of China's continued united resistance."

Examination of Mr. Kohlberg's charges shows plainly that Section II of his document has misrepresented the publications of the Institute and, that consciously or unconsciously, he has selected only those quotations which suited his preconceptions.

Section III—Mr. Kohlberg's "Third Communist-Kuomintang Honeymoon"

This period, as defined in the Kohlberg document, began with Hitler's invasion of Russia in June 1941, and ended with the Red Army's triumph at Stalingrad on February 4, 1943. Mr. Kohlberg sees it as a period of "praise of China." According to his letter to the Trustees of the American Council on December 28, however, articles published by the IPR continued to "praise China" for several months after this—until the summer of 1943, to be exact—a discrepancy which would appear to indicate that Mr. Kohlberg himself finds it difficult to prove his own formula.

MR. KOHLBERG'S "THIRD COMMUNIST-KUOMINTANG HONEYMOON"

Furthermore, the articles he lists in this section of his document fail to bear out his contention that this period was one confined to "praise of the Kuomintang and the central government of China. As is the case with respect to other articles cited in his document, the material here, if read in toto, includes both criticism and praise of the Chinese Government, the Kuomintang and the Communists as well.

Mr. Kohlberg's document quoted excerpts of eight articles and one pamphlet. Of these nine writings, two had nothing to do with China. In fact, one—a letter of an anonymous journalist entitled "Why Were We Wrong" did not contain even the word "China." Except for Robert Barnett's "Isolated China," all the remaining six contained certain remarks critical of the Kuomintang government. One, however (by Harriet Moore), may be regarded as defending the Chinese Government; the other (by Lieutenant Uhlman) praises the Communists, and reflected unfavorably on the Kuomintang Government's Chief of staff.

The following are some of the findings which contradict Mr. Kohlberg's contention that IPR publications confined themselves to praise of "China," during this period.

Serious indictments of the Kuomintang as well as laudatory statements about the Chinese people and Chiang Kai-shek were contained in both George Taylor's article Chinese Resistance in North China and his pamphlet Changing China, cited by Mr. Kohlberg. These also contain statements praising the Chinese Communists. In his Oct. 10, 1941 article, Exposing Kuomintang Blockade of the Guerrillas, the following may be noted:

"But now it is very difficult to move from one area to the other (i. e. from the Kuomintang area to guerrilla territories) and much needed medical supplies consigned to North China have not been allowed to pass through the Central Government blockade. The success of the Japanese drive through lower Shansi to the Yellow River can be explained partly in terms of failure to achieve cooperation between the Central Government and the guerrilla forces north of the River" (p. 232).

"There is a constant ebb and flow of political pressure from Chungking which wishes to maintain resistance against the Japanese even up to the gates of Peiping, but always hopes that the people of North China will not be won over entirely to the cause of the Border Government" (p. 233).

Praise of the Communists or guerrillas

"The Border Government, although it has suffered constantly from invasion of its territories, today has as great a measure of political control as at any time in its history. A government which can survive the occupation of nearly every county seat in its area is one which has a firm hold on the imagination of the people * * *. Although the charge has been made that too much time has been spent in political propaganda, it must be admitted that the task of organizing the peasantry of North China into units which could be effectively employed for military and other purposes was enormous" (pp. 236-7).

Again in Taylor's Changing China, 1942:

Government dominated by landlords

"Today their (landlord-gentry's) sons are pilots in the air force, officers in the armies, officials in the government. But because this class prides itself on not doing what the peasantry had to do, work with his hands, the tradition has carried over to the present, and most educated Chinese look down on manual labor as something beneath their dignity" (p. 46).

New classes and gentry

"The new classes in China * * * are the industrialists, bankers, and merchants * * *. They provide many of the new officials; they have power in the Central Government * * *. As so many of them came from the gentry, they are still strongly connected with the land * * *" (p. 47).

The peasantry and landlord and government

"On the back of the peasant is built the whole fabric of Chinese civilization. He does the work, pays the taxes from which he gets no benefits, turns back to the landlord fifty to sixty percent of his harvest as rent, and is robbed and taken advantage of every way he turns" (p. 47).

Chiang Kai-shek and the landlords

"There was a deeper separation, however, in the Nationalist movement (1925-27) than that caused by personal jealousy. This was the split between the right and left wing of the Kuomintang * * *. The left wing * * * wanted to base their power on the peasants and workers of China. The right wing included industrialists, bankers, and merchants who * * * were opposed to changing the system of land ownership. * * *

"The right wing, under Chiang Kai-shek, was alarmed, for many of the army officers came from the families of local gentry. * * * The revolution (of 1925-27) split * * * many thousands of Chinese Communists were killed, and the right wing of the Kuomintang * * * set up a government in Nanking without the Communists" (pp. 66-67).

Chiang's lack of interest in democracy

"He [Chiang] shared their [army officers'] ideas * * *. They did not have the same interest as the intellectuals in democracy and they hated Communism. They wanted to preserve the old order in the villages, for they came from the landed gentry and they did not think that merchants and professors could build a strong China. They had a great admiration for Italy and Germany * * *. They wanted to build a new China by appealing to the old virtues and traditional institutions, not by building up a real democracy" (p. 68).

Kuomintang Government a one-man show

"The Nanking Government, or Kuomintang government, as it is often called, for it was a one-party administration, soon emerged as a one-man show. That man was Chiang Kai-shek" (p. 68).

Chiang and Communists on land reform

"There is much truth to the criticism that Chiang adopted no radical measures to solve the land problem because he founded much of his power on the landlords and did not want to turn them against him" (p. 90).

"The Communists have not arrived at a solution of the land problem, either, but they have made the lot of the peasant easier than it was before" (p. 91).

Guenther Stein's article, if read completely, is also found to contain comments critical of the Kuomintang. In his account, Wartime Government in China, Mr. Stein stated at the very start that "The war has made political reorganization necessary for China." Yet he found "a comparatively small number of men, mostly well-known and prominent in Chinese political affairs long before the war, held the decisive positions. Little new blood has been added, and much of the expansion of government activity has been carried out through a combination of a number of functions and activities in the hands of already important political leaders."

Mr. Kohlberg's own marginal notes on the passages he lifted from the next article listed—Y. Y. Hsu's China's First Two Years of a Tax in Kind—indicate the critical nature of the article, despite the fact that this is supposed to be a "Communist-Kuomintang honeymoon period."

And the Uhlman article, Land of the Five Withouts, likewise did not "praise" the Kuomintang: in fact, the Kuomintang Gen. Ho Ying-ching was referred to therein as pro-Japanese.

Mr. Kohlberg also cited a statement by Under Secretary of State Welles on American policy toward China. Although occasioned by an interview with an American Communist leader, this constituted an important diplomatic declaration. The Far Eastern Survey would certainly be unworthy of its name without taking notice of such an announcement. To link it with a charge of Communist leanings is tantamount to labeling as Communist, all newspapers headlining the Russian Army's advance against Hitler.

There is no evidence here of any "period" in the sense indicated by Mr. Kohlberg. It may be noticed, however, that Pearl Harbor and developments after America's entrance into the war influenced writers in this country. Immediately after the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor by the Japanese, and the loss of Singapore and the Dutch East Indies, Anglo-Americans were overwhelmed with a sense of humiliation. They tended to become more critical of themselves and tolerant of their allies. But with the turn of the war tide in the Pacific they regained their confidence. With the return of Stilwell in May 1943, to confer with the American Supreme Command on the strategy of the war on the Asiatic mainland was the occasion for the American writers began to consider the potentialities of China in the war.

Outspoken criticism of China began about this time. Mr. Hanson Baldwin blazed the path by belittling China right and left. In contrast, however, critical articles in the Far Eastern Survey, tried as a rule to evaluate not only the weaknesses apparent in China's situation, but the positive sides as well.

MR. KOHLBERG'S SECOND PERIOD OF ABUSE OF CHINA

Section IV—The Period Since February 1943 (Abuse of China)

During the 1940-43 period in China, economic, political, and military deterioration had seriously reduced the fighting strength of the Chinese Government and its central armies. Recognition of this fact occurred first in Washington, but by 1943, writers such as Pearl Buck, Hanson Baldwin, and T. A. Bisson were informing the American public of the situation. In China itself, Kuomintang leaders such as Sun Fo were voicing criticisms of the politically and economically repressive policies of the Chinese central authorities. These persons were calling attention to weaknesses in the government organization as the basic problem, and not merely to lack of military supplies as the leading Chinese authorities maintained. Yet all of the critics of Chungking's policies cited by Kohlberg were at the same time demanding that more supplies be sent to China.

The warnings by American publicists were borne out by the military crisis which developed in 1944. In half a dozen provinces, large Kuomintang armies crumbled in the face of a well-planned Japanese offensive. This collapse seriously affected the American position in China. General Stilwell was withdrawn, and Ambassador Gauss resigned. A new set of American officials was sent to China. Donald Nelson sought to ameliorate economic conditions, General Hurley tried to overcome political disunity, while General Wedemeyer attempted to strengthen the Chinese armies.

These developments have proved to be a central feature of the Pacific War in 1944-45. For their potential effects on the remainder of the war, and even more on the postwar future of the Far East, they might well be ranked as the outstanding feature of this period. The question thus arises: Were those writers and Far Eastern specialists who first called attention to this problem in 1943 at fault or were they in fact performing a necessary service, both to the American public and to the United Nations as a whole? And following from this—was it out of place that, among various American writers calling attention to the problem, some of these should be staff members of the Institute of Pacific Relations? Had this not been the case, the Institute staff might well be accused of falling below the level of penetration displayed by outside writers in analysis of Far Eastern conditions—the specific function of the Institute.

Pp. 24-25 "China's Part in Coalition War." Far Eastern Survey, July 14, 1943, pp. 135-141, T. A. Bisson.

This is a critical article, as Kohlberg maintains. Yet the article states that American aid to China has been "pitifully meager" and that China has had "legitimate grievances." Kohlberg's document omits these qualifications.

Note that Kohlberg's "Timing" as to his parallel Communist sources (p. 25) do not hold up, since they are all prior to the summer of 1943. The New Masses articles, as cited, are dated October 7, 1937, February 8, 1938, and January 28, 1941, while the article cited from the Communist is dated March 1941. These citations thus have no validity so far as proving a parallel in timing between IPR articles and Communist-published articles. Moreover, the first two of the critical articles from the Communist press fall within the period (prior to the pact of August 23, 1939) when the Communist "line" is stated by Kohlberg to be one of praise for the Chinese government. In this case, then, even the Communist-published articles do not conform to the time divisions set up by Kohlberg.

Note also that Kohlberg labels the Bisson article "Blast #1." But the timing falls down here, too. Pearl Buck's article in Life, critical of political repression in China, appeared on May 10, 1943, two months before the Bisson article. Kohlberg should therefore attribute "Blast #1" to Pearl Buck, not to an IPR writer. In this article, "A Warning About China," Miss Buck, acknowledged by even Mr. Kohlberg as a great friend of China, makes the following statements: "American friendship for China has at this moment reached a popular height which brings it to the verge of sentimentality. The Chinese are being exalted into persons such as cannot exist in our fallible human race. A dose of common sense is needed. If the dose is not taken in time those who have rushed to give gifts, those who have sold valued possessions, as some have, to make a gift, are going to wake up one morning condemning China and all Chinese, and then they will regret their possessions and feel ashamed of their emotionalism, and isolationists will make the most of this disillusionment. But the Chinese people deserve neither adoration nor condemnation. They do deserve understanding and help, and that we may give what they deserve, it is necessary for a friendly diagnosis to be made now of China's present condition" (p. 53).

"Already, undemocratic forces, which could not do their evil work so long as China was hopeful of her place as an equal ally of the United States and England, have been strengthened by our policy which has relegated Japan to the place of a secondary enemy, allowing Burma to be lost and the line to China cut. In the isolation and helplessness of China those in the government there who were voices for the people and for democracy cannot speak loudly and clearly as once they did, as they did when they were promising their people effective aid from us. Division within China is deepening in spite of the fact that the leadership and the genius of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek are not yet being challenged." (P. 53.)

"And now come these reports from China, even from Chinese sources themselves, that there are signs that in China this is ceasing to be a people's war. The great liberal forces of the recent past in China are growing silent. The center of liberalism in China for the past two generations has been in the students and teachers. Nowhere in the world have the young and intelligent played so heroic a part as in China. Their courage, their self-sacrifice, even to the lives of thousands who dared to oppose the officials, have provided the strongest correctives to bureaucracy and official corruption. Now those students are ceasing to speak. As China becomes more isolated the power of bureaucrats is growing. Oppressive elements in the government are becoming more oppressive. Chungking is a place where free speech is less and less possible and those who want to be free are going to other places.

"These oppressive influences extend even into the Generalissimo's family. We who are the American people would be better pleased if we could hear the voice of Madame Sun Yat-sen today. It was Sun Yat-sen who provided for the Chinese people the clear direction toward modern democracy. Why is it necessary for Madame Sun Yat-sen to be silent? The people believe in her. It is not only fear, it is also hopelessness which deepens the people's silence. Economic conditions in China at this hour are so appalling that the persons who might be the leaders for freedom are turning away from public service and are taking up better paid jobs. More and more students, for example, are discreetly specializing in money and banking. Cynicism is killing the spirits and hunger is killing the bodies of those who were once such a strong and purifying political force.

"Yet the Chinese people are agreed that certain evils now existing must go and certain reforms must be established if China is to continue as a democracy. The chief evil that must go is official corruption, first in high places but everywhere as quickly as possible. The only way to get rid of this corruption is to put into the hands of the people the power to accuse and dismiss their officials when corruption is proved" (p. 54).

"In this state of mutual uncertainty it is inevitable that certain forces are for the moment strengthening themselves as they tend to do in similar periods in any country. There is now no real freedom of the press in China, no freedom of speech. The official implement of repression is an organization far more severe than the secret service of a democracy ought to be, for insecurity of individuals in power breeds repression upon the people. These antidemocratic forces are being strengthened now, and not only by China's isolation" (p. 54).

Previous references to the internal situation in China may also be found, as, for example, in the leading article in The Shanghai Evening Post and Mercury, April 23, 1943. Under the heading "U. S.-Chinese Views Seen As Diverging" Earl H. Leaf, Managing Editor, says in part:

"Misunderstandings arise concerning the use or misuse of American supplies sent to China. Communist sympathizers repeatedly charged that the U. S. supplies were being employed to arm Central Government troops against the Chinese Red Armies.

"Independent check-up on these reports has revealed some puzzling aspects of the internal Chinese situation as, for example, the fact that Gen. Hu Tzu-nan's troops, who face the Communists and have never yet fought a battle with the Japanese, turn out to be the best-equipped, best-paid, and best-fed army in China. Hence, some influential American officials, fearing civil war in China, reinclined towards holding back supplies. Chinese army leaders have an explanation for that situation, but many Chinese and American officials do not see eye to eye about it."

In the same issue of The Shanghai Evening Post and Mercury, in an editorial (p. 4), it is stated:

"The foregoing hard realities (military) and many others, notably the alarming inflationary situation and growing malnutrition affecting even the Chinese army, must be faced. There are other factors of encouraging sort. Nowhere, it is agreed, is there any sign of surrender to or appeasement of the Japanese. (Neither is there much sign that a war is on, aside from high prices and shortages—and 'fighting fronts' in China are mostly nonexistent except sporadically.)"

In August 1943, Reader's Digest published an article entitled "Too Much Wishful Thinking About China," written by Hanson W. Baldwin, military analyst of the New York Times. The author discussed the average American's conceptions of China, and states (pp. 63, 64) :

"Unfortunately, the China of such dreams is far from reality. Missionaries, war-relief drives, able ambassadors, and the movies have oversold us. China has become not merely China but the royal road to victory in the Pacific.

"China has needed no such overselling. Her people are plainly courageous; their patient fortitude and philosophic resignation are unmatched. But an enumeration of her virtues should not blind us to her weaknesses; above all, it should not lead us to a fallacious conception of Pacific strategy."

"She has as yet no real army as we understand the term; most of her troops are poorly led and incapable of effectively utilizing modern arms. They require intensive and protracted training, and capable leaders bound together by a common loyalty to a common cause. Today there are few such leaders; too many of them are still old war lords, in new clothing, for whom war is a means for personal aggrandizement and enrichment.

"The truth about China—known to a few, but not to millions of Americans—is that the military situation there today is bad, has been bad for two years, and will probably continue to be bad for some years to come."

"The Chinese communiqués are almost worthless for obtaining a true picture. Had they suffered even half the casualties the Chinese have claimed, the Japanese would by now have given evidence of a manpower shortage. Sometimes the Chinese report battles where there are no battles; often they exalt skirmishes and guerrilla fighting to the status of campaigns. In the recent Tungting Lake-Ichang fighting, for example, the Japanese almost certainly never intended—as reports from China claimed—to try to take Chungking. Their objective patently was the rich Chinese rice-bowl region around Tungting Lake; they took some of it, sacked it and retired. Yet Chinese communiqués interpreted the Japanese retirement as a great victory."

In quoting these above statements, we neither endorse nor criticize them. They are presented simply to disprove the assertion that in discussing the situation in China the I R followed any "line," Communist or otherwise. The logical fallacy in attempting to prove by analogy was pointed out by Miss Buck in a letter to the New York Herald Tribune, published August 20, 1943. She begins by stating that she had welcomed Rodney Gilbert's reply (Herald Tribune, August 16 and 17, 1943) to Mr. Baldwin's Reader's Digest article. Then Miss Buck says:

"Mr. Gilbert himself, however, falls into the easy error of oversimplification. That is, because one objects to Fascist tendencies in China, as one objects to them elsewhere, he leaps to the conclusion that one must be pro-Communist. This tendency to oversimplification is everywhere seen in these peculiar times in which we live."

Contrary to the pattern laid down by Mr. Kohlberg, IPR publications during the summer and fall of 1943 contained material favorable to or praising the Chinese authorities. Among others, the following should be noted:

The Far Eastern Survey for July 28, 1943—the issue immediately succeeding that containing Bisson's article—carries a leading editorial article praising a set of principles enunciated by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on July 7, 1943. The following quotations from this editorial article are pertinent:

"The destiny of China is one and the same as that of the United Nations—so is China's policy. Those are the words of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, spoken on the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the war in China.

"What China sees as her policy and her destiny is that of contributing her full strength, not only to bring the war to a successful conclusion, but also to establish a strong postwar organization which will ensure the peace.

"* * * His (Chiang Kai-shek's) statement of China's hopes in this connection is forthright and challenging, and deserves wider attention than it has had in the American press." There follows a long series of quotations from Chiang Kai-shek's address (pp. 147-48).

This editorial article was signed by Catherine Porter, editor of the Far Eastern Survey. It would indicate that the editor of the Survey was not seeking to include only materials critical of China in the magazine during this period.

In a friendly analysis entitled "China's Political Development" (Far Eastern Survey, October 6, 1943), N. C. Liu, Professor of Political Science at National Wuhan University of China, discusses the meaning of "democracy," and its applications in China. He concludes by saying:

"From the foregoing paragraphs, we may conclude that, since the downfall of the monarchy, popular support for the republic has always been strong and that the foundation for democratic government is thereby firmly laid; that we have for the moment, indeed, only a partially representative government but we are ready to organize true responsible government in the near future; that restrictions are, to be sure, being imposed on popular rights and liberties in wartime, but these will be swept away in time of peace; that, as the different parties are now reconciled, there is no reason to suppose that they cannot adjust their political differences in time to come; and that, as we had the traditional form of popular participation in local affairs, legal codification is certainly a step forward. In short, it may be accurate to say that China, being a republic, is dedicated to and will make great strides toward democracy in the world of tomorrow."

The September 1943 issue of Pacific Affairs, the first issue of this quarterly which followed publication of Bisson's article, contains an article by Guenther Stein entitled "Free China's Agricultural Progress." The first sentence of this article reads: "The collection of rice and wheat, partly by way of land tax payments in kind and partly by compulsory purchase, has become one of the most successful economic policies of the Chinese Government." Statistical data given in the rest of the article is devoted mainly to proving the thesis stated in the first sentence, although the conclusion stresses the need for agrarian reforms (pp. 330-343).

This article would again indicate that the IPR publications of the period were not concentrating on abuse of the Chinese central government.

Many of the criticisms contained in the Bisson article had been voiced by the Chinese themselves. Sun Fo, president of the Legislative Yuan and Kuomintang leader, spoke as follows on September 8, 1942 (eight months before the Bisson article), in a lecture delivered at Chungking:

"At present, grain collection has not yet reached its saturation point; the system employed in levying and buying needs to be much improved. The share contributed by most of the landowning class is still too light, while self-cultivators and tenant farmers are bearing too heavy a burden. Landowners as a whole have reaped large fortunes these few years; those who collect their rent in kind and receive grain amounting to several hundred piculs a year are living lavishly. Big landlords are proportionally much better off than in prewar days."

"* * * At present, big landlords are acquiring real estate with their unused and unusable wealth from small landowners, mostly self-cultivators, so that the wealth produced on the land becomes harmful rather than beneficial to the nation. If they invested their money in industries, it would be quite different. But instead of doing so, they buy more and more farm lands. Land values are thus bolstered up ten, twenty, fifty times; but the agricultural products gathered therefrom cannot be increased in any such proportion. Hence, nine-tenths of the money sunk in such investments is lying idle from the nation's point of view; and, what is worse, the cost of rice, and with it the general cost of living, are artificially raised to incredible heights in order to pay proper interest on their uneconomic investments" (Sun Fo, China Looks Forward, John Day, 1944, pp. 145-146).

Sun Fo is not averse to using the word "feudal," which Kohlberg takes exception to in the Bisson article. On page 224 he writes: "Not only the traditional system of land tenure which still smacks of peasant feudalism, but also the antiquated and inefficient method of small-farm individual tilling shall be abandoned, and in their places substitutes state or common ownership of land and collective and cooperative cultivation."

Note that in the first of the above quotations, Sun Fo is extremely critical of the grain tax in kind. But Guenther Stein, one of the IPR writers cited by Kohlberg, wrote favorably in Pacific Affairs (as cited above) of the grain collections. In this case, the "critical" IPR writer falls behind Sun Fo in his criticism.

Sun Fo is also highly critical of the political repression and lack of democracy which characterizes the Kuomintang Government at Chungking. On pages 108-109 of China Looks Forward, he writes:

"Unfortunately, we have in the past assumed unwillingly the attitude and habit of a ruling caste. The suppression of outside criticism against our party, and even criticism by our party members is less than one percent of the Chinese population. The Kuomintang is simply a minority in terms of population. But we have come to regard ourselves as if we were the sovereign power entitled to the enjoyment of a special position and to the suppression of all criticism whatsoever against us. It is dictatorship and tyranny which the peoples of the world today are trying to destroy by means of sacrifices of their lives, and blood. For these reasons, we must, first of all, reorientate our psychology and correct our attitude of intolerance."

On page 119 of China Looks Forward he writes:

"I think there is something wrong with our method of approach. The San-Min-Chu-I Youth Corps is supposed to train and organize the promising youth of the nation for national service and leadership. This is done by instituting political training and military discipline. Instead of guiding them to think for themselves, it has been drilling them to repeat by rote the San-Min-Chu-I political creed. Instead of teaching them the methods of democratic practice and leadership, it has been imposing upon them military regimentation in the name of discipline. Discipline, of course, is required to habituate them to law and order. But the thing may be overdone. As a result, the people we are turning out from the various training centers become rather like puppets. The first thing they learn to perfection is how to click heels at the mention of, or mere reference to, the Supreme Leader. Heel-clicking may be proper in the army, but it is not appropriate in a democratic country. For instance, you don't see Englishmen jumping up from their seats and clicking their heels at the mere mention of their sovereign's name, or have you ever seen or heard that Americans at home or abroad would click heels every time President Roosevelt's name is mentioned, even at their political party meetings? The only examples of such practice that I know of were Russian emigre officers when they spoke of their dead Czar, and the German Nazis heel-Hitlering their Fuhrer. But why should we adopt the outmoded practice of the Czarist Russians or imitate the behavior of our Nazi enemies?"

P. 26 "Japan's Army on China's Fronts," Guenther Stein, Far Eastern Survey, July 14, 1943

Mr. Kohlberg here uses comparative "official Chinese figures" to prove that Guenther Stein underestimated the number of Japanese troops in China. He fails to note, however, that Guenther Stein's material was broadcast by short wave from the Chinese government's station at Chungking. As such, his figures were subject to censorship. If there was any marked discrepancy, the official censors would doubtless have acted, especially on a matter dealing so closely with military affairs. Actually, the discrepancy is more apparent than real.

Guenther Stein counted a total of 30 Japanese divisions "in use" at a given moment. Kohlberg's figures state that 42 divisions were "used" in 1943, but not all of these may have been "in use" at the time Stein made his estimate—based, incidentally, on Chinese official sources.

P. 26 Far Eastern Survey, May 3, 1944

Here Mr. Kohlberg quotes from a statement by Sun Fo as cited in the Survey. His quotations carefully eliminate the serious political charges against the Kuomintang made by Sun Fo in this statement. The quotations in the Survey give Sun Fo's full meaning. A comparison of Mr. Kohlberg's selection with the Survey article in this case offers the most striking evidence of bias on the part of Mr. Kohlberg and not on the part of the Survey. He states one side; the Survey states both.

Mr. Kohlberg then omits all quotation from a parallel statement by Raymond Gram Swing included in this Survey article.

P. 37 Behind the Open Door, by Foster Rhea Dulles

Mr. Kohlberg cites two paragraphs from this booklet, which run to 32 pages. The citations indicate that the Soviet Union signed the neutrality treaty with Japan "to protect Russia's eastern flank in order that she might be the more free to defend her western front against the far greater menace of Germany." They also state that both the United States and the Soviet Union "are equally concerned in the defeat of Japan and the creation of a strong, independent China. There should therefore be no conflict in the post-war policies of these two great powers fronting the Pacific. It is highly important that they should reach a full understanding on all Far Eastern problems. A cordial American-Russian relationship would contribute much to the future peace of Asia."

It is difficult, indeed, to find anything objectionable in these statements.

EXHIBIT No. 71

COMPARISON OF MCCARTHY AND KOHLBERG

Kohlberg

Appointed Editor Pacific Affairs, 1934. Accompanied E. C. Carter to Moscow. "This trip apparently completed his conversion to an admiration of the Soviet Union's system of government" (China Monthly, Oct. 1945).

"Lattimore told a friend (Freda Utley) in London in 1936 that he almost lost his job for publishing an article by Harold Isaacs, a Trotskyite" (China Monthly, Oct. 1945).

"Lattimore continued with other duties including service on the editorial board of AMERASIA and the editorship of Pacific Affairs until 1941" (China Monthly, Oct. 1945).

Kohlberg's version of the Communist line as allegedly followed by IPR and IPR publications in reference to Chinese government.

(Letter from Alfred Kohlberg dated March 18, 1947, to members of AIPR:)

(1) "Beginning 1-37 and up to the end of 1939, the IPR articles uniformly praised the government of Chiang Kai-shek."

(2) "After the Hitler-Stalin alliance of Aug. 23, 1939, the IPR soured on Chiang Kai-shek and by 1941 were stating that in the government of China 'uncertain quarters were "pro-Nazi" and were "willing to make peace with Japan."' Fascist ideas were popularized among and praised by Kuomintang members." (Compare Lattimore's secret letter to E. C. Carter in the enclosed article from Plain Talk).

(3) "Then came the day that shook the pro-Communist world when Hitler invaded Russia, June 22, 1941. That day was a Sunday if I remember correctly and it caught Frederick V. Field, formerly Secretary and now member of the Executive Committee of the IPR leading the picket line in front of the White House with placards proclaiming 'FDR is a War-Monger. * * * This same day caught the IPR and the Communist press equally flatfooted. So the IPR and Communist line switched again to the most fulsome praise of Chiang Kai-shek and the Kuomintang. * * * No longer did they charge Chiang Kai-shek with 'negotiating to join the Axis.' This praise of Chiang Kai-shek's government continued until the summer of 1943."

(4) "Beginning in the summer of 1943, both IPR and the Communist press changed to abuse of China."

McCarthy

McCarthy notes somewhere on page 231-35 in a hearing that Lattimore was editor of Pacific Affairs from 1934-1941.

McCarthy, in a hearing (p. 194) quotes from Freda Utley's book LOST ILUSTON "he [Lattimore] told me a few months later in London how he almost lost his position as Editor of Pacific Affairs because he had published an article by the Trotskyist, Harold Isaacs."

P. 226 (Hearing Record) introduced Exhibit L-2 which connected Lattimore with Amerasia editorial board.

(Page 440, Cong. Record, March 30, 1950:)" "In 1935 at the World Communist meeting in Moscow * * * the so-called United Front or Trojan horse policy was adopted—a policy calling for the Communists to combine with the governments in power and to get into strategic positions so that Moscow could control or at least exert influence on governments in question. At this time in 1935 * * * Chiang Kai-shek made an agreement with the Chinese Communists.

"From 1935 to 1939 the Communist line was pro-Chiang Kai-shek.

"In 1939 after the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Pact and the Stalin-Mat-souka Pact, the Communist Party line again became anti-Chiang Kai-shek.

"As the Senate will recall, this continued until June 22, 1941, the day Hitler invaded Russia, at which time the Communist Party line again switched and was pro-Chiang Kai-shek.

"This continued until 1943. The Senate will recall the Russian victory at Stalingrad in the early spring of 1943 and the reversal in the course of the war at that point. * * * The Communist Party line again definitely became anti-Chiang Kai-shek."

Lattimore Defended Purge Trials (China Monthly, Oct. 1945): The real point, of course, for those who live in democratic countries, is whether the discovery of the conspiracies was a triumph for democracy or not. I think that can be easily determined. The accounts of the most widely read Moscow correspondents all emphasize that since the close scrutiny of every person in a responsible position, following the trials, a great many abuses have been discovered and rectified. A lot depends on whether you emphasize the discovery of the abuse or the rectification of it; but habitual rectification can hardly do anything but give the ordinary citizen more courage to protest, loudly, whenever in the future he finds himself being victimized by "someone in the party" or "someone in the Government." That sounds to me like democracy. Pacific Affairs, Sept. 1938, p. 371.

Book jacket SOLUTION IN ASIA quoted by Kohlberg (China Monthly, Oct. 1945): He shows that all the Asiatic peoples are more interested in actual democratic practices, such as they see in action across the Russian border, than they are in the fine theories of Anglo-Saxon democracies which come coupled with ruthless imperialism. He inclines to support American newspapermen who report that the only real democracy in China is found in Communist areas.

Solution in Asia. The jacket.

Article, "I. P. R.—Tokyo Axis" by Sheppard Marley in Plain Talk, Dec. 19, 1946 (attached). In which was discussed IPR as action and pressure group.

Letter to Watertown Daily Times, Watertown, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1946: Attacked Lattimore for his alleged shift in attitude toward Chiang between 1943 and 1946.

Letter to members of IPR, March 18, 1947: "Members of our Board of Trustees and our Staff managed to get control of the Far Eastern Division of the State Dept., UNRRA, and OWI where they loaded all three with pro-Communists. Two of them, Owen Lattimore and John Carter Vincent, accompanied Henry Wallace to China in 1944 and talked that adolescent into reporting to Roosevelt that 'we were backing the wrong horse in China. * * *'"

On page 237 of the Hearing Record McCarthy says: "Mr. Lattimore praised the net result of the Moscow trials and the blood purge by which Stalin secured his dictatorship in 1936-1939 'as a triumph for democracy.'"

(Page 4447, Cong. Record, March 30, 1950): "This is what the editor says about the book: 'He shows that all Asiatic people are more interested in actual democratic practices such as the ones they can see in action across the Russian border than they are in the fine theories of Anglo-Saxon democracies which come coupled with ruthless imperialism. * * *' He inclines to support American newspapermen who report that the only real democracy in China is found in Communist areas."

Article read into record by McCarthy (Pages 4461 to 4463, Cong. Record).

(Cong. Record, p. 4441:) "The Senate will recall the date of this letter, June 15, 1943, the time when Chiang Kai-shek was our very badly needed ally in the Pacific. * * * It was at this time that Lattimore sends this highly secret letter in which he twice urges the strictest secrecy be followed in getting rid of any Chinese who are loyal to our ally, Chiang Kai-shek. * * *"

(Cong. Record, p. 4447:) "In 1944 he [Lattimore] and John Carter Vincent accompanied Henry Wallace on a tour of China after which Wallace made his report to the State Dept., recommending the torpedoing on Chiang Kai-shek."

"Owen Lattimore, Director, School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University. Advisor to Pres. Roosevelt, Pres. Truman, Henry Wallace, was connected with pro-Communist Nat'l Emergency Conference for Protection of Human Rights; Washington Committee to Aid China, Writers Congress, Defense of Moscow Purge Trials, Associate editor of Amerasia. Maintains liaison with heads of Communist Party. Reportedly operative for Soviet Military Intelligence in Far East."

(Hearing Record, pp. 259-62:) Associates Lattimore with Maryland Asso. for Democratic Rights which he alleges to be an affiliate of the Nat'l Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights.

Principal speaker at meeting of Wash. Committee for Aid to China.

On Oct. 1, 2, 3, of 1943 meeting of Writers Congress and Hollywood Writers of Mobilization at the Univ. of Calif., L. A., campus in Westwood "appearing as the representative of the Office of War Information was Mr. Owen Lattimore."

"In the magazine Pacific Affairs of Sept. 1938, Owen Lattimore described the Moscow Purge Trials as a 'triumph for Democracy.'

See previous statement by Kohlberg.

(Page 4445, Cong. Rec. :) "The testimony will be that the head of the Russian Intelligence told this witness [the Russian General] * * * that they were having excellent success through the Institute of Pacific Relations which the Soviet Intelligence through Communists in the U. S. had taken over. In connection with this he particularly mentioned Owen Lattimore. * * *"

(China Monthly, Oct. 1948:) "Lattimore, head of OWI Far East Division, San Francisco, sent orders to his superior in New York (Joseph F. Barnes, later Foreign Editor N. Y. Herald Tribune * * *) to fire all Chinese staff members who sympathized with their own government and replace them with Communist from the newly launched New China Daily News, New York Chinese language daily."

(Cong. Record, p. 4440:) "This is a letter * * * dated 6-15-1943 which is when the line had again swung to anti-Chiang Kai-shek. This is a letter from Owen Lattimore, Director of Pacific Operations, OWI. The odd thing is that he is writing to his boss in the government service, telling the story to him, not writing to someone who is working for him. * * *"

"In it he directs the recipient of the letter to get rid of the Chinese in OWI who were loyal to either the Nationalist gov't or Wang Ching-wei. * * *"

"He then issues instructions that the personnel be recruited from the shareholders of the New China Daily News, a Chinese Communist paper in New York."

(China Monthly, Dec. 1949, p. 243:) "The White Paper and the State Dept. categorically deny that Vice President Wallace made any written report to Pres. Roosevelt on his return from China. In spite of this denial, Amb. Hurley states that he read Mr. Wallace's report which was shown to him by John Carter Vincent who accompanied Wallace."

(China Monthly, Sept. 1946, p. 325:) "Editorial suggestions (according to the introduction) were made by John Hazard, Owen Lattimore, Joseph Barnes, Albert Rhys Taylor, and Dr. Treadwell Smith. * * *"

Kohlberg's article "China via Stilwell Road," China Monthly, Oct. 1948, has the central idea that Stilwell was a sucker for Owen Lattimore and others such as Theodore White, John Fairbank, and Joseph Barnes.

(Article entitled "Who Is Responsible for Chinese Tragedy" China Monthly, Dec. 1949:) Main thesis is that a pro-Soviet clique headed by Dean Acheson was responsible for yielding China to Communists.

(Letter to members of IPR, March 18, 1947:) "Our Board of Trustees (47) scattered all over the country never meets. The Executive Committee (10) is chaired by a Californian who never attends. The connections of the others are as per attached sheet. Most of our Trustees are of course not Communists. * * *"

(Cong. Record, p. 4447:) "Incidentally in this connection the State Dept. issued a press release * * * denying the existence of such a report and stating as follows:"

(Cong. Record, p. 4447:) Upon his return from this trip, Henry Wallace wrote a book entitled SOVIET ASIA MISSION in which he pay tribute to Owen Lattimore for his invaluable assistance.

(Cong. Record, p. 4445:) "I think Lattimore was as much responsible if not more so for Stilwell's activities in China than any other one individual."

(Cong. Record, p. 4446:) "He [a mystery witness] points out that: the Lattimore crowd was responsible for the indoctrination of Stilwell against Chiang Kai-shek."

(Cong. Record, p. 4445:) "* * * I am sure that if the Senator will sit here and will listen to the material which I am presenting he will be convinced that the clique of Lattimore, Jessup, and Service has been responsible, almost completely—under Acheson of course—for what went on in the Far East. * * *"

(Cong. Record, p. 4463:) "Since its creation it has had on both Board of Trustees and Executive Committee a very sizeable number of outstanding and loyal Americans. Membership on the Board of Trustees or on the Executive Committee in no way in and of itself indicates any Communist sympathies or leanings. * * * However, as far as I know, the Board actually never meets but does its business by having the various members send in their proxies.

(Cong. Record, p. 4447:) "* * * the reports from its foreign service officials in China during the war as given in the White Paper read like extracts from Lattimore's books. * * * These Chinese Communists are represented by Lattimore and his friends in the State Dept., as 'democrats', 'liberal agrarian reformers', 'progressives not under Moscow's direction' or more recently as 'detachable from' Soviet Russia."

(China Monthly, Aug. 1949:) "Under Philip Jessup's direction the Far Eastern Survey of July 14, 1943, the first blast in the campaign against the Nationalist government of China was published." "Referring to what is called the two Chinas, it said in an article signed by T. A. Bisson. * * *

(China Monthly, Aug. 1949:) "One is now generally called Kuomintang China, the other is called Communist China. However, these are only Party labels. To be more descriptive, the one might be called feudal China, the other democratic China." (Bisson's statement).

"This theme song of Democratic Communist China and 'feudal fascist reactionary' Nationalist China was taken up the following month by the Daily Worker, the New Masses, and others."

(China Monthly, Aug. 1949:) "When charges of Communist-line activities were made against the IPR in 1947 he signed a letter denying the charges and questioning motives behind such charges. When the question of appointing a committee to investigate came before a membership meeting, he voted against any investigation."

(China Monthly, Aug. 1949, p. 168:) "Professor Jessup must therefore be honored by our State Dept., as the initiator of the smear campaign against Nationalist China and Chiang Kai-shek, and the originator of the myth of the democratic Chinese Communists."

(China Monthly, August 1949, p. 168:) Communist fronts sponsored by Jessup according to Kohlberg:
The American-Russian Institute
National Emergency Conference
American Law Students Asso.
Nat'l Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights
Coordinating Committee to Lift the Embargo

(Cong. Record, p. 4463:) "The first blast in this campaign was fired in Jessup's publication on July 14, 1943, in an article signed by T. A. Bisson."

"Under him [Dr. Jessup] the Council bi-weekly publication, Far Eastern Survey, pioneered the smear campaign against Chiang Kai-shek, and the idea the Communists in China were merely agrarian reformers and not Communists at all."

(Page 4464:) "Prof. Jessup must, therefore, be credited by the American people with having pioneered the smear campaign against Nationalist China and Chiang Kai-shek, and with being the originator of the myth of the "Democratic" Chinese Communists. From that time onward we witness the spectacle of this 3-horse team of smears and untruths thundering down the stretch—Jessup's publications, Far Eastern Survey, the Daily Worker, and Ivestzia."

(Jessup) (Cong. Record, p. 4460:) "In 1947 one of the members of the board, one of the good American members, insisted that there be an investigation to determine extent to which the Communists had taken over control of the American Council of IRP [sic]. That was very vigorously opposed. Keep in mind that at that time Frederick V. Field was a member of the Board. Hiss was then a member or was shortly thereafter. One of the men who vigorously protested, and sent a letter over his name, which I have, objecting strenuously to any such investigation, was our Ambassador at Large, Philip Jessup."

In his last speech to the Senate the late Senator William E. Borah said: "So long as the Bill of Rights stands and is preserved in its integrity, so long as we live up to its terms and conditions, there can be no denial of free speech, of free press, no religious persecution, no arbitrary government, no concentration camps, no breaking into homes, no unlawful arrests, no denial of personal liberty. When so-called emergency legislation strikes at this sacred document in any particular it should be stricken down without hesitancy. If doubts are to be indulged in, they should be resolved against all possible encroachments."

This Conference has been called to provide an opportunity in these difficult, hysterical times for people to stop and think things out clearly, for what is needed now is clarity and courage, not suspicion and fear. The Maryland Association for Democratic Rights hopes and believes that individuals and organizations will want to join with it in its program for the defense of democratic institutions.

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS AND TELEGRAMS FROM SCHOLARS WITH A PROFESSIONAL KNOWLEDGE OF OWEN LATTIMORE'S WORK

NATHANIEL PEFFER, Prof. of International Relations, Columbia Univ. Author: Basis for Peace in the Far East; America's Place in the World.

I think if you canvass all the Far Eastern people in this country, including all who have known Lattimore long and well, that you will have an almost unanimous vote of confidence as to his character and integrity. I doubt whether you will find anybody in that class in whose mind the question has ever arisen.

To say that he is a Russian agent is fantastic or lunatic. In any event it must be clear that the effect on himself, his family, and his career is or can be tragic. In that sense the whole episode is dreadfully unfair.

If I seem to use strong language, please believe me, it is not stronger than the feeling of most of us.

DERK BODDE, Asso. Prof. of Chinese, Univ. of Penna. Author: China's First Unifier, etc.

I hope you will forgive me for speaking my mind very strongly but I can no longer refrain from expressing my disgust and abhorrence at the antics taking place in Washington which have culminated in the case of Owen Lattimore. Knowing Mr. Lattimore as I have for many years, the charges are so utterly ridiculous that it is hard for me to believe that any seriously minded person can take them at their face value. If they deserved a hearing at all, the least that could be done, on the grounds of common decency, would be to conduct the hearings in camera. The present policy of splashing them across the headlines of the world press not only throws unjustified vilification on loyal Americans who are doing their best for their country, and drives intelligent men out of government employment at a time when their knowledge and skills are most needed. It also weakens our foreign policy by presenting the outside world with a picture of a divided America, and most important of all, makes a farce of the democratic process as it operates in this country. I speak with some feeling on this last point, having recently returned from a year in China where I had the chance to have contacts with numerous non-Communist Chinese intellectuals who were once favorably disposed to the United States but no longer are so today. I can well imagine these men, as they read the accounts of the Washington investigations well played up in the Chinese Communist press, saying to themselves: "If this is the best American democracy can show for itself, we want no part of it." In short, what is now happening in Washington provides Communists in China and elsewhere with unparalleled anti-American propaganda.

PAUL M. A. LINEBARGER, Professor of Asiatic Politics, School of Advanced International Studies, Washington, D. C. Author: The Political Doctrines of Sun Yat-Sen; The China of Chiang Kai-Shek, etc.:

Having opposed the views of Owen Lattimore for some years with respect to America's China policy, I feel that I am entitled to protest the fantastic way in which Lattimore has been injured without opportunity of previous hearing or of subsequent redress commensurate to the damage done him.

I have opposed the weak and silly policy of the State Department toward the Kuomintang, which I respect. I have regarded the Marshall mission as a wild-goose chase. I have supported the pro-Chiang and anti-Lattimore viewpoint for some years. But I draw the line at hearing the issue in this fashion.

If Lattimore is a "master spy," the Saturday Evening Post is a voice of Moscow, General Marshall a traitor, and Elmer Davis a rascal.

There is a case against Lattimore's views. I have tried to make it as a Federal Employee, as a G-2 officer in Stilwell's headquarters, as a Joint Chiefs of Staff liaison officer to the OWI, and as a postwar private scholar. But the case is one which can be made honestly against the views. To make it a charge against the man reduces our republican and democratic processes to absurdity.

Allow me, sir, as a known opponent of Lattimore's viewpoint, to protest the factless melodrama with which he has been attacked. The Senate of the United States will be the ultimate sufferer if careful and exact justice is not done in this case.

May I recommend, sir, that when the charges of Senator McCarthy are aired and dismissed, the Senate of the United States consider a resolution of apology to each individual who has been hurt by this exercise of a prerogative which is, after all, sacred first to the Senate as a whole and only thereafter to its individual members. Such a resolution might help Lattimore somewhat; it will be enough if it deters comparable attacks in the future.

ANDREW G. TRUXAL, President, Hood College, Frederick, Md.:

May I respectfully request that Dr. Owen Lattimore, on his return to this country, be granted every privilege and opportunity to clear himself of the charges being currently made against him. As a former colleague of his distinguished father, Professor David Lattimore, at Dartmouth College, I know the family and the charge that Dr. Owen Lattimore is the "top Soviet espionage agent" is simply fantastic.

JOHN K. FAIRBANK, Professor of History, Harvard University. Author: The United States and China:

Senator McCarthy's allegation that Owen Lattimore is a "top Soviet agent" seems to me completely incredible, on the basis of my long acquaintance with Mr. Lattimore and with his writings. I have specialized on Chinese history since 1929, have known Owen Lattimore since 1932, and in the course of my professional work have had occasion to read a very considerable amount of what he has written, both in books and in articles. I have also heard him speak many times and have had conversations with him many times. I have never heard him express views or make statements which were disloyal in character, and I firmly believe him to be a thoroughly loyal and law-abiding American citizen who is devoted to the free, democratic way of life in this country.

Considering our urgent national need, in the dire struggle against Russia in Asia, for expert knowledge of Asia such as Mr. Lattimore demonstrably possesses, it seems to me the national interest demands that the accusation of disloyalty against him be thoroughly investigated and publicly disproved, as I am confident it will be, so that his future usefulness to his country will be impaired as little as possible.

H. H. FISHER, Chairman of the Herbert C. Hoover Institute and Library, Stanford University; Director, Civil Affairs Training School, 1943-1945; Director, Belgian-American Educational Foundation. Author: The Famine in Soviet Russia; A Tower to Peace, etc.:

I have known Mr. Owen Lattimore and Mrs. Esther Caulkin Brunauer for many years. I know them to be citizens of wide knowledge and exceptional ability, which they have employed in the service of our country. They are incapable by character and temperament of being Communists or Communist sympathizers.

FREDERIC C. LANE, Professor of History, The Johns Hopkins University; Editor, Journal of Economic History:

From one source or another during the last twenty-five years I have heard the Communist line and observed its gyrations. Lattimore has not followed the Communist line. He is an independent thinker with whom I have sometimes agreed, sometimes disagreed. But I never had any reason to think him a Communist or to doubt his good faith and loyalty.

B. C. HOPPER, Professor of Government, Harvard University. Author: Sovereignty in the Arctic; The War for Eastern Europe.

I worked intimately with Owen Lattimore for three years in the Council on Foreign Relations, New York. And, naturally, I know his writing. It is beyond belief that he could be a spy, a Communist (definitely a card-bearing member of the party), or could have worked for the Soviet government against his own country.

The use of such high-powered labels, upon what seems to be conjecture as evidence, discredits the government machinery set up for social protection.

ROBERT I. CRANE, Department of History, University of Chicago.

I do not know Dr. Lattimore personally, but I know his views and writings. In them he is clearly not a pro-Communist. In fact, he has stood forth as an unselfish American citizen trying to advise a more viable foreign policy that would prevent China from going Communist. One may even differ with Dr. Lattimore's opinions and still realize that he is sincerely trying to think our foreign policy out in a constructive, pro-American fashion.

MARY C. WRIGHT (Mrs. A. F.), The Hoover Institute and Library, Stanford University, Calif.

You are not here dealing with an obscure individual whose views and connections are difficult to pin down. Nor are you dealing with a politically naive individual whose research is remote from contemporary issues and who might therefore be the dupe of foreign agents. The way in which Mr. Lattimore's views have developed and the direction in which he has made his influence felt are perfectly plain, and they are sharply and fundamentally at variance with Communist and Communist-front programs. Mr. Lattimore's work is characterized to perhaps a greater degree than that of any other scholar in the Far Eastern field by precisely that kind of free-ranging, creative thinking which is the chief bulwark of free peoples against the subversion of their institutions. He is the last man who would tolerate any kind of strait-jacket, and it is literally impossible that he could associate himself with the ruthless discipline and dogmatism of the Communist Party.

This completely unfounded and unwarranted attack on him is itself a grave threat to American liberty. I earnestly hope that your committee will lose no time in investigating the facts and making public your findings.

MARION J. LEVY, Jr., Assistant Professor of Sociology, Princeton, N. J.

I am writing you about Senator McCarthy's accusation that Owen Lattimore was a "top Soviet agent." I have not known Mr. Lattimore intimately, but I have long used his scholarly works, and I have had a number of personal contacts with the man. At no time in my knowledge of either the man or his work have ever known him to express views which were disloyal to our country.

WOODBIDGE BINGHAM, Columbia University. Letter to Senator Tydings.

At this time when Mr. Lattimore's good name is under suspicion I wish to go on record as having the utmost confidence in his integrity as a scholar and as a person. I cannot think of him in any way but as a loyal American.

May I take the liberty of appealing to you to see that Mr. Lattimore is completely cleared of whatever is unfounded in the current charges against him. By so doing you will not only be of service to Mr. Lattimore and to those who have a personal interest in him but also to those who are working for the best interests of the United States in its international relations.

HAROLD VINACKE, Professor of Political Science, University of Cincinnati. Author: Far East in Modern Times.

As a student of Far Eastern history and politics over a period of twenty-five years, I have had occasion to examine Mr. Lattimore's writings with some care.

I have found myself in disagreement with Mr. Lattimore's views and findings on occasion. I have also found myself in agreement with him on occasion. In case of either agreement or disagreement, I have never had any reason to believe that his views were not honestly and objectively arrived at. It is obvious that there is a wide area of national foreign policy in which there may be honest difference of opinion as to the expedient course to follow in protecting and advancing the interests of the United States. A case in point is the question of recognition of the Chinese Communist regime. It does not follow that because recognition has been extended by the U. S. S. R. that an advocate of recognition by the United States would be seeking to promote Russian rather than American interests. There is plenty of historical evidence that individuals of unquestioned loyalty honestly come to what prove to be unwise or unsonnd conclusions as to what the national interest requires. I believe that the record will show that Mr. Lattimore's views, whether correct or incorrect, as to national policy, have been derived from his own independent analysis of the existing situation in the Far East and the response to the policy situation which he honestly believes will best advance the interests of the United States. There is no evidence, on the record as I know it, which would sustain the allegation that he is or has been, seeking to promote the interests of the Soviet Union rather than the interests of the United States. As I have stated above, I have on occasion found myself in disagreement with some of his conclusions as to what would best serve American interests. But that has never led me to conclude that he was not fundamentally motivated by loyalty to the United States.

HYMAN KULLIN, Assistant Professor of History, Brooklyn College.

The serious allegations made by Senator McCarthy of Wisconsin impugning the loyalty of Owen Lattimore can appear only as fantastic to those familiar with his scholarly career. As a student of the Far Eastern field for the past twelve years and a close follower of Mr. Lattimore's work, I wish to state that at no time have I had cause to question his devotion to this country and the democratic way of life. His numerous books and articles have in my opinion clearly presented an over-all pattern of opposition to the policies of Soviet Russia. Charges of "pro-Soviet" inclinations and beliefs against Mr. Lattimore based on his published writings can only proceed from distortion of his theses and removal of quotations from context.

GEORGE B. CRESSEY, Chairman, Department of Geography, Syracuse University; Member, Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. Author: Field Work in Mongolia, Tibet, and Interior of China—1932-1929; Asia's Lands and Peoples, etc.

May I express my deep concern over the unsupported attacks which are being made on Owen Lattimore, Haldore Hanson, and others, without supporting evidence. I am under the impression that under Anglo-Saxon law a person is to be regarded as innocent until proven guilty, or certainly until specific evidence is forthcoming. In a police state, on the other hand, guilt is assumed as soon as anyone mentions rumor or suspicion.

I consider that these whole proceedings, including the attacks on the Secretary of State, are the most effective device to impair our standing abroad and to create a situation favorable to communistic propaganda. One might make a good case for an assertion that Senator McCarthy and his associates are the most effective agents for communistic agitation which are currently operating in the United States.

LANGDON WARNER, Curator of Oriental Art, Fogg Museum, Harvard University

I have known him (Mr. Lattimore) intimately, both in China and this country, for some twenty-five years. I know him to be loyal and intelligent with an uncommonly courageous and penetrating attitude and a sound analytical mind. I have seen him in his social and professional contacts with Europeans and orientals and can best describe his talk and his privately held opinions as being unequivocally and patriotically American.

You have but to read his many books of travel and of political analysis to be persuaded that the impression he firmly intends to convey is distrust of Communist and other authoritarian policies. This is quite as obvious in those passages in which he is seeking a reasonable and sympathetic explanation of their psychology as in those where he is more drastically critical of them. No doubt among such voluminous writings, where the author bears constantly in mind the need to be judgmatical, paragraphs may be lifted from their context in an attempt to demonstrate sympathy with the enemy. But there cannot be any doubt with all the evidence before you, that even such passages are additional proof of the author's sensitive regard for American democratic ideals.

It should not detract from the cogency of my argument to add that I have frequently disagreed with Mr. Lattimore's conclusions.

LAURENCE SICKMAN, Vice Director and Curator of Oriental Art, Wm. Rockhill Nelson Gallery of Art, Kansas City, Mo.

The extremely serious implications of Senator McCarthy's charges against Owen Lattimore compel me to write urging a complete investigation of these charges which, in my opinion, are utterly false and incomprehensible. I have known Owen Lattimore personally since 1931 and as a specialist in Far Eastern studies, I have had occasion to read many of his writings. I consider Mr. Lattimore to be not only a loyal and forthright citizen but also a brilliant credit to our country.

GEORGE GRASSMUCK, Boston University, Assistant Professor of Political Science.

It is my fervent hope that the current damaging attacks on the loyalty and integrity of Owen Lattimore receive an early investigation and that his expected exoneration gets as much publicity as did the remarks of his protected accuser.

Upon my return from wartime naval service in the South Pacific and occupied Japan, I studied for three years (1946-49) at the Johns Hopkins University, and took several Far Eastern seminars under Mr. Lattimore's direction. I became well acquainted with his political and economic ideas by reading his books and through informal conversations with him. During my last year at the university, my office was next to his, permitting even more frequent discussions.

At no time during my stay at the Johns Hopkins University did Lattimore impress me as a member of the Communist Party or as a "Russian espionage agent."

Since leaving Hopkins I have been giving courses in international politics and in governments of the Far East at Boston University. I use Lattimore's recent book, The Situation in Asia, (Little, Brown & Co., 1949) as one of several references in the Far Eastern course. There have been no classroom allegations whatever that the book was "Communist" or "pro-Russian."

Instead passages from the book show Lattimore's desire to see Oriental nations become independent and free of Russian domination. On page 167 of The Situation in Asia, he states:

"Nor do the Russians start out with the advantage of being the 'favorite foreigners' of the Chinese, as the Americans have long been. In the Chinese folk tradition, the Russians have always been the most barbarian of the 'foreign barbarians', the 'dangerous neighbors' with a common frontier. The fact is that the Russians, like the Americans, are going to find that what counts in China is the kind of government evolved by the play of Chinese political, economic, social, and military forces."

In proposing a possible plan for dealing with Asia by helping to establish a group of independent third force countries, Lattimore summarizes the scheme's purported advantages by saying (p. 237):

"On our side, we shall have given a fresh impetus to both capitalism, and political democracy. We shall have a strong competitive advantage in being able to help more people get what they want than the Russians can. We shall have turned the disadvantage of an Asia that we are not strong enough to control into the advantage of an Asia strong enough to refuse to be controlled by Russia."

Mr. Lattimore's point of view is obvious to those who read his books. To my mind it is not based on espionage but on knowledge, analysis, and loyalty.

ARTHUR F. WRIGHT, Assistant Professor of Chinese History, Stanford University, Stanford, Calif.

I am sure you and your committee must be aware that Mr. Lattimore is the author of many books. These writings, which are basic works for the understanding of Inner Asia, are not the work of a "Russian Agent"; they are unmistakably the work of a free creative American intellect. They are honest, clear presentations of the results of mature scholarship and profound thought. I realize that investigating committees have no time to read books, but these books are the "documents" on Mr. Lattimore, and they completely exonerate him from the contemptible and malicious slanders of Senator McCarthy.

We in university circles in northern California are gravely concerned over the threat to our free institutions presented by Senator McCarthy and his fellow witch-hunters. Many of us feel that the traditions and the prestige of the Senate are jeopardized by the completely conscienceless behavior of Senator McCarthy and his ilk. I think you owe it to the august body of which you are a Member and to the people of this country to see this investigation through to the end with maximum publicity on all findings. So far the practice of investigating committees has been to publicize charges, give some publicity to rebuttals, and then leave the case and rush off on another. It is time that this shoddy and un-American practice is brought to an end and that some semblance of fairness and justice is introduced. We look to you, Senator, to see that, in the conduct of the hearings on Mr. Lattimore, the dignity and good name of the Senate are maintained and the principles of our common law heritage preserved.

Dr. GEORGE BOAS, Professor of Philosophy, Johns Hopkins University. Author: The Major Traditions of European Philosophy; Philosophy and Poetry; etc.

It may be of interest to your committee that the undersigned is a veteran of both wars, having served in the Infantry in the First World War and in the Navy in the second. As for his political opinions, they are, as you know, those of a confirmed Democrat. He is horrified to find in the United States Senate a man who will not hesitate to blacken the name of one who is at present, as so often in the past, serving the interests of the United States and the western democracies unselfishly and tirelessly. Those of us who hold no political position can do little but appeal to those who are in the Government for help in such matters as these. It is with such an appeal in view that I am writing you, trusting that the force of public opinion may back you up in seeing that justice is done.

JOHN A. POPE, Smithsonian Institution, Freer Gallery of Art.

The investigations now being conducted by your subcommittee, necessary as they may be, could do no greater disservice to our country than to deprive it of the services of a man of the stature of Owen Lattimore.

SHANNON McCUNE, Department of Geography, Colgate University.

Mr. Lattimore's recognition of the strength of Russian influence in Asia and his labor to make this important fact known, and appreciated by American citizens, so as to guarantee a more workable foreign policy in Asia certainly does not make him "an agent of Russia" and hardly constitutes "disloyalty" to the United States. His early analysis of the situation in Asia and his plea for a more aggressive American policy coupled with reform in various areas of Asia, which would negate the Russian influence, certainly should merit praise rather than condemnation.

If defamatory practices such as Mr. McCarthy has used are continued, the United States is going to find itself either without trained specialists in foreign affairs or with a group of spineless yes men who will counsel us falsely. The result will be the loss of this country's present position as the leader of those countries and peoples who believe in democracy.

Prof. WILLIAM R. AMBERSON, University of Maryland.

I wish to express to you my confidence in my good friend, Owen Lattimore, and my conviction that he is a loyal and devoted citizen of this country. These are indeed strange days when a scholar of Mr. Lattimore's high standing can be so irresponsibly attacked. I have known him in the work of the Chinese Industrial Cooperatives as a man with wide knowledge and broad human sympathies, contributing much to the study of pressing political and social problems, particularly in the Far East. He is an able representative of the American liberal tradition. I trust that you and other Senators who also hold that attitude, or at least respect it, will see that he has full opportunity to explain his position, and establish his integrity, as we, his friends, know that he can do.

L. CARRINGTON GOODRICH, Professor of Chinese, Columbia University. Author: A Short History of the Chinese People:

As one who has known Mr. Owen Lattimore both in China and the United States for well over twenty years, I would like to associate myself with those who believe wholeheartedly that he is every inch a loyal American.

EARL SWISHER, Director, Institute of Asiatic Affairs, University of Colorado.

I have known Mr. Lattimore for many years both in China and in the United States, and am personally convinced that there is no question of his loyalty and certainly he is no Communist. Moreover, as a scholar and authority on the northwest frontier of China, Dr. Lattimore is a valuable man to the State Department and to the Nation, at a time when every expert we have is needed. It seems to me a grave mistake to malign able and patriotic statesmen for political or publicity motives.

For the last few years, it happens that I have disagreed with certain phases of the policy which Mr. Lattimore has advocated for the United States in the Far East. We have had arguments about this and if occasion offers shall probably argue again, but this is certainly no reason for me or anyone else to smear his good name or to call him a Communist, which would mean nothing more nor less than saying that he disagreed with me. He may be right, but certainly both of us can have our opinion. I should hate to have my character damaged because others are of a different opinion. If individual Americans and particularly qualified experts are not allowed to develop and express opinions on vital American questions, the functioning of democracy will be seriously impaired.

THOMAS C. SMITH, Assistant Professor of Far Eastern History, Stanford University, California.

There is not the slightest evidence to support the charges of Senator McCarthy in the whole of Mr. Lattimore's extensive published works: nothing that remotely suggests the Communist Party line and, indeed, the very quality of Mr. Lattimore's thinking—tentative, empirical, and open-minded, is, quite aside from the question of content, distinctly uncommunist.

The clear intent of Mr. Lattimore's more controversial books is an informed public and an effective American foreign policy, to both of which he has made a distinguished contribution. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that this is not the way of a man such as Senator McCarthy alleges Mr. Lattimore to be, but of a man who takes the responsibilities of his citizenship seriously.

HAROLD J. WEINS, Assistant Professor of Geography, Yale University.

Like many other Far Eastern scholars, I have known three of the individuals singled out by Senator McCarthy in his attacks. During my service in the U. S. Navy and the OSS I have had some contact with each of them. These men are Owen Lattimore, John Service, and Haldore Hanson. I am convinced of their American loyalty. These men have had occasion personally to learn about both the Chinese Nationalist regime and the Chinese and other Communist regimes and the effect of their operations upon the welfare of the Chinese and other Asiatic peoples. In the course of their official duty with the Government they were required to give objective appraisals of the situation as they observed it. Because the evolution of reform under previous regimes or under the Chinese Nationalist regime has been slow and even retrogressive, an objective observer did not need to be "leftist" or even very "liberal" to discover that in the contemporary scene the Communist regimes often served the people under their control in a more beneficial manner. Such a conclusion on his part need have no bearing upon his political affiliation or loyalty. I am anti-Communist and I believe that communism in the long run will harm the Chinese if it is not eliminated. Nevertheless, although many of my interpretations of the Far Eastern situation differ from theirs, I have come to some of the same conclusions as have Service or Hanson or Lattimore.

ALEXANDER LAING, Librarian, Dartmouth College. Author: The Sea Witch; Clipper Ship Men; Jonathan Eagle.

The other possible explanation is that Senator McCarthy is deliberately endangering his country in the conduct of its foreign policy, his Republican Party in its public reputation, the repute and dignity of Congress, and the good name of a distinguished scholar and public servant, all to make dubious political capital of some sort for the Senator personally. If this is the case, he is a depraved scoundrel, a dangerous and deeply evil man.

CLAUDE A. BUSS, Professor of History, Stanford University, Palo Alto, Calif.

Through conversations with him (Lattimore) and through careful study of his books and articles, I respect him as one of our most profound and original American thinkers about the situation in Asia. Whether he has seen fit to support or criticize any particular aspect of our policy in the Far East, I have always noted that his attitude has stemmed from his fundamental regard for our national welfare and our national interest. Whenever I have disagreed with him, I have never doubted the sincerity of his conviction that his ideas were best for the United States.

I like to think that I worked closely with him in the Office of War Information. When I succeeded him as Director of the San Francisco Office, I found the Office permeated with a spirit of contributing wherever we could to the winning of the war. We all—British, Chinese, and Americans—cooperated against a common enemy. No one was more jealous of American rights—wherever threatened—than Mr. Lattimore. Our broadcasts to China were dedicated to the help of our ally and it was deemed essential to stiffen the morale of the armies of the Kuomintang under Chiang Kai-shek. Most of our Chinese employees were naturally sympathetic with the Kuomintang, and the Chinese Consul General and the head of the official Kuo Min News Agency were always accorded both the most cordial welcome at our office and the most liberal use of our facilities.

NOBUTAKA IKE—Former student of Mr. Lattimore and Curator, Japanese Collection, The Hoover Institute and Library, Stanford University, Stanford, Calif.

As a student of his I had almost daily contact with Mr. Lattimore. I saw him not only at the university, but on many occasions at his home. Thus, I came to know him very well as a teacher and a friend. For a period of three years, I heard him discuss the grave problems that confront us as a world power. His ideas were always creative and original, scarcely the kind that would be tolerated in Russia today. I feel certain that if you would carefully examine the things that Professor Lattimore has stood for, you would come to the conclusion that the charges made against him are entirely without foundation.

I should like to offer my testimonial as to the devotion to democratic ideals and the brilliant scholarship in regard to East Asian affairs which Mr. Lattimore has consistently shown. Such an irresponsible attack as Senator McCarthy has made upon Mr. Lattimore is not only crudely unjust, but a blow to other scholars striving to study the Far East from an objective viewpoint.

(NOTE.—Excerpts from various communications from people with a knowledge of Owen Lattimore's work:)

FREDERICA DE LAGUNA, Associate Professor, Anthropology, Bryn Mawr College.

Senator McCarthy's attacks on the State Department and on Prof. Owen Lattimore have been truly vicious. Have we indeed come to such a pass that the citizen who tries to serve his country loyally in a position of importance, as Secretary Acheson and Professor Lattimore have done, are to be branded as traitors, without the protection of our courts, by any Member of Congress hiding behind his immunity? Not only do such attacks make it impossible for us to carry out any coherent foreign policy, and so play into the hands of those who would like to see the United States divided and impotent, but they are subversive to the rights and dignities of our citizens. Again and again we have seen loyal Government servants slandered, what good work they might do nullified, their families subjected to anguish and to actual threats of violence, as a result of such ill-considered accusations. How are we to get able men, or keep them, in responsible Government positions if they are to be treated in this way?

FRANZ MICHAEL, Professor, Far Eastern History, University of Washington.

Through radio and newspaper reports, I have learned that Senator McCarthy has accused Mr. Owen Lattimore of being a bad security risk and has attempted to throw doubt upon Mr. Lattimore's character and loyalty to the United States, indicating that he has betrayed this country by spying for Soviet Russia.

I have been deeply shocked by the carelessness with which the Senator is endangering the honor and reputation of a citizen who happens to be a colleague of mine in the field of Far Eastern studies. I have known Mr. Lattimore since 1939 when I was a research assistant at Johns Hopkins University at the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations of which Mr. Lattimore is the director. During the time of my work there, I came to know Mr. Lattimore well and have the fullest confidence in his character and in his loyalty to this country.

I have the greatest respect for your committee and have no doubt that Mr. Lattimore will be able to refute without difficulty the charges made by Senator McCarthy. However, I want to express my deep concern over a state of affairs in which Senator McCarthy should think it permissible to play so irresponsibly with a person's honor and good name.

LLOYD D. MUSOLF, Graduate Student, The Johns Hopkins University.

I am writing this entirely unsolicited letter in protest against the serious charges made against Prof. Owen Lattimore by Senator McCarthy. As a graduate student at the John Hopkins University between 1946 and 1949, and as a student in one of Professor Lattimore's classes for one of those years, I wish to express my strong belief that the charges are utterly groundless. In his brilliant lectures Mr. Lattimore followed no one's line. As a matter of fact his is the most independent and original mind I have ever encountered. If his writings and actions are studied as a whole instead of by calculated and dishonest exegesis, this readily will become apparent.

SCHUYLER VAN R. CAMMANN, Assistant Professor, University of Pennsylvania.

In the first place, it is ridiculous to call Professor Lattimore a Communist. His writings show that he has no illusions about the present government of Russia. In such books as Situation in Asia he has presented the stupidities and limitations of the Russian rulers just as shrewdly as he has pointed out mistakes in our own Far Eastern policies. As a distinguished scholar with high integrity he does not let ideological arguments distract him from seeking out and presenting the truth as he sees it, and we all know that such freedom is denied to members of the Communist Party. Furthermore, he speaks freely of Russian imperialism, which would be heresy for a Communist. In any case, as a determined individualist and shrewd thinker, with a keen sense of humor, it would be temperamentally impossible for him to follow the strict (though amusingly shifty) dogmas of the "party line," or to hold to the fanatic, pseudo-religious beliefs of Russian communism.

As to the idea of his being an espionage agent, that is extremely laughable to anyone who knows him and his manifold activities. With the amount of time he puts into teaching, writing, and lecturing, and the amount of energy he pours into these tasks, it should be plain that he would have no time or energy left over for a spy's duties even if he were so minded, which of course, he is not.

I hope that a review of Professor Lattimore's real achievements and his freedom from the charges leveled at him by Mr. McCarthy will put the latter in his place. It is rather low to try to cover one's own bad record by reflecting on the reputations of others, but it is doubly contemptible to have made public accusations of Professor Lattimore when he was out of the country and unable to answer the slanderous attacks as soon as they were made. His conduct reflects on his party as well as his country at a time when we urgently need constructive forces to lead us.

GEORGE McTURNAN KAHIN, Lecturer in Political Science, Johns Hopkins University.

I am shocked at the outrageously false charges of Senator McCarthy that Owen Lattimore is pro-Communist and a Russian spy. I would like to make the following statement.

For the last three and a half years (except the period June 1948-June 1949 when I was in Indonesia on a fellowship of the Social Science Research Council) I have as a graduate student, and recently as a faculty member, been a member of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations at the Johns Hopkins University. During this period I have been closely associated with Owen Lattimore. My field is political science with special emphasis on the Far East. This has meant that my frequent contact with Professor Lattimore—in class, in seminar, and in personal conversation—has largely concerned discussion of the dominant social and political problems of the Far East. Communism and Soviet Far Eastern policy, being among the most important of these problems, were frequently discussed by Professor Lattimore. Never in such discussions, or at any time, have I heard Professor Lattimore indicate sympathy for communism or for Soviet policies. He certainly did show strong and vigorous anti-Communist feelings repeatedly, sustainedly, and unequivocally. Consistently he was severe and incisive in his criticism of Russian policies.

JAMES P. WARBURG, Financial Adviser, World Economic Conference, London, 1933; Director Philharmonic Symphony Society of New York; Author: The Money Muddle; Foreign Policy Begins at Home; etc.

As one who is proud to be a friend of Owen Lattimore and as a citizen deeply concerned over the irreparable damage done to innocent, loyal, and in this case exceptionally valuable citizens, by irresponsible denunciation, may I respectfully urge you to see to it that your committee after due investigation take whatever action it may deem appropriate affirmatively to clear Lattimore in such a way as to leave no doubt in the public mind. When citizens of the character of Secretary Acheson, Ambassador Jessup, and Owen Lattimore are denounced by a United States Senator as bad security risks it is time for the Senate to reassert its own dignity and to repair as best it may the damage done to the prestige of the United States.

VILHJALMER STEFANSSON, Explorer and Arctic Specialist

Protest most strongly McCarthy's Lattimore attack. Lattimore and men like him are our best defense against communism and fascism.

PEARL BUCK, Author: The Good Earth, etc.

RICHARD J. WALSH, President of John Day, Publishers.

We are indignant and dismayed at completely false charges against Owen Lattimore. We have known him for nearly twenty-five years both in China and United States and have read his books and kept informed of all his activities. We have often and recently discussed with him his views on Asia on which he is leading expert today. We know that he is opposed to communism. The false charges are all the more unfortunate for the United States because this country needs the services of a man of his experience and wisdom. We urge immediate investigation of what persons and interests are behind this destructive attack.

E. COWLES ANDRUS, M. D., Baltimore, Md.

My wife and I have known Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore since his association with the Johns Hopkins University. I have full confidence in his integrity and patriotism.

Mrs. SANFORD V. LARKEY, President City-County Democratic Club, 1010 Winding Way, Baltimore 10, Md.

We are your constituents. We appeal to you to take appropriate action to protect one of your constituents—Owen Lattimore, a resident of Baltimore County. We refer to the slanderous statements made on and off the Senate floor by Senator McCarthy whose irresponsible accusations against Mr. Lattimore have shocked this entire community.

He has not as yet been able to present evidence for any of his charges and when his victims have been able to reply he has been proved guilty of misrepresenting facts which are easily available to those who might wish the truth. It is our opinion that such conduct is unworthy of a Senator. We therefore call upon you to make your stand in this matter unequivocal and to initiate expulsion proceedings against Senator McCarthy.

EDWARD A. PARKS, M. D., Former Director Harriet Lane Clinic, The Johns Hopkins Hospital, Professor of Pediatrics.

It is a tragedy that Senator McCarthy is enacting. From his position of senatorial immunity he is mortally injuring splendid American citizens. Although Mr. Lattimore will be completely exonerated for the simple reason that he is completely innocent of the charges made, he can never recover from the wound inflicted and I am afraid that his great usefulness to this country with his vast knowledge of conditions in the Far East will be permanently impaired. It is easy for Senator McCarthy from a height which cannot be reached to toss out atomic bombs indiscriminately but he ought to be made to pay in some way for damage to the lives of patriotic citizens.

MARGARET O. YOUNG, Mr. Lattimore's secretary from 1938 to 1941.

No doubt you will receive many letters testifying to the integrity of Owen Lattimore, and expressing indignation at the charges placed against him.

I want to add one more, and to say that I worked as Mr. Lattimore's secretary from November 1938 until August 1941, and at no time was there the least indication of subversive activity. In my opinion he is a man of high principles and broad outlook, and the charges against him are grossly unjust. Every effort should be made to clear his good name.

ROBERT E. SHERWOOD, Playwright; Author: The Petrified Forest; Idiot's Delight; Roosevelt and Hopkins.

During the Second World War, I became closely personally associated with Lattimore in the Office of War Information. He directed the part of our overseas activities concerned with the war in Asia and the Pacific. He was important as a policy maker. I therefore have had ample opportunity to gain knowledge of his opinions and his general processes of thought and I respectfully beg to assure you of my conviction that any charges or insinuations against his loyalty to our country, our Constitution and our American way of life are as outrageous as they are fantastic.

ELMER DAVIS, American Broadcasting Co., Washington 9, D. C. Director, Office War Information (1942-1945); News Analyst, American Broadcasting Co.

Lattimore is accused of promoting chaos and ruining Christianity in Asia, of apparently preferring totalitarian government in Japan to the kind of democracy MacArthur is giving, of being a bad security risk and an old-time pro-Communist. I have known Owen Lattimore for years; he was one of my leading associates in the Office of War Information. He may have overestimated the nationalistic aspects of the present Chinese Communist regime, but if he did, so did many other people. To call him a pro-Communist or to say that he prefers totalitarian government anywhere, is as ridiculous as to say that he is trying to ruin Christianity.

Rev. LOUIS M. J. SCHRAM, Immaculate Heart Missions.

I am a scholarly Roman Catholic priest, student of the University of Louvain, Belgium, and the University of Leyden, Holland, and have spent the last forty years in Mongolia and on the borders of Tibet. I am in America now to publish the material on which I have worked for the past forty years.

It is in this connection that I am glad to cooperate with the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, so that this part of the world can be made known through our publications to the Western World.

EDGAR SNOW, Contributing Editor, Saturday Evening Post.

I should like to add my protest to the hundreds you have doubtless received from other loyal citizens, against the unfair and un-American persecution of Owen Lattimore (and others) being currently conducted under the cloak of senatorial immunity by Joseph R. McCarthy.

I believe you wish to be scrupulously just in your own part in this hearing and for that reason may welcome this voluntary statement.

I happen to have known Mr. Lattimore for 17 years. In that period I have had numerous opportunities to study and judge his character, as well as his work. In my opinion he represents the highest type of American—devoted to democratic ideals and principles, superior in his intelligence, a first-rate scholar, and wise in the judgments he has offered to the American people concerning events which affect our future and our lives.

I myself was born in Missouri in a family descended from generations of Americans. Whatever I know of Americanism, and how to identify it in others, derives fundamentally from what I learned from my parents' teachings and in American schools. I know Mr. Lattimore so well that I can say that if he is "disloyal" then my own teachers and parents were likewise. I do not find in any of Lattimore's writings, nor in my recollections of any of our many conversations, nor in my knowledge of his behavior, anything which would violate the good conscience or the best standards of Americanism.

Aside from that, in my own work as a journalist I have been concerned with matters on which Mr. Lattimore is regarded as a specialist. This experience as a foreign correspondent has also equipped me to judge whether anyone is, or is not, a Communist or a spy or an agent for Russia in an objective or a subjective sense. In the present instance it is Senator McCarthy, not Lattimore, who is serving, objectively, as a tool of Russia, however unwitting. They could not (the Russians) conceive of anything better calculated to advance their propaganda aims than Senator McCarthy's current campaign, which is making a shambles of the integrity and dignity of the entire United States Government.

Mr. Lattimore could not possibly be a spy for Russia. No Communist could write the books he has written. No one could read them and assert that he has been the "architect of our Far Eastern Policy."

STANLEY SALEM, Executive Vice President, Little Brown & Co. Telegram to Senator Aiken.

As editor of Owen Lattimore's last three books I can vouch for the fact that his greatest concern has been that the United States should not lose its position as the leader of democratic principles in the Far East. I know you have been thinking about the same problem within the United States and I hope you will do everything possible to give Lattimore a chance to set forth the truth.

THEODORE WEEKS, Editor of the Atlantic Monthly. (Letter to Senator Tydings.)

Forgive me if I speak personally, but so men must do when they are troubled. This is my twenty-fifth year on the staff of the Atlantic and the twenty-fourth in my friendship with Owen, and it saddens me to see what a reckless accusation flapping in the wind for a few days can do to smirch the record and the authority of a man who has given so much of his life to the work he loves. Owen Lattimore is no Communist; anyone who knows him knows that he is loyal to this country and that he has written and worked for its best interest.

Throughout his career, he has believed in the Open Door policy for the Chinese and in the early 1940's, it was his hope as it was that of many Americans that the country could be unified under Chiang Kai-shek. Even as recently as January 1950, in the Atlantic he wrote: "The Kuomintang, under the increasingly jealous and narrow leadership of Chiang, put up the worst possible defense of cause that was originally good and should have won." He could not fail to detect the increasing corruption in Nationalist China; in this he was not alone—ask any American who flew the Hump. * * * We accuse the Politburo of telling Stalin only what Stalin wants to hear. Now it seems to me appalling that there should be Americans in high places who try to make Mr. Lattimore the scapegoat because he told the truth.

SAMPLE MISQUOTATIONS IN SENATOR MCCARTHY'S REFERENCES TO LATTIMORE WRITINGS

1. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4448) quoting from Situation in Asia, p. 139, said Lattimore wrote that the Russians had "a greater power of attraction" for Asiatic peoples.

The correct phrase in the book is "a great power of attraction." The book then adds that the United States has a potentially greater power of attraction for the same peoples.

2. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4458) quoting from Situation in Asia, p. 53, said Lattimore agreed with Stalin's formula for revolution.

In the book, Lattimore explains this formula and points out that America can prove it wrong.

3. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4448) quoting from Situation in Asia, p. 89, in reference to the Russian gutting of Manchurian factories, said Lattimore claimed that "this has not diminished the Russian power of attraction in Asia."

In the book, Lattimore called it "a ruthless example of the sacrifice of the interests of non-Russian Communists to the paramount interest of the Soviet Union." In an entirely different paragraph, the book says "On the whole, however, the Russian power of attraction has not diminished, at least potentially."

4. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4459) quotes correctly from Situation in Asia, p. 94, but says "The period referred to is the late thirties." The period actually is the early thirties and Senator McCarthy has thereby misapplied the quotation to distort my position.

(See explanation in last sentence above.)

5. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4448) quotes correctly from The Situation in Asia, p. 238, but exactly contradicts the meaning of the passage by his remark "In other words, he says to America, 'Keep your hands off.'"

He further contradicts the meaning by not quoting the immediately preceding paragraph which expresses my confidence in American participation in Asiatic affairs.

6. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4469) quotes from a Lattimore "article 'Asia Conquers Asia' in March of this year in which Lattimore refers to Russian communism only as a 'hypothetical threat—a card unplayed.'"

The article was actually titled "Asia Reconquers Asia." It included several different references to Russian communism. One passage, perhaps distantly related to what Senator McCarthy quoted, reads: "As it is, we do not even have a measuring stick for assessing what kind of strength Russia has in the Far East or how much of it there may be. Whatever the Russian strength, it remains behind the Russian frontier—undeployed, unexposed, a card unplayed."

7. Senator McCarthy (Congressional Record, p. 4448) quotes correctly from Situation in Asia, p. 147, about supplies going to the Kuomintang and then comments, "This is Communist propaganda pure and simple." On the contrary this statement is based upon the most reliable eyewitness sources: American newspapermen working in China and is so credited in a footnote.

[Columbia, September 1949]

DISASTER IN CHINA

(By James F. Kearney, S. J.)

Who or what has so vitiated the opinion of intelligent Americans on the China question? Until recently, despite the dust that has been deliberately thrown in American eyes by pink correspondents, the question could be stated so clearly and simply that grammar school students could grasp it. Having explained it to grammar school students, I know. Here it is, expressed in monosyllabic words: "If the Reds win out there, we lose. If they lose, we win." Well, for all practical purposes, the Reds have now won, and in consequence we and the Chinese have lost. For communism it is the greatest triumph since the Russian Revolution; for us, though few Americans yet fully realize it, it is perhaps the greatest disaster in our history; and the end is not yet. Who is responsible? It wasn't a one-man job; short-sighted Chinese officials contributed some 50 percent to the catastrophe, we the other 50 percent. There are those who believe, though, that no Americans deserve more credit for this Russian triumph and Sino-American disaster than Owen Lattimore and a small group of his followers.

Owen Lattimore, confidant of two United States Presidents, adviser to our State Department, author of ten books about the Far East, where he has twenty-five years of travel and study to his credit, was born in Washington, D. C., but after a few months was taken to North China. At twelve he went to study in Switzerland, then in England, and returned to China as a newsman before taking up exploration, particularly in Manchuria and Mongolia. He then studied in Peiping, first on a fellowship from the Harvard Yenching Foundation and later on a John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellowship, knows the Chinese, Mongolian, and Russian languages well.

Returning to the United States at the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese war in 1937, a year later he became director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations of Johns Hopkins University, a post he still holds. In 1941 he was for six months President Roosevelt's political adviser to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, then returned to the States to enter OWI, becoming deputy director to the overseas branch in charge of Pacific Operations. In June 1944 he and J. Carter Vincent, later to head the Far Eastern Bureau of the State Department, accompanied Henry Wallace on a diplomatic tour of Siberia and Free China.

So high does Owen Lattimore stand in Washington that it is said the only two books on President Truman's desk when he announced Japan's surrender were newsman John Gunther's Inside Asia and Lattimore's Solution in Asia. Lattimore was next named special economic adviser to Edwin V. Pauley, head of the postwar economic mission to Tokyo. Though not an authority on Japan, he did not hesitate to criticize former Ambassador Joseph C. Grew's plan, adopted by MacArthur, to govern the Japanese people through the Emperor. He believed that the Emperor and all his male heirs should be interned in China and a republic set up in Japan.

In this thoroughly distinguished orientalist's career there are many disturbing features. For example, in former Red Louis Budenz' March 19, 1949, Collier's article, entitled "The Menace of Red China," we read, "Most Americans, during World War II, fell for the Moscow line that the Chinese Communists were not really Communists * * * but 'agrarian reformers'. * * * That is just what Moscow wanted Americans to believe. Even many naive Government officials fell for it. * * * This deception of United States officials and public was the result of a planned campaign; I helped to plan it. * * * The number one end was a Chinese coalition government in which Chiang would accept the 'agrarian reformers'—at the insistence of the United States. * * * We could work through legitimate Far East organizations and writers that were recognized as Oriental authorities. Frederick V. Field emphasized use of the Institute of Pacific Relations. * * * The 'agrarian reformers' idea started from there. It took root in leading Far East cultural groups in the United States, spread to certain policy-making circles in the State Department and broke into prominent position in the American press. * * * The Communists were successful in impressing their views on the United States State Department simply by planting articles with the proper slant in such magazines as Far Eastern Survey, Pacific Affairs, and Amerasia. Both Far Eastern Survey and Pacific Affairs are publications of the Institute of Pacific Relations. This is not a Communist organization."

Where does Mr. Lattimore come in? From 1934 to 1941 he was editor of Pacific Affairs. Freda Utley mentions him in two of her books. In her Last Chance in China she tells how Moscow, where she then worked as a Communist, was able to help its friends and discomfit its enemies in the Far East thanks to the Institute of Pacific Relations, and that Mr. Lattimore was among those Americans who came to Moscow for help and advice (p. 193). In her Lost Illusion (p. 194) she refers to the same 1936 Moscow meeting: "The whole staff of our Pacific Ocean Cabinet had an all-day session at the Institute with E. C. Carter, Owen Lattimore, and Harriet Moore, leading lights of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I was a little surprised at the time that these Americans should defer so often and so completely to the Russian viewpoint. * * * Owen Lattimore found it difficult at first to submit to the discipline required of the Friends of the Soviet Union. He told me a few months later in London how he had almost lost his position as editor of Pacific Affairs because he had published an article by the Trotskyist Harold Isaacs. In later years in the United States it did not astonish me to find the Institute of Pacific Relations following the same general lines as the Daily Worker in regard to China and Japan."

Henry Wallace never claimed to be an expert on the Far East. How much, if any, of his report after returning from the Siberia-China visit was written or suggested by the oriental expert, Mr. Lattimore, I do not know. One thing emerges, however: after their return, the American policy which has proved so disastrous for both Chinese and American interests and so helpful to Russia was put into effect and is still being pursued. Lattimore's Solution in Asia was described by one reviewer as "an appeal to Chiang Kai-shek to free himself from the galling yoke (of the Kuomintang) and to set free the democratic forces which have proved effective in northwestern China," i. e., the Chinese Reds. That book is again referred to in an article by ex-Communist Max Eastman and J. B. Powell in a June 1945 Reader's Digest article, "The Fate of the World Is At Stake in China," wherein they blast the deception "that Russia is a 'democracy' and that the Chinese can therefore safely be left to Russian influence." Owen Lattimore is perhaps the most subtle evangelist of this erroneous conception.

Mr. Lattimore praised the net result of the Moscow trials and the blood purge by which Stalin secured his dictatorship in 1936-39 as "a triumph for democracy." He now urges our government, in Solution in Asia, to accept cheerfully the spread of the "Soviet form of democracy" in Central Asia. His publishers thus indicate the drift of his book: "He (Mr. Lattimore) shows that all the Asiatic peoples are more interested in actual democratic practices, such as the ones they can see in action across the Russian border, than they are in the fine theories of Anglo-Saxon democracies which come coupled with ruthless imperialism." Does that sound as if Mr. Lattimore, a top adviser on our Far Eastern affairs, is on our team?

The same article continues with a prophecy which has just about come true: "If Russian dictatorship spreads its tentacles across China the cause of democracy (i. e., United States style) in Asia is lost. As is well-known, these tentacles need not include invading Soviet troops, but only the native Communist parties now giving allegiance to the Soviet Union and taking their directives from Moscow. When these Communist parties get control of a neighboring state the Moscow dictatorship and its fellow-travelers call that a 'friendly government.' It is by means of these Communist-controlled 'friendly governments'—not by Soviet military conquest—that Russian power and totalitarian tyranny is spreading from the Soviet Union, in Asia as in Europe."

That is perhaps good background for the current slogan of Mr. Lattimore and his loyal followers, Edgar Snow, Ted White, Richard Lauterback, Harvard's Fairbank, and many an ex-OWI man—that there's nothing much for America to worry about because Mao Tse-tung's communism is a nationalist movement. A moment's reflection should make it clear that the very last thing a real Chinese nationalist would do would be to swallow hook, line, and sinker the doctrine of Karl Marx, a German Jew, who besides being a foreigner has a system that goes counter to every Chinese instinct and every tradition in the Chinese concept of society.

This recalls an incident a Belgian priest related to me in Shanghai a year and a half ago. He had become a Chinese citizen, and when the Chinese Reds occupied his church in North China they followed the usual custom (which is probably news to Mr. Lattimore) of putting up the pictures of Marx and Stalin in the place of honor above the high altar, with those of Mao Tse-tung and Chu Teh below. A Chinese Red then told the priest flatly, "We are going to get rid of absolutely all foreign influence in China. Our policy is China for the Chinese." I can imagine Mr. Lattimore saying, "Just what I told you!" But the Belgian-Chinese replied, "And those two foreign gentlemen up there, Marx and Stalin? When did they become Chinese citizens?" The Red slunk silently away.

If anyone is still puzzled by the contention that Chinese Marxists are primarily nationalists, a glance at the Communist Manifesto will clear matters up. "Though not in substance, yet in form," we read there, "the struggle of the proletariat with the bourgeoisie is at first a national struggle. The proletariat of each country must, of course, first of all settle matters with its own bourgeoisie." That, I believe, shows us what is back of the present national slogan our United States pinks apply to China's Reds. It's not authentic nationalism, of course, as the Manifesto explains later: "The Communists are reproached with desiring to abolish countries and nationality. The workingmen have no country. We cannot take from them what they have not got."

The spurious nature of the nationalism of Mao Tse-tung was admitted by Mr. Lattimore himself, perhaps unintentionally, in a tape-recorded speech he gave in San Francisco, December 7, 1948: "The Chinese Communists never made any bones about the fact that they are Marxists. They are Marxist Communists in their international relations. They never question the Russian line. They follow every twist and turn of it." That is an important admission by Mr. Lattimore, since so many of his followers have been trying to tell us there is no Moscow control over China's Reds. If they follow every twist and turn of the Moscow line they are evidently not Chinese nationalists as we understand the term, but pseudo nationalists.

A. T. Steele and Andrew Roth, of the New York Herald Tribune and the Nation, respectively, after getting out of Red Peiping recently, declared that the Chinese Red leaders are in every sense of the word Communists who stand squarely and faithfully for the Moscow Party line, and will join the Kremlin in the coming world war III against the imperialist powers, particularly America. They likewise agree that while Mao might possibly become an extreme nationalist at some future date, another Tito, there is absolutely no evidence that this is a factor to be seriously reckoned with for a long time. Mr. Lattimore to the contrary notwithstanding. Spencer Moosa, latest newsman out of Peiping, confirms their statements. The very first movie put on by the Reds in the auditorium of the Catholic University in Peiping after they moved in this year was the Life of Stalin. Need we say it was not anti-Russian? And so, instance after instance shows the very close connection between Moscow and Chinese communism that has been witnessed throughout the last twenty-eight years by intelligent observers who have lived in Red China—where Mr. Lattimore has never lived.

To the average American, whom pro-Red propaganda is intended to victimize, it seems quite natural that Mao Tse-tung, a native of China who has never visited Moscow, should think first of China's instead of Russia's interests. Yet how many native-born Americans are there who, once they join the party, think nothing of selling out their country and its secrets to the Kremlin? Such is the strange mesmerism exercised by their Moscow masters. It is, then, no harder to understand Mao's utter devotion to the party line than it is to understand that of Foster, or Dennis, or Earl Browder. After all, remember, a real Communist has no country. And surely Mao has proved he is a one hundred percent Communist. Let's not be deceived any longer, then, by this fake "nationalism" of China's Reds, which is the central thesis of Mr. Lattimore's recent book, The Situation in Asia.

If a man who had written ten volumes about Africa, and thereby won a name for himself as an authority, should nevertheless maintain that the Negroes in Africa aren't really black but white, it would be a cause for wonder. Mr. Owen Lattimore, who has written ten books on Asia and is called "the best-informed American on Asiatic affairs living today," is doubtless well-informed on many Asiatic matters but unfortunately, if we are to take his written words as an index of his knowledge of China's Reds, he is very badly misinformed about the true color of that most important body of individuals and their whole way of acting. Which reminds me of a recent conversation with one of Mr. Lattimore's OWI boys who had just returned from a three-years' correspendent assignment in China. I asked him why it was that practically all our foreign newsmen, though supposedly educated in the American tradition of fair play, spoke entirely of corruption in the Chiang regime, but said nothing about the corruption in the Mao regime? And this man, who was being paid for giving his American readers an honest picture of conditions in the vital Far East, answered, "Because there is no corruption in the Red regime!" I laughed at him for wasting his three years in the Orient and passed him an article showing that not only is the Red regime corrupt, but from every conceivable American standpoint it is conservatively ten times more corrupt than its corrupt opposite number.

It is probably of such men that Mr. Lattimore, in his Situation in China (p. 177), writes: "Hitherto American observers who have been acutely conscious of secret police activities in Kuomintang China have had nothing comparable to report from Communist China." The reason is that these official observers were allowed the freedom to observe the limited activities of KMT secret police, while they weren't even permitted to enter Red China. Had they wished, though, they could have learned a lot from people, some of them Americans, who had lived in Red China. They would have heard for instance about the "Ting chuang hui," or eavesdropper corps, who after killing off all watchdogs, creep up at night, next to the wall or on the flat roofs of North China homes, to hear what is being said inside the family about the Communists. Children are rewarded for spying on their parents and, if anyone is believed to be guilty of anti-Communist remarks, a terror gang swoops down at midnight and the chances are the unfortunate victim will be discovered next morning buried alive outside his home. This sort of secret police and terrorism combined has been so universal in Red China that if Mr. Lattimore doesn't know about it he knows extremely little of Chinese communism.

As far back as 1945 the predominant sentiment everywhere in Red areas was fear, universal fear, fear at every instant, according to an official report of a Frenchman, a former university professor from Tientsin who spent the years from 1941 to 1945 in Red territory, and had been hailed before both Japanese and Red tribunals. "It is not terror," he says, "for terror is a fear which shows itself exteriorly. Here one must not allow his fear to be seen; he must appear satisfied and approve everything that is said and done. It is a hidden fear, but a creeping, paralyzing fear. The people keep quiet. They do not criticize; they avoid passing out any news. They are afraid of their neighbor, who may denounce them. They are afraid of the Reds who might hear and imprison them. When the Reds impose a tax, it is paid without a word. If they requisition anyone for public work, the work is done carefully and rapidly, without need of any blows and curses as in the time of the Japanese, and wonderful to say, without any need of supervision. (This is amazing to anyone who knows the easy-going Chinese character.) I have witnessed groups of workers along the big highways built by the Japanese, doing exactly the same kind of work they did for the Japanese; but how different their attitude! There was no foreman there to supervise, and yet everything was done carefully, with hardly a word, without the least bit of joking." Mr. Lattimore, with his lack of background, might interpret this as a sign of enthusiasm for the Red masters. But the report states simply, "They were afraid."

What was true in 1945 in Red areas is also true today according to the very latest 1949 reports that have filtered through the Bamboo Curtain: "There isn't too much suffering from hunger in the city, but it is impossible to lay up any reserves. The Communists search every house methodically and confiscate any surplus. Anyone who complains or criticizes them disappears mysteriously, buried alive, it is said. No one dares say a word, even to his best friend. In the country districts conditions are terrible. The Reds take everything: grain, livestock, clothing, tools, and now all are being mobilized for army service. Famine reigns everywhere together with fear. The people endure this with clenched teeth, but when asked how things are going always answer, 'Everything is going well.' They had better!"

These reports come from reliable people who were there and know what they are talking about, and who ridicule the fairy tales Mr. Lattimore from his distant and comfortable chair in Johns Hopkins spins for eager young Americans who believe he is an authority on China's Reds. What, for example, could be further from the truth than this statement in The Situation in China, p. 160: "In China it may be conceded (not by anyone who knows the situation, though, if I may interrupt) that the Communists hold the confidence of the people to such an extent that they can probably do more by persuasion, with less resort to coercion, than any previous revolutionaries in history. But the Communists cannot indulge in experiments which the people do not accept, because the armed and organized peasants would be able to resist them just as they have hitherto resisted the return of the landlords," Sheer nonsense! The only real landlords left in Red areas are the Red leaders themselves, and the people know enough not to try to resist these ruthless masters. For some reason, no one seems to relish being buried alive; and so the Communists can indulge in absolutely any experiment they choose without the slightest open resistance from the peasants, who are merely waiting patiently for better days.

Since Mr. Lattimore is patently in error on so many vital points connected with the China Red question, it becomes more and more strange that his advice on Red China should be followed almost slavishly by the United States State Department. It has already brought China to disaster and may, if we continue to follow it, also ruin America. It might be well to consider what advice he has given for future United States policy so we shall know what a new litany of Lattimore disasters awaits us.

He has a chapter on Japan in his Situation in Asia and, though he admits General MacArthur is a first-class administrator, he dislikes his "fatherly mysticism" and "old-line Republicanism," hints it would have been wiser to give the Russians more say, considers the present policy as pseudo realistic and bound to fail. "It's likely to blow up in our faces, like a humiliating stink bomb," damaging MacArthur's reputation in the end. He doesn't like keeping the Emperor, nor the type of democracy MacArthur is giving, apparently preferring for Japan the totalitarian type Mao Tse-tung is employing in China. Mr. Lattimore doesn't like to see Japan made a bulwark against Russian expansion, and believes that since she is possessed of the most advanced technical and managerial know-how in Asia she will eventually make her own terms with both Russia and China, without consulting the United States. "The Japanese, watching America's failure to control the situation in China through the Kuomintang, have been giggling in their kimono sleeves. In a queer way it has helped to restore their self-respect for their own failure on the continent." He sees no future for Japan apart from the future of Asia, since she needs the iron and coal of Manchuria and the markets of China.

In this he is probably right; that is why it was always to America's vital interest to see that the Open Door policy and the territorial integrity of China were preserved, though this adviser to our State Department did not think them very important. He considers East Asia now definitely out of control by either Russia or America, stating that it forms a group of "third countries," which seem to resemble Nippon's ill-fated "East Asia Co-prosperity Sphere." He believes Japan, then, will come to terms both with Communist Russia and Communist China, and will end up by being more anti-American than anti-Russian. If we had only adopted his plan for a Japanese "democracy" right after the war, what a deal of trouble we would have saved!

What, now, are his plans for the mainland? He was long in favor of a Chiang coalition with the Reds, and blames our Eightieth Congress for spoiling that. The result is now Communist control—which of course would have eventuated just as well had his original coalition idea gone through. We mustn't lay down our own conditions for dealing with a Red China, he says, or we shall spoil our favorable position with the Chinese. Has he never heard how Mao's Reds detest Americans, and hold half a dozen United States consuls under house arrest? "We must at all costs avoid the appearance of wanting to punish the Chinese people for having a government which we didn't approve for them in advance." As if the Chinese were really anxious for a puppet Red regime. We must not support any rump government, for that would be dividing China. We must extend credits to poor Red China and help build it up by trade and American engineering "know-how" as "Ford Motors and General Electric did in Russia in the period between wars." But let's not lay down any conditions for our aid, by insisting that Red China be hostile to Red Russia.

And if all that isn't enough to make Uncle Sam suspect that Owen Lattimore is making a fool out of him in the interests of world communism, the expert goes much further: "The new government of China will claim China's Big Five position in the United Nations, including the right of veto. By the use of our own veto we could delay China in moving into this position," but of course it would be unfair to deprive Russia of another vote, especially since Russia has had nothing whatsoever to do with imposing communism on China. See now why the pinks are so strong on their insistence that the Red movement in China is purely nationalistic? And another vote for Mother Russia?

Let's take Outer Mongolia, that voted unanimously to be annexed to Russia in 1945—each voter being required to sign his name on his ballot. "Mongolia," he says, "is between a Communist-ruled Russia and a Communist-controlled China. It would be an advantage to American policy to be able to emphasize that there is a country occupying 600,000 square miles of territory * * * inhabited by people who are neither Chinese nor Russians. It is impossible to make use of this advantage unless the separation of Outer Mongolia is emphasized by membership in the United Nations. * * * It is true that Mongolia as a member of the United Nations would mean another vote for Russia; but would this be a greater disadvantage than our present complete lack of access to this key country between China and Russia?" (p. 226).

Yes, Mr. Lattimore, it would. Considering that the whole United States has but one vote in the United Nations, while Russia started out with three, it is simply wonderful of Owen Lattimore to give a couple more Far East satellite votes to our "cold war" enemy. Since he is one of the chief advisers to our Far Eastern State Department Bureau, is it any wonder that disaster has been piled on disaster in Asia for Americans while world communism engages in frenzied applause? If Mr. Lattimore is permitted to turn over one Far Eastern vote after another to Russia, Moscow will soon dominate the United Nations, and then can safely discard the veto. Why should one man, whose writings show he has no knowledge of the character of China's Reds, be allowed to go on unchallenged promoting chaos and ruining Christianity in Asia? True, he doesn't say he wants a Red Asia; but the publisher of his Situation in Asia indicates his intentions when on the jacket of the book they print a map of Lattimore's Asia, including Japan, Sakhalin, all of China, the Philippines, the Dutch East Indies, Siam, Burma, Malaya, and India, in nice Soviet Red.

CHINA'S COMMUNISTS TOLD ME—A SPECIALIST IN FAR EASTERN AFFAIRS INTERVIEWS THE LEADING MEN OF RED CHINA IN THEIR HOME TERRITORIES

(By Philip J. Jaffe)

Fifteen days before Japanese troops opened fire on a Chinese garrison near Peiping, I was seated in the one bare room which is the home of Mao Tse-tung, the political leader of the Chinese Communist Party. In the course of the interview Mao Tse-tung said to me: "Japan cannot stop now. Japan wants to swallow China. Its next step will not be long delayed. You ask about the future of the united front? The united front is inevitable because Japan's invasion farther into the heart of China is inevitable."

Twenty-four hours later, in the military headquarters of the former Chinese Red Army, only two big rooms, walls covered with huge military maps, I asked the most famous of the Communist commanders, General Chu Teh: "Why do you think that General Chiang Kai-shek will have to accept the aid of the Red Army?"

Chu Teh replied: "A form of the united front has now existed for several months and has resulted in a large measure of internal peace. The Chinese bourgeoisie, however, is not easily able to forget its ten-year fight against the Red Army. But when the war with Japan eventually begins, it will not be a question of what the bourgeoisie wants; they will have to have the Red Army. In a war with Japan, it will not only be a question of regular troops. China must also depend on its peasants and workers whom the Communists alone can lead. It is not merely the numbers of the army which count; it is the mass population as well. If Chiang Kai-shek thinks that he can raise a large army to fight Japan, without at the same time enrolling the masses as the backbone of the struggle, then he will be rudely disappointed. No war against Japan can be successful without a correct organization of the peasants and workers, and this only the Red Army can successfully carry out."

Two weeks later I knew that the prophecy made by the two famous leaders of the former Chinese Red Army had been fulfilled. On July 7, Japan invaded North China. On August 22, the first stage of the united front—that of military cooperation—was concluded between the Nanking and Red Armies. In the words of the official communiqué from Nanking, "the Chinese government and the Communist army have been fighting for the last ten years; this is the official conclusion of the war." Mao Tse-tung has since been appointed governor of the former Soviet region, now renamed the Special Administrative District. Chu Teh has been appointed commander-in-chief of the former Red Army, now called the Eighth Route Army. Chou En-lai, another outstanding Communist with whom I spoke, is the official Communist representative on the general staff in Nanking.

Mao Tse-tung, political leader.—Yenan is the capital of the former Soviet region. On June 21, after four days' travel from Sian, the capital of Shensi province, scene of the Chiang Kai-shek incident of last December, through semi-starved villages, on bridgeless rivers and roads deep with gullies, we finally passed through the beautiful, ancient main gate of Yenan. We were greeted at the gate by Agnes Smedley, the distinguished American writer and an old friend of the Chinese people. While in Yenan, our party which included beside myself, T. A. Bisson of the Foreign Policy Association, and Owen Lattimore, editor of Pacific Affairs, stayed at the Foreign Office. The building was soon buzzing with excitement. We had barely finished our first dinner in Yenan, when guests arrived: Ting Ling, China's foremost woman writer; Li Li-san, an old associate of Dr. Sun Yat-sen; the only two non-Chinese then in the region, Agnes Smedley and Peggy Snow, wife of the American writer, Edgar Snow, and many Communist leaders. Before long, we were talking and singing in a variety of languages. In the midst of our animated discussion, somebody entered quietly and sat down. "Comrade Mao," someone said—Mao Tse-tung, the political leader of the then Chinese Soviet Government.

We spent many hours with him after that evening—at interviews, during meals, at the theater—and we were increasingly impressed by the complete sincerity and lack of ostentation that is so typical of him and of the other leaders we saw. It was during these visits that we grew to feel his tremendous force, a force likely to be overlooked at first because of the low, even voice, the quiet restraint of his movements, and the beautiful hands, almost too delicate for a soldier, but so dexterous with the writing brush. But the quiet voice speaks with brilliance and authority, the movements of the tall slim body with slightly stopped shoulders are sure and well coördinated. Like all other Red Army commanders, Mao wears exactly the same uniform as the rank-and-file soldiers, eats the same food, sleeps on the same sort of k'ang (a low, long bed of stone), avoids all social ceremonies, and altogether lives an extremely simple life. It becomes easy to understand the tremendous personal appeal which Mao has as a leader. This leadership dates from the first organizational meeting of the committee which organized the Chinese Communist Party in Shanghai in 1920. Mao was an important figure at that meeting.

Our interviews with Mao Tse-tung were many and on a host of topics: the evolution of Nanking's policy; the inner political struggle within Nanking; the Sian incident; the united front; the student movement; the role of other powers in Far Eastern affairs; and the perspectives of China's future development, etc. But since Mao Tse-tung asked me to transmit a message to the American people, it is perhaps best to confine his remarks to those concerning America and its isolationist policy.

"Though there are many Americans who are isolationist in principle," he began, "America is not and cannot be isolationist. America is in this respect like other capitalist countries: part proletariat, part capitalist. Neither one nor the other can be isolationist. Capitalism in the imperialist countries is world-wide, and so is the problem of liberation which needs the effort of the world proletariat. Not only does China need the help of the American proletariat, but the American proletariat also needs the help of the Chinese peasants and workers. The relation of American capitalism to China is similar to that of other capitalist countries. These countries have common interests as well as conflicting ones—common in that they all exploit China, conflicting in that each wants what the other has, as exemplified by the conflict between Great Britain and the United States, as well as between Japan, Britain, and the United States. If China is subjugated by Japan, it will not only be a catastrophe for the Chinese people, but a serious loss to other imperialist powers."

At this point Mao was handed a wireless message announcing both the fall of Bilbao and the resignation of France's premier, Léon Blum. We discussed the probable causes of both these events. Mao clearly showed his grasp of the world situation, despite the isolating distance. We took time off to answer a host of questions, this time by him. What is the comparative strength of the Socialist and Communist Parties in America? Did we know the life-stories of John L. Lewis and Earl Browder? The strength of the American labor unions? The Trotskyites? American official opinion on the Far East?

Then Mao Tse-tung continued: "The Chinese revolution is not an exception, it is one part of the world revolution. It has special characteristics, but fundamentally it is similar to the Spanish, French, American, and British struggles. These struggles are all progressive. Therein lies their similarity. It is this similarity that evokes the broad sympathy of the American masses and their concern with the fate of the Chinese people. We, on our part, are also concerned with the fate of the American people. Please convey this message to your people. The difference between our peoples lies in this: the Chinese people, unlike the Americans, are oppressed by outside invaders. The American people are, of course, oppressed from the inside, but not by feudal forces. It is the hope common to all of us that our two countries shall work together."

Chu Teh, military leader.—Though Chu Teh is known to the outside world for his military exploits, his other activities are many and varied. We first met Chu Teh in a class he was teaching on the "Fundamental Problems of the Chinese Revolution." Wearing spectacles, he could very well have been mistaken for a professional teacher. At the People's Anti-Japanese Military Political University at Yenai, he teaches both military tactics and Marxist-Leninist principles. From 1922 to 1925, Chu Teh studied political and economic science, philosophy, and military strategy in Germany. As a result he speaks German freely. His favorite recreations are reading, conversation, horseback riding, and basketball. The latter sport is a subject for much fun among the troops. His love for the game is greater than his ability and he can often be found hanging about a group which is choosing sides. If he is not picked, he quietly moves on to the next court in the hope that there his luck will turn. My greatest disappointment at Yenai was that rain ruined an appointment we had to play basketball with him.

Chu Teh, commander-in-chief of the Eighth Route Army, is the personification of the spirit of these armies which for ten years have been continuously victorious in the face of overwhelming odds. His career has been devoted mainly to the military side of revolutionary activities. Fifty-one years old, he has taken part in the entire development of modern China, from the overthrow of the Manchu dynasty in 1911 to the present struggle against Japan. Beginning with August 1, 1927, when, together with another famous Red commander, Ho Lung, he organized the Nanchang uprising, he participated in exploits which have now become legend. In November 1931, the first All-Soviet Congress in Juikiu, Kiangsi, bestowed upon him the title of commander-in-chief of the army. Even in Nanking I heard many call Chu Teh the greatest military genius in all China.

There is strength and assurance in that square, stocky figure, in that strong peasant face, weather beaten by a life of campaigning, and in those small bright eyes which are quite hidden when he laughs, and he laughs frequently. We took a picture of him standing with legs apart and hands on hips. That is Chu Teh.

"The Red Army in this region under our direct command numbers about ninety thousand," he began. "This force occupies a contiguous territory extending from North Shensi to East Kansu and South Ningsia. From Yenai to Sanyan there are some partisan troops in Kuomintang uniforms. In this region professional full-time partisans number from ten to twenty thousand. The number of part-time partisans is much larger; their duties are to maintain order in their districts.

"Of the ninety thousand regular troops here, only twenty to thirty thousand come from the original Kiangsi district. About thirty thousand were recruited on the way, chiefly in Szechwan, and the rest are from local areas.

"In other partisan areas there are various groups numbering from one to three thousand soldiers, but it is hard to estimate the total figure; we ourselves are not certain about this. These partisan areas are located in southern Shensi (southwest of Sian), the Fukien-Kiangsi border, the Honan-Hupeh-Anhui border, northeastern Kiangsi, the Hunan-Hupeh-Kiangsi border, the Kwangtung-Hunan border, the Kiangsi-Hunan border, and the Shensi-Szechwan border. Connections with several of these are still maintained, but not with all; and these connections are irregular and uncertain." Asked if we might publish this, Chu Teh replied: "It doesn't matter. The fact is well known throughout China."

Having seen many Red troops carrying on their maneuvers with excellent new rifles, machine guns, automatic rifles, and the ubiquitous Mausers, we were curious to know how well armed they were as a whole. Chu Teh replied, "Our regular ninety thousand troops in the Shensi-Kansu-Ninghsia region are in general well armed. Other equipment, such as clothes, food, and supplies, is not satisfactory. Although it greatly improved after the Sian incident, it is still far from sufficient. Though we had established contact with Chang Hsueh-liang before the Sian affair, it was only during the two weeks following the actual incident that any large quantity of munitions, clothing, and food reached us."

As Chu Teh continued the conversation, punctuated frequently by his broad, genial smile, he came to the discussion of his well-known theory of the military tactics necessary to defeat Japan, namely, to avoid decisive engagements in the early stages in favor of guerrilla tactics to encircle the enemy and harass it until its morale was shattered. We wanted to know something about the Manchurian volunteers. Were they really well-organized or were they mere hungry "bandits"?

"At first," Chu Teh said, "the Manchurian volunteers were largely impoverished peasants and the scattered remnants of the defeated Manchurian troops. They operated without a plan, could not accomplish much, and finally were almost destroyed. The Communist Party then began to organize new peasant detachments who were later joined by what remained of the original volunteers. As a result, most of these formerly leaderless forces have been converted into important detachments with wide popular support. This year there has been some increase in the number of volunteers along the Korean border, in eastern Fengtien, and in eastern Kirin. The increase has been more systematic than hitherto. New groups have recently been formed in Jehol and Chahar. About three months ago a report to me stated that the total number of Manchurian volunteers ranged from fifty to sixty thousand." In reply to a statement made by the Japanese to the effect that 70 percent of the Manchurian volunteers are Communists, Chu Teh said that this was not an exaggeration.

On the united front.—Of all the questions facing China and the former Soviet area the most important is that of the united front. No one in Soviet China knows the details of the negotiations more intimately than Chou En-lai, vice chairman of the Revolutionary Military Council, and second in importance only to Mao Tse-tung. It was he who carried on all the negotiations with Chiang Kai-shek. Born thirty-nine years ago of a mandarin family, Chou En-lai joined the revolutionary movement in 1911. Upon his return to China in 1924 from a stay abroad, he became chief of the political department of the Whampoa Military Academy under the direction of Chiang Kai-shek. It is said that even today the generalissimo has a great fondness for Chou. When asked why the united-front conversations were then not moving very fast, Chou En-lai said: "The form of the Chinese united front is quite different from that in Europe or the United States. In China two parties fought each other for ten years. The Communist Party, representing the proletariat and peasantry, was a revolutionary party with its own areas and military forces as well as its own social, political, and economic system. The Kuomintang represented the ruling social groups throughout the rest of China. But the position of the Chinese bourgeoisie was such that the obstacles arising from their class position could not forever bar a united struggle against Japan. The bourgeoisie of China have at last come to realize that the Japanese invasion harms all classes and that, standing alone, they are too weak to safeguard China's freedom and independence."

Up to the time of Japan's most recent invasion, the united-front negotiations had progressed quite slowly though not without positive results. Internal peace had been achieved, and the two armies no longer fought each other. Confiscation of land in the Soviet regions was abolished. The name of the Red Army was changed. Dramatic troupes began to tour the countryside to teach the peasants the meaning of democratic elections. Nanking began to contribute a considerable, though as yet insufficient, sum of money monthly to the Soviet area. Technical difficulties made a complete united front often seem impossible. But Japan's military aggression scattered all the major obstacles.

The land problem.—Ever since October 1935, when the main body of the Communist armies from Central and South China began to arrive in north Shensi, their immediate objectives have been twofold. First, to build a permanent base for internal development, and second, and more important, to use this base as a spearhead for unifying all elements in China for a successful war of defense against the invading Japanese militarists. Despite the fact that the former Soviet area, the largest single contiguous territory ever held under Communist rule, started as one of the most economically backward areas in China, the welfare of the peasants and workers has been improved considerably. There is not sufficient room here to tell all that we saw and heard, but a few high spots, in the words of Po K'u, one of the important leaders of the region, will perhaps shed some light.

Po K'u's home and office is in the abandoned compound of an English Baptist mission. When we expressed surprise at finding religious pictures hanging on his walls, Po K'u said that he left the compound just as he found it in the hope that the missionaries would return.

In reply to several questions on the land confiscation problem, Po K'u said in quite good English: "When the first Soviets were established in 1933 in Shensi, all the good land along the river banks was in the hands of rich landlords who used the great famine of 1930 as a lever for confiscating this land. From then until the Sian incident in December 1936, all this land was divided among the peasants; all taxation and levies were abolished; democratic liberty was extended to all; peasants built up their own armed forces for their protection instead of relying on landlords' forces; and peasants enjoyed the aid and direction of the Soviet government to increase production, improve the land, and develop consumer cooperatives.

"After the Sian incident when the united-front conversations had already begun, the redistribution of land among the peasants was stopped in districts occupied after the beginning of the negotiations. In general, the ownership of land is not the main problem in this territory. Land is plentiful, for Shensi is thinly populated, with an average of one family to every thirteen miles. The form of exploitation and, therefore, the main problem are usury and excessive interest rates on money and cattle. Land rents and money lending rates, therefore, have been reduced drastically. The maximum rent now permitted in the Soviet areas is 30 percent of the land produce, and peasants can bargain with landlords to further reduce this percentage, while the money-lending rate has been reduced from a general 10 percent monthly rate to a maximum of 2 percent. Even last year, when warfare was still going on, the Soviet government spent one hundred thousand dollars for ploughs, seeds, etc., while this year there will be an additional cash distribution of sixty thousand dollars."

Apparently there has been a great deal of confusion about this abandonment of land confiscation. Mao Tse-tung's pithy words perhaps explain it most simply. He said: "It is not so much a question now of whether our land belongs to the peasants or the landlords, but whether it is Chinese or Japanese." The same reasoning is applied by the Communist leaders to the larger question of China as a whole. To all of them "it is not a question now of which general controls which province, but whether the land will remain Chinese or come under Japanese control. If the latter should happen, the original problem disappears."

Life in the Special Administrative District.—Our visit, however, did not consist only of a series of interviews. We visited stores and shops, noting with interest how much cleaner and more orderly they were than any we had seen on our trip, and how relatively well stocked they were. And the cheesecloth covering the food for sale stood in marked contrast to the cities in non-Soviet areas where the only coverings we had seen were armies of flies. Even the dogs, the most miserable of all living things in China, were active and barking. Anyone who has seen the worm-eaten, starved gaunt dogs of China, too weak even to move out of the way of a passing vehicle, will understand the meaning of that.

Culturally, too, the Soviet region is making great strides. Besides Yen-an, the present capital, three other cities are being developed as cultural centers: Tingpien, Yenchang, and Chingyang. Anti-Japanese academies and dramatic groups are the axes around which the cultural life is being developed. Study classes, reading rooms, theatricals, dances, lectures, and mass meetings are regular features of life in the Soviet territories. We were amused to hear the universal complaint of all librarians. "They keep the books out too long."

But most interesting and important of all was our visit to the theater. A troupe of players was scheduled to go on the road the following day, and they graciously went through their repertoire for us as well as for their own delighted audience. In a packed auditorium, seated on low, narrow, backless wooden benches, before a crude stage whose footlights were flickering candles, we sat through four hours of amazingly excellent plays, superbly acted. With perfect realism (so different from the classical Chinese theater) and delightful humor, they presented plays designed to teach the peasants how to vote and how to unite. They explained the value of cleanliness, of vaccination, of education, and the stupidity and danger of superstitions. At one point, for instance, one character complained of being tired. "We weren't tired on our seven thousand-mile march," was the reply. And the audience roared as did Mao, Chu Teh, and the rest of the leaders who sat next to us, having as good a time as anyone. The high spot of the evening was a really professional performance of a scene from Gorki's Mother, which had been given at the Gorki memorial evening celebrated in Yen-an, and a Living Newspaper by the young people on such subjects as bribery, bureaucracy, and hygiene. All these plays were being sent out to the villages.

Our visit to Yen-an was climaxed by a huge mass meeting, addressed by Chu Teh, Bisson, Lattimore, and myself and attended by the one thousand five hundred cadet students of the People's Anti-Japanese Military-Political University and about five hundred from other schools. Here are some questions asked of me. "What is the position of woman in the U. S. A.? How do American workers live and how developed is their movement? What are the results of Roosevelt's N. R. A. campaign? What is the present situation in the Left literary movement in America? What do the American people think of our long march west?" And innumerable questions concerning America's attitude in the event of a Sino-Japanese conflict, the American attitude toward the war in Spain, and what Americans think of the Kuomintang-Communist cooperation.

This stress on the role of the United States is altogether typical of the reaction throughout China. These people have traditionally considered Americans as their friends and they do not want us to fail them now. A few days after our arrival in Shanghai, I received a letter from Agnes Smedley which tells better than I am able how much hope and enthusiasm the visit of Americans evoked in the former Soviet regions.

"In my imagination I follow your journey from here, and my friends and I speculate as to your exact location day by day, and your exact occupation. I want to tell you that you left behind remarkable friends. I did not realize the effect of that meeting until two or three days had passed. Then it began to roll in. I have no reason to tell you tales. But the meeting, and your speech in particular, has had a colossal effect upon all people. One was so moved by it that he could not sleep that night but spent the night writing a poem in praise of you all. I enclose the poem. It is not good from the literary viewpoint. But from the viewpoint of the emotion behind it, it is of value. It is a deeply passionate poem. It is not good enough to publish, but it is good enough to carry next to your heart in the years to come. To that meeting, it may interest you to know, came delegations sent by every institution. Many institutions could not cross the rivers. But they sent activists, groups of six to a dozen. They later gave extensive reports. I am getting those reports from instructors day by day. All are deeply impressed and moved and grateful to you and all of you. There has never been anything like this here before."

CHINA'S PART IN A COALITION WAR

(By T. A. Bisson)

(Mr. Bisson is a member of the International Secretariat of the Institute of Pacific Relations)

The recent Chinese victory helps to swell the tide of United Nations' military successes as the decisive summer of 1943 begins. It coincides with the first significant Anglo-American triumphs in Europe, and links together the two global fronts—East and West—more unmistakably and more prophetically than ever before. Already, as the Mediterranean is cleared for United Nations' merchant shipping, Japan girds herself for the sterner test which her military leaders see ahead.

The Chinese victory is playing an even more important role in the political field, for it tends to ease the serious friction which had developed between China and the other members of the United Nations. It was a victory won mainly by Chinese armed forces. As such, it gives the lie to the alarmists, both in and outside China, who were beginning to clamor that the economic situation had become so bad that the collapse of Chinese resistance to Japan was threatened.

But the victory was also won in collaboration with the United States 14th Air Force Command. As such, it was a demonstration that some American aid—little enough in the face of the needs of the Chinese front, and pitifully meager when measured against the past contributions of China for the fight against Japanese aggression—was being practically effective in a current operation.

It is to be hoped that, in the wake of the recent Roosevelt-Churchill strategy conferences at Washington, further military aid of a similar practical nature has been scheduled for China. More than airplanes are needed. Preparations for a Burma campaign should be already well under way if operations are to begin this fall, as our military commentators have indicated.¹

There are no sound reasons, moreover, for accepting the pessimistic conclusion that China is unable to help herself, pending the arrival of military or economic aid on a large scale. In a significant review of the Hupeh campaign, General Ch'en Ch'eng declared on June 9, from his headquarters at Enshih, that the initial Japanese penetration of difficult terrain "was due to our negligence."² He then went on to state that it was necessary for China "to coordinate the military, political and economic aspects" of the war, and "to intensify preparations for a counterattack."

From a Chinese commander in Ch'en Ch'eng's position, there are strong words. They are a double rebuke. They imply, in the first place, that the Kuomintang armies displayed a military passivity during the first phase of the Japanese advance. They suggest, in the second place, that a more comprehensive and energetic mobilization of China's war potential is required in order to pass to the attack. With both China and the other United Nations doing their full share in the coming months, it should be possible to make the situation much more difficult for the Japanese forces in China.

An easy attainment of these desirable ends should not be expected. They can be accomplished only if the changes in policy required by a united war in the Far East are made by China, as well as by the other members of the United Nations. The disunity which featured this past winter is the result of a long series of mistakes, omissions and failures, past and present, which have combined to weave a network of frustration around "the China problem." There have been legitimate grievances on the part of China. Some of these still exist and should be remedied. Others are mixed with a past which at this time might better be buried and forgotten.

FEARS ABOUT KUOMINTANG POLICY

There have been well-justified fears and apprehensions over the trend of Kuomintang policy within China, shared by some of the keenest and most discerning friends of the Chinese people in countries abroad. These apprehensions are based on a careful appraisal of conditions in China, as will be indicated in some detail later on in this article. They cannot be lightly dismissed. They affect not only the current prosecution of the war, but also the prospects for the postwar emergence of a stable, united and democratic China.

It is essential that the mistakes of the United Nations in dealing with China, as well as China's own shortcomings should be brought into the open and subjected to critical examination. Immuendoes and behind-the-scenes speculation and gossip, which have largely taken the place of frank and open statements in recent months, have a much more serious effect than forthright exchanges on the issues now uppermost. Frank appraisal of these issues becomes disruptive and harmful only if used in bitterness and with a desire to wound. Critical examination should rather be directed toward uncovering mistakes and unhealthy tendencies, and indicating the path to be taken to correct them.

MISTAKES IN UNITED NATIONS' POLICY

Present Chinese grievances are cast against an historical background in which China suffered greatly from policies followed by western nations now engaged in the common struggle against Axis aggression. It is unnecessary at this time to enter into a discussion of this background, including China's long and painful efforts to throw off the shackles imposed by the "unequal treaties." Fortunately, the treaties recently concluded with China by Great Britain and the United

² China Daily News, June 19, 1943. General Ch'en Ch'eng had been previously transferred (probably in February) from this vital sector to the Yunnan front, but was recalled to command of the Hupeh operations after the Japanese offensive had developed.

States, which provide for the abolition of the extraterritorial system, promise a speedy termination of this long-standing injustice.

Proper appreciation of this historical fact should lead to somewhat more-generous policies in working out arrangements already made and others which may prove necessary. It is advisable, for example, that agreements for the rendition of leaseholds, such as Kowloon and Kwangchowwan, and for the return to China of Hongkong be worked out now and announced as soon as possible. It is also necessary that the postwar restoration of Manchuria and Formosa to China be unequivocally indicated. A declaration that Korea shall obtain its freedom is required in more formal terms than hitherto stated. Exclusion laws on the United States' statute books are a standing affront to the Chinese. Finally, China is rightfully interested in the postwar future of India and the countries of Southern Asia. There can be no real independence for China in a Far East that remains largely colonial or semicolonial.

These are not the burning issues of the moment, but they are directly related to the task of winning the allegiance of all Far Eastern peoples, including the Chinese, and therefore to an efficient and effective prosecution of the war.

MILITARY AID NEEDED

The issue of more immediate concern to China is that of military aid and support. This question also has its historical setting. For some four years, nearly up to Pearl Harbor, China held the fort against Japanese aggression virtually alone. The aid rendered to her by the United States and Britain was almost purely economic; up to 1941, they had supplied little or no munitions of war to the Chinese armies. During this period, moreover, the economic aid to China was heavily outweighed by the stream of American and British strategic materials flowing across the Pacific to the Japanese war machine.

All this formed the background to Pearl Harbor. Immediately thereafter, China experienced a further series of chilling disillusionments. Within a few months, Japanese forces had swept the British and Americans out of their Far Eastern strongholds. Some of the circumstances attending this defeat which directly affected the Chinese cut more deeply than the defeat itself. At Hongkong, the local Chinese population was not permitted a share in the military operations, while in Malaya the attempt to enlist the Chinese in the defense of the peninsula was made too late to be effective. Negotiations attending the entry of Chinese troops into Burma were inexcusably protracted. When defeat came in Burma, too, China saw the last of her road-and-rail links to the Pacific cut for an indefinite period.

These factors reinforced the validity of China's demand for effective military aid. Yet at the moment when the validity of her demand stood at its highest point, and political barriers ("neutrality" or appeasement policies) had been removed, the facilities for satisfying that demand suddenly became most circumscribed.

Some assistance has been rendered during the past 18 months. On the economic front, the 500-million-dollar loan has been a positive psychological factor, even though its full utilization has been made impossible by the inability to send goods into China in large amounts. Small quantities of munitions and supplies have been flown in from India. The former devastating bombings of Chungking have ceased, as a result both of the appearance of an American air force in China and of Japan's preoccupation with other fronts in the Pacific war. In addition to their defense role, American planes have conducted modest bombing forays and participated in tactical operations supporting Chinese ground forces.

It still remains true that the sum total of this aid is lamentably small. More transport planes can be assigned to the India-China air route, both to increase the flow of war materials into China and to expand the American air forces now operating from Chinese bases. It is probable that the increased emphasis on the Pacific war fronts, recorded in the Churchill-Roosevelt conferences, includes expansion of this air freight being carried into China.

The recent Burma campaign was thoroughly disappointing. Much larger air and naval forces must be employed in any operation meant to be decisive in this theater. To the Chinese, the effectiveness of military aid is measured by the quantity of weapons reaching China and by the seriousness of the effort made to reconquer Burma.

CHINA MISPLAYS HER HAND

The strength of China's case is such that it requires no elaboration. Before Pearl Harbor, the western democracies were already heavily indebted to China; since then, the indebtedness has steadily increased. The importance of China's position in the Far East, both during and after the war, requires that this account be fully discharged in the shortest time possible.

There was no need to pass beyond the bounds of this argument. It rests on unassailable foundations. It is unanswerable, save by action on the part of the western democracies.

In the American forum of this past winter, nevertheless, the tragic fact is that China badly misplayed her hand. Instead of conducting the debate along the above lines, the representatives of Chungking called into question the basic strategy of the war. On more than one occasion, in private as well as in public, the demand was voiced that Japan rather than Germany should be made Enemy No. 1, or that forces comparable to those being utilized in Europe should be sent into the Pacific.

In choosing this ground for debate, China's representatives were committing three basic mistakes. They were demonstrably wrong, in the first place, on the point at issue. The consensus of expert military opinion is overwhelming on the fact that the German war machine is more formidable than the Japanese. United Nations' war potential—Russian, British, American—is predominantly concentrated in the European-Atlantic theater of operations. With logistics playing the great role which it does in this war, and in view of the acute shipping shortage, it was inevitable that the choice be made to eliminate the nearest enemy first.

Above all, this choice had been made early in 1942; by last winter, it had clearly become the settled strategy on which the war was to be waged. To reverse that strategy in the winter of 1942-43, after the North African campaign had begun, would obviously have been unwise and dangerous. The demand that relatively equal forces be dispatched to the Pacific is merely a variant of the same thesis, with similarly dangerous possibilities.

APPEAL TO THE ISOLATIONISTS

In the second place, taking domestic politics in the United States into consideration, the appeal to reverse the strategy of the war represented a tactical blunder of the first importance. It brought under attack a policy to which President Roosevelt was thoroughly committed. More, it made its strongest domestic appeal to the political opponents of the administration. These were, at the same time, the isolationists who had supported appeasement of Japan, who had strongly opposed aid to China, in the pre-Pearl Harbor days. It was no accident, but a logical development, that these same elements should now be clamoring loudest of all for a policy "to defeat Hirohito first." Diversion of much of the United Nations' strength to the Far East, before Hitler was disposed of, would be the surest path to defeat on both sides of the globe. The appeal to these forces failed, as it was bound to fail, and China's cause thereby suffered a bad set-back in the United States.

In the third place, it was equally an error to lead the argument along lines which suggested that China was in danger of imminent collapse. This plea, strongly advanced by many Chinese in the United States this past winter, argued a weakness on China's part which the stubborn resistance of previous years belied. It verged on a propaganda claim which the best-informed students of Chinese conditions were not willing to accept at face value, despite the admittedly serious economic situation which prevailed.

The argument that "you must save us quickly or all is lost" had dangerously confusing implications. To some Americans it suggested that China might have to be written off as an effective ally in the immediate perspective of the war, and that she would have to be picked up again at a later stage when greater forces could be ranged against Japan. Much the sounder position for China would have been to put up a strong front, to dig in and fight even harder, at the moment of crisis. China's representatives could then have argued from strength and not from weakness.

DOUBTS RAISED IN THE UNITED STATES

The net results of this American forum on the position and prospects of China in the war have been confusing and, to some extent, disheartening. As the debate proceeded, it tended to disillusion many of the groups in the United States best able to help China. It raised questions as to the political judgment of the Kuomintang regime and the representatives of Chungking who were acting for China in the United States. It weakened the case for more effective Chinese representation in the highest military councils of the United Nations where the basic decisions on strategy are made. In many quarters, it strengthened existing reservations as to the methods and conditions which should be applied in the extension of aid to China.

Still more, it left questions in the minds of many Americans as to what lay behind the ineptness of the political tactics applied to Chinese relations with this country. The answers to these questions must be sought, in large part, in the changes which have occurred in China's political and economic life during the past few years.

TWO CHINAS

At the outset of such an analysis, it is necessary to repeat an important generalization stressed by many commentators on Chinese affairs—that the early promise held out by the war for the broadening and deepening of Chinese national unity through the achievement of liberal political and economic reforms, has not been fulfilled.³ This promise, in fact, died early in the war.

It received its best documentary expression in "The Program of National Resistance and Reconstruction" adopted by an emergency session of the Kuomintang Congress at Hankow, on March 29, 1938.⁴ The democratic provisions even of this program, which was not without shortcomings, were not carried out, and this high point of the first year of the war soon became a melancholy landmark.

Early in 1939 the Kuomintang conservatives became alarmed at the rapid reconquest and reorganization of territories behind the Japanese lines by the Eighth Route and New Fourth, Communist-led, armies.⁵ Clashes, at first sporadic, soon became more frequent. Early in 1941, the New Fourth army was outlawed by the Chungking military authorities, following an abortive effort to destroy its headquarters corps and crush its leadership. Central Government aid to the Eighth Route army had meanwhile lapsed; and the blockade of the Shen-Kan-Ning Border Region by Kuomintang forces, numbering some 500,000 and commanded by General Hu Tsung-nan, has since continued.

A year or more before Pearl Harbor, therefore, two Chinas had definitely emerged. Each had its own government, its own military forces, its own territories. More significant, each had its own characteristic set of political and economic institutions. One is now generally called Kuomintang China; the other is called Communist China.

However, these are only party labels. To be more descriptive, the one might be called feudal China; the other, democratic China.⁶ These terms express the actualities as they exist today, the real institutional distinctions between the two Chinas.

COMPARISON OF CASUALTIES INFLICTED

In an attempt to analyze these differences, it should be recognized at once that one is not dealing with irrelevant abstractions. The institutions which characterize one China as feudal and the other as democratic have the most practical relevance to the leading problems of the day. They are, in fact, the determinants of all policies, domestic and international, espoused by the two Chinas. They explain, as will be indicated, why Kuomintang China is compelled to demand immediate aid on a scale so great as to necessitate reversal of United Nation's global military strategy. They also explain the declining rate of casualties inflicted on the Japanese by the Kuomintang armies, as contrasted with the increasing rate of casualties inflicted by the Eighth Route and New Fourth armies.

According to official reports, the Kuomintang armies have inflicted on the Japanese average annual casualties (in a total of 66 months) of 354,935, while the combined annual average for the Eighth Route (58 months' total) and the New Fourth (48 months' total) amounted to 113,338. For the last comparable year (July 1941-June 1942), however, the absolute figures are respectively 182,094 and 130,010. In other words, the Kuomintang armies show an average annual record of 76 percent of total casualties inflicted, but in 1941-42 their achievement falls to only 58 percent of the total. On the other hand, the record of the Eighth Route and New Fourth armies was lifted to 42 percent of the total in 1941-42, as against an annual average of 24 percent.

⁴ For text, see Amerasia, April 25, 1943, pp. 118-120.

The significance of this comparison is that it excludes the problems of blockade and foreign aid. Indeed, in these respects, the advantage lies entirely on the side of the Kuomintang armies. They are supported by incomparably larger populations and richer territories. They have enjoyed the benefit of virtually all the military and economic aid rendered China by foreign nations. Since before Pearl Harbor, the Eighth Route and New Fourth armies have been doubly blockaded, by the Japanese on one side and by the Kuomintang armies on the other.

The differences indicated by the casualty figures must therefore be explained solely on the basis of efficiency or lack of efficiency in the mobilization of the human and material resources of the two Chinas. This question forces one back to an examination of the institutions which differentiate the two regions.

DEMOCRATIC CHINA

The key to the successful mobilization of the war potential of so-called Communist China lies in the extent to which its leaders have thrown off the feudal incubus which has weighed China down for centuries. No single measure can be pointed to as the open sesame which has increasingly achieved this objective. Economic reforms have been intertwined with political reforms, the one supporting the other. Basic to the whole program has been the land reform which has freed the peasant—the primary producer in these areas, and, indeed, over most of China—from the crushing weight of rent, taxes, and usurious interest charges as levied by a feudal economy.

But the ingenuity of this reform, without which it could hardly be made to work, is that the newly introduced procedures of local democracy serve as the final sanction. The landlord and entrepreneur are not excluded from this process, but neither are they permitted to dominate it. Tax assessment committees, for example, are controlled by a majority of local members and exercise a strictly local jurisdiction. Farmers know well what their neighbors own.

Over wide areas of this new China, elected councils—village, town, and district—and elected executive officials have completely supplanted the old autocratic system of feudal agrarian China. These councils and officials are either unpaid or receive mere pittance which leave them no better off economically than their fellow citizens.

It is this democratic process, finally, which permits a large measure of free competition to operate over the whole of the economy. Bureaucratic price controls are not attempted. They are as unnecessary in this society as they would be in a New England town meeting. No landlord or merchant, with the watchful eyes of his neighbors upon him, can engage in hoarding or speculation. Within limits set mainly by local democratic checks, the individual landlord or entrepreneur is free, and is even encouraged, to expand his operations, and many are doing so.

By no stretch of the imagination can this be termed communism; it is, in fact, the essence of bourgeois democracy, applied mainly to agrarian conditions. The leaders in Yenan see in this program more than the answer to China's immediate problem of efficiently mobilizing her resources for the war against Japan. They see in it also the means of throwing off China's feudal shackles, the transition to modern nationhood.

FEUDAL CHINA

The declining curve of military achievement by the Kuomintang armies is correlated with a progressive decrease in the economic strength of Kuomintang China. While this decrease is notable, there is no need to adopt the alarmist view that collapse is inevitable. The human and material resources of Kuomintang China are large. Its economic reserves are still considerable. So also are its military reserves and potentialities.

General Ch'en Cheng's use of the term "negligence" clearly implied that more could be done with the military resources at hand than was being done. Concentration on the demand for more planes and guns from abroad, in other words, was getting in the way of full utilization of the weapons and forces at hand. General Ch'en Ch'eng has since given a specific illustration of this situation by pointing out that the American planes were based too far from the fighting fronts to be fully effective in the Hupeh campaign.⁷ An attitude of military passivity is revealed by this failure to develop facilities for air action near the front. The alert, active seizure of opportunities open even to limited means is evidently lacking.

These considerations also apply to the economic sphere, although the problem is far more complicated and difficult. Here, too, General Ch'en Ch'eng's comments go straight to the nub of the issue. He states that "there should be unrelenting vigilance and intensified preparations for counterattacks through military, political and economic coordination."⁸

This is a demand for more vigorous action on the home front, with an emphasis sharply different from pleas for help from outside. As has already been seen, questions of blockade and outside aid are not necessarily decisive for effective military resistance, providing an efficient economic mobilization is accomplished.

In Kuomintang China, such a mobilization is severely handicapped by the leaders' unwillingness to challenge the basic postulates of the feudal system. No serious effort has been made to uproot the landlord-usurer system. With the port cities and their nascent bourgeois class removed, the landlords have become the economic mainstay of the Kuomintang regime.

BUREAUCRACY TIGHTENS HOLD

At the same time, the bureaucracy has taken over administration of a considerable slice of industrial production. Many industries have become government monopolies, not forced to maintain themselves in competition with private industry. Industrial development under private initiative, valuable as an offset to feudal relations, and needed in an economy of scarcity, was thus choked off at the very time when stimulation of the entrepreneur was justified. The declining numbers and strength of the industrial class weakened its challenge to the landlord-bureaucrat regime, thereby putting new props under the tottering structure of Chinese feudalism.

In these circumstances, there could be no real progress toward democratic reform or wider civil liberties. Inauguration of constitutional government, considered for a time in 1938, was eventually shelved for the duration. Non-Kuomintang representatives on the People's Political Council, which could have evolved into a national legislature, have steadily decreased. Over the new Political Councils in the provinces, Kuomintang control is carefully maintained. In the so-called "new hsien system," embodying the program for instituting representative local government, candidates will be limited to those who have acceptably passed through Kuomintang training schools, while suffrage will be indirect and linked to the household units of the pao-chia system. These developments do not promise to create effective popular checks on the Kuomintang bureaucracy.

With no effort at reform of the land system or initiation of democratic processes, the two basic prerequisites for an efficient wartime economic mobilization were lacking. As conditions deteriorated, successive measures looking toward the institution of a "controlled economy" were introduced. The bureaucracy steadily expanded until its relative cost, measured against the limited output of the productive system, itself became a drag on the war effort.

Even so, it could institute neither price nor commodity controls that were adequate to stay the course of inflation. Grain hoarding and speculation, the key factor in Kuomintang China's inflationary problem, could be curbed by nothing less than genuine popular participation in application of the controls. This solution was barred. In a country predominantly agrarian, with the landlords still entrenched in their feudal positions, no centralized government organ could send out the multitude of agents required to enforce its paper controls. True as it would, the bureaucracy could not solve this problem, and the economic foundations of the war effort were increasingly undermined.

It is at this point that the true relevance of foreign aid to an economy of the Kuomintang model becomes evident. In order to conduct war on the basis of such an economy, access to the outside world is imperative. Steady injections of foreign supplies were in fact pumped into Kuomintang China up to Pearl Harbor, although in declining amounts after 1940.

⁷ New York Times, June 28, 1943. The same paper on June 29 carried Ch'en Ch'eng's statement that China needed "guns and equipment of all kinds," and would welcome "even one-thousandth part of one percent" of United States production.

This extreme dependence on aid from the outside is a key which unlocks many mysteries. It provides an adequate explanation for the declining rate of the Kuomintang armies' military achievements. It also explains the persistent outcry in Chungking for a reversal of United Nations' strategy, as expressed in the editorials of its leading papers.⁹ The desperate need for outside assistance felt by Kuomintang China could only be met by such a reversal of strategy, since this alone would bring aid quickly on a large scale. And, finally, this appeal was logically transferred directly to the United States in the propaganda campaign conducted last winter.

Obviously, the resources available in Free China are much too limited to encompass the defeat of Japan. Large amounts of outside supplies are essential if the Chinese armies are to be equipped for successful offensives. Until then, however, the need is for the most effective utilization and development of the resources at hand.

Elements within Kuomintang China are making efforts to achieve this end, as indicated by the forthright statements of General Ch'en Ch'eng. Strong forces are working to establish greater freedom for the entrepreneur, as a means to increase industrial production. The industrial cooperative movement, once freed of bureaucratic restrictions, would be able to forge ahead more rapidly. With proper encouragement, these sound elements within Kuomintang China can do much to overcome current economic weaknesses, although more thoroughgoing reforms are necessary in order to effect complete mobilization.

A COALITION WAR—AND ITS REQUIREMENTS

The United States, as the arsenal of democracy, bears a heavy responsibility for the war program of the United Nations. Its immense productive effort has begun to register with increasing effect on the war fronts. As the German tide in Europe recedes, the pressure on Japan will steadily increase. It is clearly essential that China, which has borne the heat and burden of the defensive in the Far East, should have a full and significant share in the victorious offensives that are now in the making. Toward this end, it would be advisable that China be given an adequate voice in framing the decisions on strategic policy. But China herself must change, if she is to make her full contribution to a coalition war.

Realistic thinking on this problem will be stimulated if there is candid recognition that two Chinas exist at the present time. The task of statesmanship is to merge these two Chinas into one. To be sound and effective, such unification must come on the high plane of social advance and democratic reform. Until unification is achieved on this plane, China's full strength cannot be placed behind the war effort.

It is also necessary to recognize that Kuomintang China is passing through a serious crisis. The challenge is for a renewal of the forward-looking elements in the party of Sun Yat-sen and a bold cutting loose from an archaic past. Defections of allegiance, already occurring, will tend to increase as reform is postponed, and the leadership of the China of the future may well pass to the progressive forces outside the Kuomintang.

These issues in China pose a delicate and difficult problem for the other members of the United Nations. They are issues of such fundamental importance, however, that they cannot be ignored. Not only does the effective prosecution of the war during its final phase depend on the answers given. The future status of China as a healthy and vigorous nation, in which the people's livelihood is safeguarded by the democratic processes, is at stake. Only such a China, moreover, can bring to the family of nations that level of constructive statesmanship that will be needed to guard the peace that the war has won.

RED MYTHS, STARRING CHINA

(By Louis Francis Budenz, for Collier's)

America will be rocked, during the coming year, by mounting espionage revelations. Shock after shock is about to be given the American people as to the extent their national security has been placed at the mercy of the Soviet dictatorship, through native American traitors. The activities of Eugene Dennis, present secretary of the Communist Party, in the stealing of information from the Office of Strategic Services during World War II, in itself constitutes one of the gravest scandals that has ever hit this country.

Right now there is a great burning of documents in Communist conspiratorial hide-aways and many feverish consultations as to how to cover up the widespread looting by Moscow of our official files and secrets.

Along with this espionage, went an equally grave offense, which was carried through with high success by Soviet agents; the winning of the confidence of American public officials in order to influence and dictate American foreign policies. It is ironical that America's path in China has been exactly that mapped out by Soviet agents here in the United States on behalf of Communist China. The whole idea of "coalition government"—which American officialdom swallowed hook, line, and sinker and which led to the withholding of real aid to nationalist China—was concocted by Soviet Russia in order to defeat America in the Far East. The orders to push this idea of "coalition government" were given to leading members of the Communist Party here, were printed in official Communist publications, and then oddly enough became the patent medicine of the Far Eastern Division of the State Department.

I was one of those who took a leading part in arranging for this deceit of American officialdom. I sat in the conferences that received the instructions from the Soviet capital and was active in carrying them out, for the discomfort and defeat of the United States.

Neither the espionage nor the deceit (which made American policy so often that which the Kremlin wanted it to be) could have been so successful had it not been for the Red myths which were created to befuddle the American people.

No hoax has been more complete and convincing than that which deluded the American people from coast to coast into the belief that the Chinese Communists were a mild edition of agricultural reformer. These Moscow agents, pledged by their own declarations to establish Soviet slavery over the millions in China, were portrayed by so-called experts and distinguished authors as a sort of Non-Partisan Leaguer such as functioned for some time in North Dakota. A writer like Harrison Forman could say in his Report from Red China that he saw "not the slightest tangible connection with Russia" among these Chinese Communists. He could even tell us that "occasionally I saw portraits of Marx and Lenin; but these seemed the relics of a revolutionary past." And these were the words of a man who was accepted by the American people as one of the leading authorities on China as late as 1945. What he wrote there could be refuted by every fundamental document issued by the Chinese Communists and their leaders when they were writing for themselves and not giving interviews to hick Americans.

Had Mr. Forman and other American "authorities" familiarized themselves with the Chinese Communist programs they would know that repeatedly they stated their adherence to "the revolutionary doctrines of Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin." These "authorities" would have known, as a striking instance, of the declarations of the Chinese Communists in 1937. This was at the moment when these Reds were about to "make a new peace" with Chiang Kai-shek because their masters in the Kremlin were on the eve of signing a nonaggression pact with Nationalist China. At every turn of history, the Chinese Communists have acted in accord with the twists taken by Moscow, and 1937 is a big year in this respect.

It's a big year because the Chinese Communists from 1931 up to that time had openly proclaimed their complete domination by Moscow. They had called the territory they occupied "Soviet China" and their military forces "The Red Army." It is a big year because it is the time when the Soviet fifth column in the United States will begin to put forward the hoax of the Chinese Communists being something other than Russian Communists.

But at that moment, when Soviet Russia had ordered the Chinese Reds to make a change in tactics, they told themselves that this alleged cooperation with Chiang Kai-shek was only a subterfuge. Through one of their leading spokesmen, Wan Min, these Reds pledged that no matter what cloak they put on, they would always be "true supporters of Marxist-Leninist teachings." They further declared, to show their devotion to Soviet Russia, that they would always remain "true pupils" of the great teacher, Joseph Stalin! (You may read this at your own convenience in International Press Correspondence, September 18, 1937, vol. 17, No. 40, p. 924.)

It was in early 1937 that Earl Browder called a few of the Communist functionaries, including myself, to a "China conference" on the Ninth Floor of the East 12th Street house of treason. There were ten people present, conspicuously among them being the late Harry Gaunes, then foreign editor of the Daily Worker and a reputed Red authority on China. To us Browder brought the word, which he said he had received from abroad, that "the followers of Mao Tse-tung have to be presented in a new dress." This had been made by Moscow one of the chief tasks of the American Party. Browder had served as a representative of the Communist International in China for a number of years, and stressed that China was "the herald of the emancipation of all Asia from the imperialist yoke and would be the key to the smashing of American imperialism." These words, uttered by the then chief Communist agent in America at the time when the Reds were supposedly endorsing Franklin D. Roosevelt, were to be heard frequently in secret Communist sessions from that time forward. They were to break into print on a number of occasions in The Communist, official theoretical organ of the Soviet fifth column here.

China was the key to the Soviet domination of Asia, Browder told us bluntly, and a Soviet-controlled Asia "was the beginning of the end of American imperialism." That is why Moscow, we were told, placed upon the shoulders of the American Communist Party the responsibility of persuading the American people and our government to have "a benevolent attitude" toward the Chinese Reds.

It was then that Browder, with a sarcastic grin, said that our objective was to "picture the Chinese Communists as a mild variation of the North Dakota Non-Partisan Leaguers." This could not be done all at once, we all agreed, since a tremendous amount of emphasis had previously been put on the "revolutionary aspects of the Chinese Soviets." But as a beginning, it was agreed that the name of an "authority" would be used—a name that would sound good to the American people. The first decision of our China conference, therefore, was to publish "tens of thousands of copies" (as Alexander Trachtenberg, the Soviet cultural commissar here put it) "of the interview with Mao Tse-tung, Communist leader, obtained by Edgar Snow, the well-known American writer and published originally in the China Weekly Review of November 1936.

While that interview did not go so far as Mao Tse-tung was to go later, in picturing his cause as that of a mild agricultural movement, he did stress greatly the principles of Sun Yat-sen, the socialistic-democratic leader. It is ironic to note that the General Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party was talking in this language to Mr. Snow at the very time when Wan Min was writing in effect that Sun Yat-sen's "principles" would be used only as a matter of strategy.

This idea of the upstanding Chinese Communists, the great agrarian reformers, was peddled everywhere from that time on. It turned up in Washington, was increasingly popular in certain sections of the State Department, and broke into prominent positions in the American press. Everybody who was "in the know" was ready to say that the Chinese Communists were entirely different from the Communists of Soviet Russia and would never be anti-American nor puppets of the Kremlin.

This propaganda was to reach its height around 1943, when the Communists began the big campaign to see that the Cairo pact would be smashed. With the same success with which they persuaded America to break its word to Poland and also to agree to the Potsdam monstrosity, they proceeded to flood the United States with the idea that there should be a coalition government in China. This was "sold" by respectable authors throughout America. It was favored in some of the most surprising places in the field of public opinion. It was particularly a pet theory of the Far Eastern Division of the State Department, which did everything the Communists would have wanted that Division to do.

And yet, Mao Tse-tung had stated in a special report "On Coalition Government" made in April 1945 to the Seventh National Convention of the Chinese Communist Party, that this slogan would lead to the destruction of Chiang Kai-shek and the defeat of "reactionary American imperialism." The "coalition government" as a tactic aimed at the United States of America on behalf of Soviet Russia was clearly emphasized as such in that report. The entire history of Communist tactics throughout the world had been that all "coalition governments" in which Communists joined are sabotaged by the and finally conquered for Soviet imperialist purposes. The flood of document from Communist China, which I could quote at length were it feasible to do so, had all asserted the Marxist-Leninist aims of the Chinese Communists and their devotion to Soviet Russia. Indeed, and most ironically, one of the main points made by Mao Tse-tung in his coalition government report is that the Soviet Union has changed the whole situation in China.

Interpreting this, the chief of the department of information of the Chinese Communist Party, Lu Ting-Yi, places the New China on the side of the successes of the Soviet Union, and against the American imperialists.

At the same time, in the first flush of victory, achieved through American blundering, Mao Tse-tung now proclaims the Red advance in China to be against American imperialism as well as against Chiang Kai-shek's gang of brigands. He mentioned the great masses of people that will be brought into the struggle—and puts them, in the world scales, against American Republic. Frederick V. Field, the millionaire Chinese expert of the Communist Party, jubilantly writes in the Political Affairs of July 1948: "Our Chinese comrades are destroying American imperialism in the Far East. Let us, American anti-imperialists, at least accept and make use of the historic contribution which they are making toward our own welfare." This millionaire Communist agent chides American labor for not being anti-American in its activities, and thus holding back from "the new China which is developing under the leadership of the Communist Party." A new enemy of tremendous strength in numbers is being forged in Asia against the United States—and every agency of American life has aided to make that enemy strong.

On December 7 last, it was discovered in Washington that there had been a tragic lag in the delivery of promised war material and other goods to Nationalist China. Fighting equipment valued only at $63,000,000 had been delivered during the preceding eighteen months, whereas $220,000,000 in supplies had been sent to Greece and Turkey in a similar period. This is merely an index of the entire lag of American opinion and American governmental understanding of the Chinese crisis. It is a measure of the powerful effectiveness of the Soviet fifth column in the United States that it can report this and similar results in its warfare against American imperialism.

How is it that American public opinion was drugged in this fashion? It was the outcome of a most skillful and persistent campaign by the Soviet fifth column coupled with an almost incredible amount of naïveté on the part of leading American citizens. I say this out of my own participation in much of the planning on the part of the Reds, which went on at the 12th Street headquarters.

Our campaign was extensive but not complicated. It was simply to make everybody ashamed of being for Nationalist China. This was done by playing up the words "China's New Democracy" which was the title of a pamphlet written by Mao Tse-tung in 1940. This pamphlet was designed to satisfy everybody while at the same time educating the followers of the Chinese Communists to an unbreakable alliance with Soviet Russia. When it was prepared for an American edition, we had a special session on the Ninth Floor as to how to handle some of its promises of the establishment of "dictatorship" and other forecasts of a Soviet slave state. This was easily handled by editing out the most flagrant verbiage, so that what Mao Tse-tung said on these points was actually misrepresented in the American issue. The milder edition, with a foreword by Earl Browder, went far to befuddle American liberals and not a few American statesmen.

Nor was this campaign for Communist China merely a matter of persuading good intentioned people to become mixed up. A special secret order was sent out to the Communists, to be pushed in unions and in every occupation where sympathizers were engaged, to see that books favoring Communist China were widely sold. Arrangements were made—and I have sat in on some of them—whereby the legs of book reviewers were to be pulled so that those words which gave a break to the Chinese Communists would receive favorable notices.

Back of all this was the popularization of the fiction that the Chinese Communists had proved to be such bitter foes of Japanese imperialism. A lot of noise was made about the statements in 1937 along that line when the agreement with Chiang Kai-shek was reached. But writers of alleged high authority were persuaded to forget that this pact of 1937 had only been reached because Soviet Russia wanted it. It was also conveniently forgotten that when the Kremlin entered into friendly relations with Japan, the Communists quit fighting the Japanese entirely; they devoted themselves to harboring their forces for the showdown with Chiang Kai-shek and the United States. I have distinctly in mind a conference of American Communist leaders meeting in April 1941 to decide how to handle the Chinese situation after the Soviet-Japanese Pact, at which a report was given that the Chinese Communists would preserve their strength as much as possible.

One of the chief figures called upon by the Soviet fifth column to streamline this campaign of confusion was Frederick Vanderbilt Field, who first became conspicuous as Secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Formerly a Norman Thomas Socialist, Mr. Field became converted to the views of Moscow. In turn, he became a writer for the New Masses, Communist weekly, a columnist for the Daily Worker, official daily organ of the Communist Party, and now the chief theoretical writer on Far Eastern affairs for Political Affairs, theoretical organ of the Communist Party. This last distinction (following so soon after Mr. Field's service for the party at San Francisco, during the Conference of the United Nations,) is a tribute by the Soviet fifth column to his services in influencing the opinion of many gullible American writers and publicists.

Two men of distinction who have seen eye to eye with Mr. Field for a long time in regard to China, and who have enjoyed close personal relations with him are Owen Lattimore, author of Solution in Asia, and Joseph Barnes, former foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune and now editor of the leftist New York Star. As a Communist, I have heard the names of Messrs. Lattimore and Barnes frequently referred to in reports by Mr. Field, and always in the most complimentary manner. They have been devoted adherents of the "poor Chinese Communists agrarian reformer" theory.

It is somewhat startling, nevertheless, to discover a Mr. Lattimore as a specific endorser of Dilemma in Japan, by Lt. Andrew Roth. Indeed, Mr. Lattimore nails Mr. Roth as representing "the younger school of American experts."

Such an expert is this gentleman that he was a participant in the "borrowing" of hundreds of secret documents from the files of our State Department, in the Amerasia case. That magazine had been established by Phillip Jaffe, of whom I first learned from the Soviet secret police as a valuable friend. Reports to the National Committee disclosed this publication to be organized for the purpose of affecting opinion in favor of the Chinese Communists. But its main objective was to make those contacts in the State Department and elsewhere in Washington which would directly help in the defeat of Chiang Kai-shek. It was no surprise to me, therefore, when in early 1945 the news broke that the FBI had raided the Amerasia office, to discover scores of secret documents belonging to the State Department and also extensive photographic equipment for reproducing such documents.

That day a session was held on the Ninth Floor. The danger involved in the Amerasia disclosures was realized by leading members of the Soviet fifth column to be considerable. Sitting in Browder's room, in a little circle, seven of them went over the steps that must be taken to becloud America's mind as to what had actually taken place. The proposals which were adopted—brought in appropriately by Eugene Dennis—who had been educated in espionage in the Lenin School in Moscow—included these significant steps: 1. To get the aid of men upon whom we could depend, Alger Hiss being mentioned, and at least six other men of like position being considered; 2. That the comrades connected with the newspapers be instructed to do all they could to see that the incident was played down and allowed to die out quickly; 3. That the argument be used everywhere by the comrades disguised as non-Communists that the Chiang Kai-shek government was "rotten to the core" and that therefore any information obtained against it was not injurious to America.

Secret instructions to this effect were dispatched at once to all sections and districts of the party. They were very effective, at that. The Amerasia defendants got off without difficulty, and there was a big celebration at Phillip Jaffe's house in which toasts were drunk to the coming victory of communism in China and the defeat of American imperialism. Several members of the Daily Worker editorial board were present at this victory feast.

One of the reasons why there was no appreciation of the treason involved in the Amerasia case was the effective work the Soviet fifth column had done among the majority of the organizations dealing with the Orient. Through infiltration, corruption, persuasion, or use of personal weakness, leading members of most of these groups had come to see eye to eye with the Communists on China. That is, they peddled the talk of agrarian reformers, coalition government, and other similar claptrap. Conspicuous among these was the Vice President of the United States, Henry A. Wallace, who contributed to the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, a pamphlet in 1944 in which he said: "The Russians have demonstrated their friendly attitude toward China by their willingness to refrain from interfering in China's internal affairs." That sentence is familiar to me because it even provoked laughter on the Ninth Floor of the 12th Street Kremlin. A separate Red Army, "Chinese Soviets", and Communist forces which would hang back during the Soviet-Japanese Pact were not regarded by Mr. Wallace as evidences of intervention. In his zeal to defend the Chinese Communists Mr. Wallace lately overshot his mark. In his most recent book, Toward World Peace, the former Vice President continued to argue that the comrades in China were agrarian reformers. The Communist organ, Political Affairs, for May 1948, reluctantly and sadly had to take him to task for this mistake. For now, since Mao Tse-tung has announced his union of purpose with Soviet aggression, and his hostility to the United States, this fakery is no longer serviceable. And so, Political Affairs writes: "No, the Chinese Communists are really Communists, not agrarian reformers. It is precisely because they are Communists that they express best of all the real interests of the Chinese people." And that sentence proclaims in effect that all the previous Communist propaganda, palmed off on the liberals and used by them to confuse America, was a tissue of lies.

One of the most appalling developments out of all this was the apparent acceptance of these lies by the Far Eastern Division of our State Department. On November 11, 1946, at the Far East luncheon of the National Foreign Trade Council, the director of that office went so far as to strike a hard blow against Nationalist China. In his address, Mr. John Carter Vincent indicted Nationalist China as a place "unsound to invest private or public capital." This was based upon the threat of civil war there, upon wasting of armaments, and on undemocratic concepts of government existing there. Mr. Carter, unfortunately, neglected to state what would occur if his advice were taken. Namely, the greatest fiasco ever to greet America. That is precisely what has happened today and it will cost the lives of thousands of our men eventually to make up for the possible loss of China. It is distressing to note that Mr. Carter's utterance in Washington came at the same time as the Communist Party's campaign to "get out of China", which was headed by that veteran party liner, the late General Carlson. It is constant attitudes of this kind on the part of Mr. Vincent Carter that has made his name so warmly welcome in the secret councils of the Soviet fifth column. I have never heard the former head of the Far Eastern Office of the State Department mentioned in high Communist circles except with the highest approbation.

The same deceit and disguise which led to these successes on China also marked Red penetration of organizations dealing with this matter. The Institute of Pacific Relations is a case in point. This is an organization composed of odds and ends of people in many countries touching the Pacific. The American Council, although not absolutely controlled by the Communists, has never found anything wrong with Communist China and has never warned the American Nation of the grave danger to its security that will result from a Communist conquered China. Quite to the contrary, most of its publications have presented Communist China as a land of sweetness and light. One of its most conspicuous directors has been Frederick Vanderbilt Field, and notorious Communist writers such as the so-called James S. Allen, recently Foreign Editor of the Daily Worker, have been on its list of authors. It may be added that "Allen" is a former agent of the Communist International in the Phillipines and has close conspiratorial connections with many Soviet agents in lands bordering on the Pacific. Edward C. Carter, director of the Institute, for years, has had such close associations with the Communists as to rob him of any critical attitude toward them. He has been a leading figure in the Russian American Institute, a contributor to Soviet Russia Today, and director of Russian War Relief. Not satisfied with the penetration of organizations, organs of public opinion, or the government, the Communists began a new campaign of their own on China just before I left the party. It was designed to center the attention of the comrades in China as the biggest of all tasks of the American Reds, and to arouse them to the subsequent campaigns through other organizations which they inaugurated. Well known party liners have also been vociferous in the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, formed around the same time and preparing the way by its complete echo of the party position for further American division in the face of the Communist advance in China.

"What is happening in China today is the most open expression of American imperialism at work," said a secret memorandum sent to all Communists by the New York State office just before I left the party. "Today, American imperialism, by armed force, is intervening in the struggle of the Chinese people to establish a democratic Chinese Republic." Such allegations would be highly comical were they not so tragic, when we view the hesitancy of America to defend itself by taking a firm stand in the Chinese picture. The Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy echoed this sort of farcical charge, demanding that the United States give no military aid to China since it would "in effect make the President of the United States Commander in Chief of the Chinese Armies."

It is arguments like these when pressed by the gentlemen in diplomatic mourning clothes that have made Washington sway back and forth in tragic uncertainty on China. It is certain harried editors looking around for material on China who pick up a pamphlet by the supposedly respectable Institute of Pacific Relations and use it for information, even though it is written by Abraham Chapman. And who is he? None other than a most trusted Communist, who under the name of John Arnold has written extensively for the Communist press and served as a member of the State Committee of the Communist Party of New York. That would be unknown to the unwary editor, guided by Comrade Chapman's discourse on the Far East.

Or to use another example, which came to my attention during my last days in the party in 1945: Hundreds of leading citizens in various communities received in the mails early that year a pamphlet entitled "China's Greatest Crisis." Its author, Frederick V. Field, was stated to be "a member of the Executive Committee of the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, and an authority on Far Eastern problems. He is also Executive Vice President of the Council for Pan-American Democracy, and a member of the Editorial Board of New Masses." The publisher was New Century Publishers, Inc., 832 Broadway, New York.

That was a rather impressive-sounding statement, and the publisher seemed to be respectable enough in name. No one is opposed to anything "new." How was the leading citizen of Kalamazoo, Mich., receiving such a pamphlet, from the list of a certain religious organization of which he was a member, to know that the New Century Publishers are the official publication society of the Communist Party's theoretical organ and its most valued pamphlets? How was he to know of Mr. Field's connection with the Communist movement except through the reference of the New Masses of which he might have heard vaguely?

This was the manner in which many patriotic Americans, who say quite emphatically that no one can dictate their opinions, were hornswoiggled into a completely distorted view of the Chinese crisis.

It was out of all these pressures, Moscow directed, that President Roosevelt was persuaded to amend our solemn pledge of China's integrity made at Cairo to the Yalta promise that Soviet Russia would get Outer Mongolia and even a chance at Manchuria. It is from such creation of confusion in the American mind that we have promised aid to China and not given it in the measure it was pledged. Is it any wonder that the American Nation faces the greatest debacle in its history, the possible loss of 470,000,000 people for our side in the battle for American existence?

THE SITUATION IN ASIA. By Owen Lattimore. 238 pp. Boston. Atlantic-Little, Brown. $2.75.

"SITUATION IN ASIA" CRITICIZES U. S. GOVERNMENT POLICY IN FAR EAST

(By David Carpenter)

Owen Lattimore's Situation in Asia is extremely critical of our government's policies in that immense area of colonial and semicolonial peoples. He shows that our government has done nothing but alienate the people's forces seeking national liberation in Asia.

Lattimore, who is the director of the Walter Hines Page School of Foreign Relations at Johns Hopkins University, points out that our dependence on the Kuomintang has served only to make the United States hated by the Chinese people. He contrasts, to our disadvantage, the reliance on the unpopular imperialist agent Syngman Rhee and the maintenance of U. S. occupation troops in South Korea with the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the establishment of a native peoples government in North Korea.

He shows clearly that the efforts by the U. S. government to make Japan a major bastion against the Soviet Union must end in failure.

Lattimore proposes that our government end its alliances with dictatorial corrupt antipeople's forces in Asia. He urges that we stop intervention in the internal affairs of the colonial and semicolonial countries. He asks that we aid the peoples of Asia to achieve national independence.

All this is to the good as far as it goes. But Lattimore goes completely off the beam in his efforts to explain the relationship of political and social forces in Asia and their impact on world affairs. And as long as we fail to recognize the reality of these relations so long will we be unable to help in the achievement of those aims Lattimore proposes.

In the first place, Lattimore argues that the colonial and semicolonial peoples struggling for national independence are developing a "third force" that seeks to remain equidistant from American and Russian power. He refuses to admit that the struggle is completely an anti-imperialist struggle, to drive out the American, British, French, and Dutch capitalists who are subjecting their native peoples to superexploitation for their raw materials and as markets for capitalist products.

Lattimore admits that the Asiatic colonial and semicolonial peoples are looking to the Soviet Union for examples of how oppressed peoples achieve independence and are turning away from the United States because of its imperialist line. But he makes this a contest of tactics which the United States can change by adopting new methods.

Lattimore refuses to see that the reason the colonial people turn to the Soviet Union for their example is precisely because of the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of socialism in that country. As Stalin points out:

"It is precisely because the national-colonial revolutions took place in our country under the leadership of the proletariat and under the banner of internationalism that pariah nations, slave nations, have for the first time in the history of mankind risen to the position of nations which are really free and really equal, thereby setting a contagious example for the oppressed nations of the whole world.

"This means that the October Revolution has ushered in a new era, the era of colonial revolutions which are being conducted in the oppressed countries of the world in alliance with the proletariat and under the leadership of the proletariat."

The core of the leadership in the colonial struggle against imperialism and the guarantee of the achievement of national independence lies in the growth and development of the native Communist Parties, springing out of the exploited native working classes and leading the exploited working class and the oppressed peasant masses. That is why the imperialists, under the leadership of the United States, direct their main fire against the destruction of these native Communist Parties.

Secondly, Lattimore makes the mistake of assuming that the relationship of the United States and the Soviet Union in Asia is that of a struggle for power. Here he falls into the trap laid by American imperialism, which would like to hide the reality of its efforts to maintain its grasp of the resources and manpower of Asia.

This approach to American-Soviet relationships obscures the truth. The Soviet Union is not seeking world power. When the colonial peoples look for alliances with the Soviet Union, it is because they see in that socialist country the true defender of their national aspirations. When the Soviet Union aligns itself with these peoples, it is not just a counteralliance to protect its own borders against the attack of imperialism, it is fundamentally a defense of the national interests of the peoples of these oppressed nations.

Because the peoples of the world recognize that an attack on the Soviet Union is an attack on the defender of their own aspirations, because they see in such an attack on their own efforts to break the bold of imperialism, they join with the Soviet Union in a common front against imperialism. They have already seen how the peoples of the Eastern European democracies were able to protect themselves from the encroachment of imperialism and to begin their own internal development as the result of alliances with and protection by the Soviet Union.

In our own country, if we are to adopt the proposals Lattimore makes for "the situation in Asia," it is necessary for us to loosen the hold of the imperialists on our government. Otherwise, our official policies will continue to be that of oppressing the colonial peoples in the interests of our monopoly capitalists.

Miss ROSE V. RUSSELL,
*Teachers' Union, Local 555, SCMWA-CIO,
13 Astor Place, New York 3, N. Y.*

DEAR MISS RUSSELL: I have received your communication of May 31, informing me of the Teachers' Union proposed informal "Tribute to Bella Dodd," to be held on Friday evening, June 23, at Manhattan Center.

I greatly appreciate the invitation extended to me to participate in this great tribute to a very noted person who has served the cause of education zealously. Her efforts have contributed to the improvement of our educational facilities and better schools for our youth. She is a great champion in the onward march of democracy and people of all races, creeds, and religion pay honor to her for her leadership and fearless struggle to better the lot of the masses educationally. It was a pleasure to see Bella in action in Albany, as she buttonholed legislator after legislator on the important questions affecting education and State aid for education. She did an excellent job and much credit is due her for the tireless hours, days, and months spent in winning over many of the legislators to a more liberal viewpoint on the subject of education.

I will make every effort to personally appear at this reception to join in paying glowing tribute to a heroine of the home front, one whom I admire and value her friendship. If, because of my campaign for reelection to the legislature, I am unable to attend in person, I will certainly forward a message of tribute to Bella Dodd, to be read at the meeting.

With kind regards and best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,

HULAN E. JACK.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 7, 1944.

Miss ROSE V. RUSSELL,
*Secretary, Teachers Union, Local 555, SCMWA-CIO,
13 Astor Place, New York 3, N. Y.*

DEAR MISS RUSSELL: I am delighted that you are tendering a reception to Bella Dodd. The Teachers Union has gained immeasurably from her leadership these past years, and the school system from her activities. All those interested in improving the schools should be glad to do her honor.

My own contacts with Bella Dodd were many. I found her most sympathetic with every effort to improve school conditions—with the attempts to eliminate oversize classes, to keep playgrounds open all day long and in the summer, to secure permanent teaching positions for substitutes, to work toward an earlier retirement age for classroom teachers, to enlarge the Bureau of Child Guidance, and to restore and expand work in the field of adult education. She and I have fought together continuously for more funds for education from both city and State.

Her primary interest was the children of this city and their welfare, and of course this includes children of every race, creed, and color. She possesses boundless energy and of course can be counted on always to help any social cause. More power to her!

Sincerely yours,

STANLEY M. ISAACS.

THE ASSEMBLY,
STATE OF NEW YORK,
Brooklyn, N. Y., June 22, 1944.

ROSE V. RUSSELL,
*c/o Teachers' Union,
13 Astor Place, New York 3, N. Y.*

DEAR MISS RUSSELL: Please extend my sincerest and best wishes to Bella Dodd. In the short time that I know Bella Dodd, I have learned to admire her a great deal. In my two years in Albany, I have found her to be a very valuable person to know because she is sincere, honest and possesses all the qualities of an intelligent representative for any group.

Her inspiring leadership in behalf of the Teachers Union has made it possible to defeat many measures which, if passed, would be detrimental to the teachers of our city and I know that she is responsible for many measures passing the legislature which are beneficial to the teachers and to the children in the public school system.

I sincerely hope that she will be a tremendous success in her new endeavor.

Sincerely,

ALFRED A. LAMA, A. I. A.

Miss ROSE V. RUSSELL,
*Local 555, SCMWA-CIO,
13 Astor Place, New York City 3, N. Y.*

DEAR MISS RUSSELL: I am indeed pleased to know that a reception is being given in honor of Dr. Bella Dodd. I was present several years ago when Dr. Dodd spoke before a group at Cornell University. In my brief remarks I paid tribute to Dr. Dodd for her conscientious work in Albany. At that time I stated that her associates could well be proud of her as she was a splendid person and doing a sincere job. I would like to reiterate these same words upon this occasion.

I am sorry that Dr. Bella Dodd is leaving the work in Albany, but I wish her every success in the future.

Sincerely,

STANLEY C. SHAW.

THE ASSEMBLY,

Miss ROSE V. RUSSELL,
*c/o Teachers Union,
13 Astor Place, New York 3, New York.*

DEAR MISS RUSSELL: I am happy to send a message in "Tribute to Bella Dodd" who, for a number of years, was the Legislative Representative of the Teachers Union for the State of New York.

It was my pleasure and good fortune to meet her and to work with her during the years she was in Albany. I assure you that the cause of progressive and enlightened social government will lose an able and energetic worker at the Capitol of our State in the retirement or resignation of Mrs. Dodd from her former position. The teachers in particular will lose a most energetic and intelligent worker. The liberal legislators in Albany will miss her.

I trust that in her new work, that she will maintain her interest, not only in improving the educational system in the City and in the State of New York, but that she will continue her interest and activities on behalf of the liberal and progressive legislation and government, in general.

Her advice and counsel to me on legislative matters has been of inestimable benefit.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM T. ANDREWS.

THE ASSEMBLY,
STATE OF NEW YORK,
Albany, June 14, 1944.

Miss ROSE V. RUSSELL,
Teachers Union, 13 Astor Place, New York City.

DEAR MISS RUSSELL: I welcome the opportunity extended to me of joining with the many coworkers of Dr. Bella V. Dodd in their tribute to her.

During the six years that I have represented my district in the Legislative, I have found no one more conscientiously devoted to the welfare of the school system than Dr. Dodd. Her sincerity and good faith were beyond question and for that reason alone she had the respect and esteem of all my fair-minded colleagues.

It is with keen regret that I learned of her decision to relinquish her position as Legislative Representative of the Teachers Union for not only was she your "representative" but she was also a faithful friend to every person interested in a progressive school program.

Cordially yours,

LOUIS BENNETT.

THE ASSEMBLY,
STATE OF NEW YORK,
Albany, June 23, 1944.

MISS BELLA DODD,
Teachers Union, New York City.

DEAR MISS DODD: The interest you have had in the children of this State and their education has always been an inspiration to me and your influence in the Legislature will be felt for years to come. Godspeed to you.

Sincerely,

DANIEL L. BURROWS.

DOUBLE TROUBLE IN ASIA

China and Indo-China are obviously critical areas on the map of ideological conflict in Asia. From both these hot spots comes news of meaningful developments. Christopher Rand's report to this newspaper from Hong Kong on the surprising extent and depth of anti-Communist activity on the Chinese mainland reveals the immense task of digestion still confronting the Communists and their collaborators. In Indo-China, on the other hand, the struggle against communism is impeded by French reluctance to face squarely the fact that the colonial attitude is as out of date in Asia as the dinosaur.

A Saigon dispatch reports that Dao Dai's first prime minister, Nguyen Phan Long, has been obliged to resign because of French displeasure over his insistence that American aid be given directly to Vietnam instead of being funnelled through France. If this is the real and principal reason—and we sincerely hope it is not—then we cannot but regret that the French and the Bao Dai government have so exposed themselves to the Communist tirades that will inevitably follow. To be sure, the Vietnamese are weak, inexperienced, and short of able leaders. For the time being, the military burden is primarily a French responsibility. Yet political factors are equally important. The grant of "independence" to Vietnam will become a mockery in the eyes of the Vietnamese people and the world unless the Bao Dai regime is given at least equal consideration with the French in the expenditure of such American funds and materials as may be made available.

Mr. Rand's story says that a huge part of the Chinese mainland—perhaps half or more—is now beyond the control of the Communist-dominated government. Mr. Rand emphasizes that a major factor in peasant discontent is excessive taxation—mainly in the form of grain levies. There are of course many other causes: floods and famine, conscription, banditry, guerrilla activity, and the Nationalist blockade. In the cities, business stagnation, heavy taxation, and the high-pressure methods employed to dispose of Victory bonds have contributed to anti-Communist feeling.

This is but one side of the China picture. The Communists have their strong side, too, and it will be a long time before it will be possible to draw any sound conclusions on the success or failure of their program. Mr. Rand points out significantly that for the most part the resistance movement is without cohesion or over-all leadership. It is at least evident that the Reds are experiencing plenty of trouble. This hardly squares with the view of those disciples of appeasement who insist that present United States policy—weak though it is—is driving the Chinese people into the arms of the Communists.

Senator MILLARD TYDINGS,
U. S. Senator from Maryland,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am writing to you because Owen Lattimore was my house guest during his visit to Moscow in 1936, about which Senator McCarthy has raised questions before your subcommittee. Mr. Lattimore stayed with me because he was—and is—an old and valued friend whom I had known intimately during my previous ten years in the Far East as correspondent for American newspapers.

There was nothing mysterious about Mr. Lattimore's visit to Moscow; he came there as editor of Pacific Affairs, a publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations. As you probably know, the Institute was organized into national groups, and the Soviet group was then an active participant.

As I had already worked in Russia for more than two years, I was able to help Mr. Lattimore to meet some Russians. In particular, I introduced him to a Soviet consular official I had met as a reporter, and who had spent some time in Mongolia, a country about which Mr. Lattimore was—and is—the foremost American specialist. This Soviet official (whose name I have forgotten) was very helpful to Mr. Lattimore—as he had been to me—and introduced him to other Russian experts on Mongolia and Central Asia, and guided him through Moscow museums and libraries devoted to these subjects. At that period, the great purges had not yet started in Russia, and it was much easier for Americans to meet Russians than it later became.

Knowing my interest, Mr. Lattimore gave me detailed reports of his meetings with Russians. He was understandably impressed by the extent of Russian material concerning Russo-Chinese border regions—which seem very remote to Americans but are not so remote to Russians.

In a speech on the Senate floor, Senator McCarthy mentioned an affidavit by an unnamed Russian who has reported a conversation in 1936 with a Soviet intelligence officer who boasted that his organization was getting valuable information through the Institute of Pacific Relations, and especially through Mr. Lattimore. This is interesting evidence that the Soviet intelligence organization was as smart as I myself was at the time—because I, too, was getting useful background material for my newspaper articles from the Institute's specialized reports and from conversations with Mr. Lattimore and other Americans working for the Institute.

But perhaps the Soviet intelligence officer mentioned by Senator McCarthy was not quite so smart as he thought, because there is no doubt in my mind that Mr. Lattimore learned considerably more from the Russians during that Moscow visit than they did from him—and this information later became available through Mr. Lattimore to our own intelligence services and to the State Department.

During my many years' friendship with Mr. Lattimore in China, he never showed any special interest in Russia except insofar as the Russians were concerned with Mongolia and Central Asia, his chosen field of research and exploration. To my certain knowledge, Mr. Lattimore devoted almost his entire time during the 1936 Moscow visit to this same specialty. Those were the years when it was popular in the United States to be a "pink," but I never saw even the slightest evidence that Mr. Lattimore was becoming even the mildest form of fellow traveler.

You may use this letter, in whole or in part, in any way you see fit. My own record is available in Who's Who in America. I think that my articles in the Saturday Evening Post during the war—when it was not popular to be critical of Russia—are sufficient evidence of my personal views about the Soviet system.

Sincerely yours,

DEMAREE BESS,
Associated Editor, The Saturday Evening Post,

IN THE MATTER OF DESIDERIU HAMMER, ALIAS JOHN SANTO, RESPONDENT IN DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS FILE No. A-6002664

[File No. A-6002664, Immigration and Naturalization Service]

[P. 75] LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ, called as a witness in behalf of the Government, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. BOYD:

INSPECTOR PHELAN. You are informed that if you willfully and knowingly give any false testimony in this proceeding, you may be prosecuted for perjury, [p. 76] and the penalty for such offense is imprisonment of not more than 5 years or a fine of $2,000, or both. Do you understand?

The WITNESS. I understand that fully.

Inspector PHELAN. Will you state your name for the record?

The WITNESS. Louis Francis Budenz.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Mr. Budenz, have you ever been known by, or made use of, any other name or names?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been a member of the Communist Party, Mr. Budenz?—A. Yes; I have been a member of the national committee.

Q. When did you first become a member of the Communist Party?—A. Member of the Communist Party in 1935 after the People's Front convention.

Q. Where did you join the Communist Party?—A. I joined the Communist Party in New York City.

Q. Were you issued a membership book?—A. Yes; I was, in October 1935, although my first contact with the party was August, in that respect. I had to wait until Earl Browder came back from Moscow to decide just how I would function, whether as an under-cover [p. 77] Communist or open, and it was decided that I should function openly, and then I received a card.

Q. When did you leave the party, Mr. Budenz?—A. 1945.

Q. Why did you leave the party in 1945?

Mr. SACHER. I object to that as incompetent in this proceeding.

Inspector PHELAN. Overruled.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Please answer the last question.—A. I left the Communist Party because I learned from experience that it is a fifth column of Soviet Russia, of Soviet dictatorship, and that the Soviet dictatorship plans to dominate the world, specifically aimed against the United States. Also, in this respect, I returned to the Catholic Church, and I found after a long effort to reconcile communism and Catholicism that this was impossible.

Q. Did you hold in positions or offices in the Communist Party? Were you a member of any committees?—A. Yes, sir; I held quite a few positions.

Q. Would you name them?—A. I was a member of the national committee for 6 years of my membership. I was labor editor of the Daily [p. 78] Worker from 1936, we will say, until late 1937 when I was appointed editor of the Midwest Daily Record, a Communist-controlled and -created paper, but supposedly an organ of the People's Front. That was in Chicago. In 1940 I became president of the Freedom of the Press Co., Inc., which was created by the Communist Party during the Hitler-Stalin pact as a defense measure, and shortly thereafter I became managing editor of the Daily Worker. I was in supervisory charge of the Daily Worker, in other words, from 1940 on. I also have been a member, without being able to give from memory the dates, of the State committee, the national trade-union committee, the State trade-union committee, the Illinois State committee, and some other offices of that character.

Q. These are all organizations of the Communist Party, these committees?—
A. Those are the State committees or national committees of the Communist Party, and the trade-union commissions are the trade-union commissions of the Communist Party at the time I served on them.

Q. Is the Daily Worker an official publication of the Communist Party?—
A. The Daily Worker is the official organ of the [p. 79] Communist Party for popular uses, although from time to time it has denied that capacity. It is, nevertheless, the official organ.

Q. Was this paper in any way subsidized by the Red International or the Communist Party in Russia?—
A. The Daily Worker was subsidized by the Soviet Union for a number of years.

Mr. SACHER. I move to strike that out as representing nothing more than the conclusion of this witness for which there appears to be no foundation of the evidence.

Inspector PHELAN. Sustained.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. You were the editor of the Daily Worker; is that correct?—
A. I was the managing editor of the Daily Worker.

Q. Was the paper in any way subsidized while you were the managing editor, to your own personal knowledge?

Mr. SACHER. Subsidized by whom? You cannot just have a vacuum.

Mr. BOYD. I asked him.

Mr. SACHER. I object to that on the ground that the witness has shown no foundation for such a conclusion.

Inspector PHELAN. Well, I take it it is a [p. 80] preliminary question.

Mr. SACHER. I do not care whether it is preliminary or not. The word "subsidize" comprehends a conclusion. I object to it and move to strike it out.

Inspector PHELAN. Denied.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

The WITNESS. It was subsidized by the Runag News Agency, owned by the Soviet Government.

Mr. SACHER. I move to strike that out, Mr. Inspector, on the ground that there is no evidence in the record under which that conclusion is based.

Inspector PHELAN. I shall deny it at the moment, subject to it being connected up as the matter proceeds.

Mr. SACHER. I note an exception to that, Mr. Inspector.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. In what manner was the Daily Worker subsidized by the Runag News Agency?

Mr. SACHER. I object to that, unless the witness has evidence of the basis on which he could arrive at that conclusion.

The WITNESS. I have that.

Mr. SACHER. I suggest, therefore, Mr. Inspector, that the witness be required to state first the basis of his knowledge.

[P. 81] The WITNESS. The basis of my knowledge is the records of the United States Department of Justice under Attorney General Francis Biddle and, secondly—

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment, please. Mr. Presiding Inspector, I ask that you admonish the witness, when counsel objects, to please withhold his comment.

The WITNESS. I shall be delighted, Counselor.

Mr. SACHER. I move to strike out that answer of the witness, on the ground that the so-called records of the Attorney General of the Department of Justice are the best evidence of the facts, and not the statements by this witness, if that be the basis.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel's objection is good. Sustained.
Mr. BOYD. I would like to ask the previous question.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. In what way was the Daily Worker subsidized by this Russian-controlled paper?

Inspector PHELAN. Speak only of your own personal knowledge that you have, in answering.

A. This is personal knowledge as president of Freedom of the Press Co.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. As a member of the editorial board.

[P. 82] Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. The Daily Worker for a number of years received free of charge hundreds of thousands of words from Moscow, which every newspaperman knows is about 13 to 15 cents per word. The Daily Worker was asked, consequently, and the Communist Party, to file as a foreign agent as a result of this. As a matter of fact, the decision was made that Earl Browder file as a foreign agent.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Was this news furnished to any other paper in the United States?—

A. Not immediately. Later on, when Attorney General Biddle ruled that this had to be registered for, a new organization was created which carried on the same activity. That also was ruled to be a foreign agent. They then sought to sell to other agencies, but the Daily Worker continued to get for a very small sum this information.

Mr. SACHER. In other words, do I understand correctly that the Daily Worker paid for the news service which it got from this Runag News Co.? Is that the witness' testimony?

The WITNESS. No, sir; it didn't.

Mr. SACHER. Didn't pay anything?

The WITNESS. It may have paid a small sum.

[P. 83] Mr. SACHER. That, to me, seems the best evidence of the fact that he does not know what he is talking about. First he says they did not pay, then they paid a small amount. Now he says they may not have paid. Which of the three alternatives is this witness' testimony to be?

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Presiding Inspector, may I ask that you admonish counsel that he refrain from asking this witness questions and commenting on his testimony until the proper time? He will be afforded an opportunity of cross-examining the witness.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, I believe we should proceed here subject to your objection to each individual question. If the matter is not ultimately connected up, it will be subject to a motion to strike on that account.

Mr. SACHER. In the interests of expedition, I will go along with you.

The WITNESS. The reason I stated that was that the policies changed from time to time, very small nominal payments being made; so much so that it was ruled that this was a foreign agency and would have to register as such.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Are you acquainted with the Trade Union Unity League?—[P. 84] A. Yes. It was just being dissolved when I joined the party, but I knew of it as a non-Communist.

Q. Mr. Budenz, have you ever been called upon to address Communist meetings?—A. Yes, sir; great numbers, all over the country.

Q. Do you care to state some of the occasions on which you have addressed Communist meetings?

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. I object to this on the ground that it is immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent in this proceeding.

Inspector PHELAN. What do you propose to show?

Mr. BOYD. I propose to show this man's authority on communism, that he addressed meetings from time to time on the subject.

Mr. SACHER. Mr. Inspector, I just want to say that a lot of ignoramuses have addressed meetings on a lot of questions and one does not prove his authority by the fact that he speaks about something. As a matter of fact, regrettably there are too many people who talk about things they know nothing about.

Inspector PHELAN. I suggest that the witness be asked what various assignments he had in connection with the party as a foundation for possibly qualifying him as an expert, as I understand you propose to do.

[P. 85] Mr. BOYD. I believe the witness has pretty well covered that.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Mr. Budenz, do you know whether or not the Communist Party of the United States of America advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence?

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. I object to that question on the ground that the witness' qualifications for such a conclusion have not been established.

Inspector PHELAN. Overruled.

Mr. SACHER. I respectfully except.

The WITNESS. The Communist Party with its basic platform of Marxism and Leninism stands for the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. Of course, it is a fifth column of Soviet Russia.

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. I move to strike everything out after that first sentence of his as being not responsive. He was asked only one question.

Mr. BOYD. If the presiding inspector please, it is responsive and the witness has a right to complete his answer.

Inspector PHELAN. Read the question, please.

(Question read by reporter.)

[P. 86] Mr. SACHER. The answer to that is either "Yes" or "No."

Mr. BOYD. Not necessarily at all.

Mr. SACHER. I submit that everything beyond the word "Yes" be stricken out.

Inspector PHELAN. Answer "Yes" or "No" and then you may explain your answer.

The WITNESS. To the same question?

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment, please. I respectfully suggest that, if you either rule or you do not rule, either you say that the witness must testify "Yes" or "No" and that is the answer to the question and then let another question be placed, the propriety of which we can test, or else say you overrule me. I want to know what you are doing. Are you ruling that the witness must now in response to that question answer "Yes" or "No," or aren't you so ruling? Let us get through with that first.

Inspector PHELAN. What I am ruling is that he must answer "Yes" or "No," but he is at liberty to explain it. I think that is a proper answer.

Mr. SACHER. No; I don't think, Mr. Inspector, that that is proper at all according to court procedure. If the appropriate answer to a question is either "Yes" or "No," then I respectfully urge that you rule that the witness answer yes or no and then, after he answers, let counsel [p. 87] put whatever question he deems appropriate to elicit anything else that he wishes in addition to that.

Inspector PHELAN. I shall overrule that objection and you may have an exception.

Mr. SACHER. Thank you.

INSPECTOR. Read the last question, please.

(The reporter read the question, as follows:)

"Mr. Budenz, do you know whether or not the Communist Party of the United States of America advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence?"

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Will you please answer yes or no to that question and then qualify your answer as you see fit?—A. Yes; it does. That is the basic—

Mr. SACHER. Your Honor, I have another objection to make, and that is this, and that goes to the basis of these charges: The question that counsel now puts to the witness is as to present advocacy of violent overthrow of the Government. I invite your attention to the fact that the charges, the amended charges as lodged yesterday, all read in the past. I call your attention to the following: It says, "Upon the basis of this evidence, the Government proposes to lodge the following additional charges as additional grounds to the [p. 88] deportation of Santo, to wit: The act of October 16, 1918, as amended, in that he is found to have been, after entry, a member of the following class set forth in section 1 of said act: an alien who was a member of and affiliated with the following organizations, associations, societies, and groups, to wit: the Communist Party of the United States of America and the Trade Union Unity League, which organizations advised, advocated, and taught the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States," et cetera.

I therefore respectfully submit that, in view of the fact that the charges here are that the two allegedly prescribed organizations acted in these respects in the past, that this question is utterly immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent in this proceeding, as the charges now stand, for the question under attack is one which addresses itself to a present advocacy.

Mr. BOYD. I think my next question will answer that objection.

Mr. SACHER. Let us not do that. Let us get to what the charges are. I think it would be nice if we could try the charges first and then try what is in the imagination of counsel some other time, but let's try these charges now. That is what I urge, and I [p. 89] respectfully ask for a ruling at the hands of the inspector on this specific question and move to strike out the witness' answer.

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled, again subject to a motion to strike if it is not ultimately connected up with the issues in this case.

Mr. SACHER. But the only issue, Mr. Presiding Inspector, is whether these allegedly prescribed organizations did these things in the past, and this question addresses itself exclusively to the present. Now, it seems to me that, if we are still practicing in American courts, that we ought to distinguish between past and present, you see.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, I doubt that any single question can be asked on any of these subjects which would cover the particular type of issue that you speak of. I think this is all preliminary. I think all of us understand that and we will expedite things.

Mr. SACHER. Let us get some things through my head, anyway. I want to know, and I emphasized it yesterday, what it is that we are going to try. Now, the very essence of due process is that an accused, and not only an accused, but any litigant should know what specific charges he is being called upon to answer in a judicial [p. 90] proceeding. All I am asking here is, in view of the fact that the language of these amended charges is so clear in the casting of these events in the past, that it be limited to the past and not to the present.

Now, frankly, I must say that I cannot see where you or anyone else can possibly find any fault with that insistence. If you were prosecuting the case or defending it, I cannot imagine that you would be willing to go along on the theory that a client which charges something in the past justifies an incorporation as to the events of the present. That is all there is to my argument. I want due process; that is all.

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled. If counsel fails to connect it up, I will have it stricken.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

By Mr. BOYD.

Q. Mr. Budenz, did the Communist Party of the United States advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence for the entire period that you were a member; that is, from 1935 until 1945?—A. Basically it did; yes. The Communist Party in that respect—

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. The witness has answered. I object to any further elaboration.

Mr. BOYD. He certainly is entitled to qualify his [p. 91] answer.

Mr. SACHER. Is he going to qualify it in the sense of detracting from it or limiting it, or what, or is he just going to elaborate on it? What is the witness going to do?

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

The WITNESS. How was the wording? I want to continue my sentence. The basic principle is Marxism and Leninism, which is this thing we have been speaking of, but this is from time to time blurred by the fact that the Communist Party is a fifth column of Soviet Russia.

Mr. SACHER. Now I move to strike that out as not responsive, Mr. Inspector. It represents conclusions of the witness which have no foundation in the evidence.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Inspector, I am going to ask you to admonish counsel to let the witness complete his answer and then, if he wishes to make an objection, in the right manner to do so.

Mr. SACHER. No, sir; not when this witness undertakes with your aid and assistance to violate proper rules of evidence. I will not succumb to any such admonition if it should be made, and I am going to interrupt every time the witness violates the law here. I ask for a ruling, Mr. Inspector, on that sentence.

[P. 92] Inspector PHELAN. I think counsel is entitled to object in the course of an answer. However, again I shall overrule this objection.

Mr. BOYD. Would you read the answer, please?

Mr. SACHER. I respectfully except.

(The reporter read the answer, as follows:)

"A. Basically it did; yes. The Communist Party in that respect——".

The WITNESS. And never departs in any way from the policies laid down by the Kremlin in Moscow. The Communist official records prove that. The Communist Party resolutions prove that. The Communist press proves that. No Communist can show at any time a deviation in one small iota of the Communist press or the Communist Party in the United States from the order sent out from the Kremlin in Moscow by official statements. In the declarations by Soviet leaders are the policies laid down by the Moscow government.

Mr. SACHER. I now move to strike all of that effusion from the record, on the ground that it is not responsive to the question.

Inspector PHELAN. Denied.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Did you, as the editor of the Daily Worker, [p. 93] receive instructions from Moscow in the form of news releases?

Mr. SACHER. Now, just a moment. I object to that question on the ground that it calls for the witness' conclusions. If he wishes to produce news releases and then argue to you, Mr. Inspector, that in those news releases are contained instructions, then we shall deal with the competency of that when we reach it, but this question suffers from the double vice of first asking for the contents of written documents which are not offered in evidence and whose failure to present in evidence is not justified and, second, asks for the conclusion of the witness as to what the nature, not merely the contents, but what the nature of the contents of those documents is. On that twofold ground I object to the question as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent.

Inspector PHELAN. Will you read the question, please?

(The reporter read the question, as follows:)

"Q. Did you, as the editor of the Daily Worker, receive instructions from Moscow, in the form of news releases?"

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled.

Mr. SACHER. You know, once in a while, Mr. Inspector, I would really like to hear a reason why [p. 94] you overrule, apart from the fact that maybe you have been instructed to do so.

Inspector PHELAN. I think occasionally I have stated reasons. I do not feel that I should in every instance. We would be here too long. Proceed.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; every news release from Moscow is an instruction and also the various statements of the Soviet leaders contained in the publications of the Communist International and the other publications received from Moscow. That is recognized by the political committee of the Communist Party. That is a recognized procedure.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Were you a member of the political committee of the Communist Party?—

A. No, sir; not the political committee; that is the executive committee of the national committee. I was a member of the national committee, though not too often, but occasionally I sat in political committee meetings.

Q. Is the national committee of the Communist Party the higher governing body of the Communist Party in the United States, or was it at the time that you were a member?—A. Well, technically in the Communist Party you always have to distinguish between the set-up and the fact, but [p. 95] technically the national committee is the governing body in between conventions. The political committee is the one that makes the decision in between sessions of the national committee, but these decisions are never in conflict with the decisions of Moscow.

Q. How were you appointed to this committee?—A. National committee?

Q. Yes; by whom? Were you elected? In what way did you become a member?—A. Well, there is a slate chosen which is never defeated.

Mr. SACHER. I move to strike that out as not responsive. He was either elected or appointed. Now, which way were you designated to that?

The WITNESS. It appears both, in the Communist movement.

Mr. SACHER. Which way were you elected?

Mr. BOYD. Just a moment, please. If you have any cross-examination, you put it in at the proper time.

Mr. SACHER. Believe me it will be proper when it comes, but in the meantime let this man answer your questions responsively.

The WITNESS. Is counsel intimidating me, Mr. Examiner?

Mr. BOYD. He is trying to but he is not making much—

[P. 96] Mr. FANELLI. I move to strike that from the record, Mr. Presiding Inspector.

Inspector PHELAN. What is the answer to the question?

(The reporter read the answer, as follows:)

"A. Well, there is a slate chosen which is never defeated."

Mr. SACHER. Will you act on Mr. Fanelli's motion to strike counsel's statement from the record?

Inspector PHELAN. I have an objection that preceded that which I have not ruled on yet.

(The reporter read the previous question and answer, as follows:)

"Q. Yes, by whom? Were you elected? In what way did you become a member?—A. Well, there is a slate chosen which is never defeated."

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. By whom is this slate chosen?—A. This slate is chosen by the inner corps of the political committee.

Q. How is it acted on? By whom?

Mr. FANELLI. Did you rule, Mr. Examiner?

The WITNESS. Excuse me.

Mr. SACHER. It seems that counsel ignores you as well as the witness. Now, someone ought to have some [p. 97] respect for the inspector. It should not be limited to the respondent alone.

Inspector PHELAN. Like the answer to which the objection was directed. Proceed.

Mr. SACHER. Will you also say like the statement of counsel?

Inspector PHELAN. I didn't hear that statement.

Mr. SACHER. Well, it is on the record. He made a statement that I am trying to intimidate this witness, and Mr. Fanelli moved to strike it from the record.

Mr. FANELLI. It is not justified by anything that has occurred this morning.

Inspector PHELAN. Strike it from the record. Proceed.

The WITNESS. Where are we, Mr. Inspector?

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Do you know whether or not counsel is a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. SACHER. You are beginning to hit below the belt.

Mr. BOYD. I am not.

Mr. SACHER. I object, Your Honor, to—this witness will swear his mother away. I object to that as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent in this proceeding.

[P. 98] Inspector PHELAN. Sustained.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Presiding Inspector—

Mr. SACHER. That is foulest, dirtiest thing I have ever seen from any lawyer in almost 25 years.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, the objection has been sustained.

Mr. BOYD. One of the charges is that this man has been affiliated—

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. I object to any statements by counsel, and I warn him now, if you open your mouth you will have a suit for slander on your hands before this day is over. Now just get that straight, and I warn you also that the laws of criminal libel in this State are such as to embrace any false statements that you make in the presence of newspapermen when you are on notice that your statements will be published in the press.

Now, with that notice, I warn you I will pursue you civilly and criminally if you dare to utter or imply a word of slander against me.

Inspector PHELAN. The objection has been sustained. Proceed.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Do you know whether or not John Santo is or was a member of the Communist Party?

[P. 99] Mr. SACHER. I object to that question on the ground that the witness has not been qualified to give any such testimony.

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

The WITNESS. I know that John Santo was, while I was a member of the Communist Party, a member likewise of the Communist Party. We were comrades in the Communist Party.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Did you ever attend any meetings of the Communist Party, the membership of which was limited to Communist members only, at which John Santo was present?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. When you referred to John Santo, to whom are you referring? If he is in this room, will you please identify him?—A. the gentleman there between Comrade Quill—

Mr. SACHER. I move to strike that out. You foul-mouth! Why do you refer to him as comrade? You claim you aren't a comrade now. Why do you refer to anyone like that now?

The WITNESS. Mr. Quill.

Mr. SACHER. That is better. Don't carry the Judas kiss in this place.

[P. 100] Mr. BOYD. Now please.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, I have stricken it. Proceed.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that the witness be admonished to desist from such conduct in the future.

Mr. BOYD. And that counsel be admonished not to intimidate this witness.

Mr. SACHER. Every time he is caught, he is being intimidated.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

(The reporter read the last question.)

Inspector PHELAN. Let me interfere here. The witness in referring to Mr. Santo will use the word "respondent," and in referring to counsel will use the word "counsel." In speaking of others, I desire that he mention them by name only.

Mr. SACHER. Prefixed only by the word "Mr."?

Inspector PHELAN. Correct.

The WITNESS. Gladly. Mr. Santo is sitting right opposite me in a blue-serge suit.

Mr. BOYD. Does the record show satisfactorily that the witness has identified—

Mr. SACHER. He has identified Santo. He was taken around to see him outside the building before the hearing.

[P. 101] Mr. BOYD. I object to such a statement and ask that it be stricken.

Mr. SACHER. I am making a concession. If you do not want it, do not take it.

Mr. BOYD. I ask that part of the answer wherein he stated—

Mr. SACHER. That is the concession. If you are not satisfied with it, go ahead and have the witness walk around and put his hand on Santo's head.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, I think if we would take a calmer attitude we will get along faster.

Mr. FANELLI. Could we have a 5-minute recess?

(A short recess was taken.)

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, we are here trying two basic issues of the fact. One of them is an allegation that the respondent was connected with certain organizations; the other involves the doctrines or teachings or character of those organizations. I am addressing counsel for both sides. We are not trying the conduct of any other person here as far as I am informed. This hearing is not subject to the strict rules of evidence that are applied by the courts. I personally am interested in just getting these facts.

I hope that all concerned will confine themselves to that. Counsel for both sides will necessarily be [p. 102] allowed considerable latitude in the questions that they may ask any witness. I see no escape from that in this type of a proceeding. I think, if those matters are borne in mind, that we can carry this hearing on in a more expeditious manner and probably in the end get closer to a proper record and result. Proceed.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Now, Mr. Budenz, you testified that the Communist Party of the United States has advocated the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. Just how did they propose to bring that about?—A. By the armed insurrection of a minority group. That is Leninism.

Mr. SACHER. Can the witness say how small a minority is envisaged?

Mr. BOYD. You may bring that out in cross-examination, counsel.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Did the Communist Party of the United States of America distribute literature in the United States?—A. Oh, extensively; yes, sir; distributed literature extensively in all parts of the United States.

Q. Did they have a literature department?—A. They have several literature departments.

Q. Are you familiar with the literature which they [p. 103] distributed?—A. With considerable issues; yes.

Mr. ROYD. Mr. Presiding Inspector, I have some pamphlets and books here that I would like to have marked for identification.

Inspector PHELAN. Very well. I observe that in the prior hearing there were 14 exhibits offered in evidence in rotation, without designating whether they were Government's exhibits or respondent's exhibits. If counsel are agreeable, we shall start marking future Government's exhibits as "Government Exhibit 15." As to defense exhibits, we can either start with "Respondent Exhibit 1" or—

Mr. SACHER. Letter them, perhaps.

Inspector PHELAN. That will be excellent.

Mr. SACHER. That is agreeable.

Mr. ROYD. All right.

Inspector PHELAN. These are being marked at this time, for identification only, "15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26."

(Whereupon the pamphlets and books above referred to were marked "Government's Exhibits 15 to 26" for identification.)

By Mr. ROYD:

Q. Handing you what is marked "Government's Exhibit 15" for identification, will you please state what it is and whether or not you are familiar with it [handing same to witness].—[p. 104] A. State and Revolution, by V. I. Lenin, International Publishers, New York. I am familiar with that.

Q. Do you know whether or not that pamphlet, marked "Government's Exhibit 15," entitled "State and Revolution," was displayed and offered for sale by the Communist Party of the United States of America?

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. I object to this unless a connection between this organization and the specific sales is established. Otherwise, it represents the witness' conclusion without any substantiating evidence.

Inspector PHELAN. Overruled.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

The WITNESS. Yes; this is distributed widely by the Communist Party in one form or another. It is in book form, too, in addition to this pamphlet. The International Publishers are an outlet for the Communist Party, owned and controlled by the Communist Party.

Mr. SACHER. I object to that, Mr. Inspector, and I wish to point out that, if the title to a mongrel dog was involved in a $2 lawsuit, a witness would not be permitted to testify that the dog was owned by one or another of the parties; and I therefore move to strike from the record this witness' testimony [p. 105] as to the ownership of the book publishers of Government's exhibit 15.

Inspector PHELAN. Does the document show who issued it?

Mr. SACHER. Yes; the International Publishers. That is all it shows, according to the witness.

Inspector PHELAN. The witness may answer and state how he knows the facts of ownership.

By Mr. ROYD:

Q. Mr. Budenz, you have testified that the International Publishers are owned and controlled by the Communist Party. Will you state how you know that fact?—A. I know it from decision and discussions in the political committee and the national committee, and the fact that representatives of the International Publishers, as part of the party apparatus, appear at every Communist Party convention and urge the sale of this literature as Communist literature, and the International Publishers is a Communist outlet, a Communist organization.

Mr. Trachtenberg, who is the representative of the International Publishers, has been many times a member of the national committee of the Communist Party and also appears at every convention of the Communist Party in that capacity. That is, as a representative of a Communist book firm.

[P. 106] Mr. SACHER. Mr. Inspector, I respectfully submit that, if that constitutes the entire basis for the witness' statement in regard to ownership, that it does not support the conclusion and that the statement in regard to ownership should be struck from the record.

In that connection, I would like to point out that there probably isn't a book publisher in America or a newspaper publisher in America who is not a member of some political party and who either directly or indirectly attends, participates, or controls political parties and is in turn controlled by political parties, and yet no one would assume to say that any of these publications is owned by those political organizations.

On that basis, I move to strike the statement in regard to ownership from the record.

Inspector PHELAN. Denied.

Mr. SACHER. What is the ruling?

Inspector PHELAN. Denied.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Have you personally seen these documents offered for sale, this document offered for sale at Communist Party meetings?—[P. 107] A. Oh, many, many times. This is a standard Communist work which is constantly distributed.

Q. Does the Communist Party have literature agents?—A. In the branches they have literature agents. They also have a literature department in State organizations, and each section of the party which feeds the literature to the branches.

Q. What are the functions of these literature departments and literature agents of the Communist Party?—A. To distribute, by sale, books of this character, pamphlets of this character.

Q. Is this one of the books that was distributed by the Communist Party through its literature department?—A. That is one of those most extensively distributed and most constantly distributed.

Mr. BOYD. I am now offering in evidence Government's Exhibit 15, State and Revolution.

Mr. SACHER. Look; I just want to suggest this. You have there exhibits running from 15 to 26.

Mr. BOYD. Would you like me to offer them all at once?

Mr. SACHER. To save time. You make an over-all offer, and I will make my objections accordingly.

Mr. BOYD. All right.

By Mr. BOYD:

[P. 108] Q. I hand you what is marked "Government's Exhibit 16" for identification, and ask you what it is and whether you are familiar with it [handing same to witness].—A. The Communist Manifesto, by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels.

Q. By whom was it published?—A. International Publishers again.

Q. Are you familiar with this?

Mr. SACHER. Why don't we also get a concession that it will be testified that he is familiar with the contents of all of these documents, that he will also testify in regard to each of these subsequent documents substantially the same as he testified in regard to Government's exhibit 15 for identification, and we can save the time then.

Mr. BOYD. If you wish to make a stipulation to that effect, the Government is agreeable.

Inspector PHELAN. I think that is advisable.

Mr. BOYD. Will you put that in the form of a stipulation?

Mr. SACHER. It is stipulated that the witness' testimony in regard to Government's exhibits 16 to 26, both inclusive, will be substantially the same as his testimony in regard to Government's exhibit 15 for identification.

[P. 109] Inspector PHELAN. That is as to—

Mr. SACHER. His familiarity, the contents, the sale, the distribution.

Inspector PHELAN. And the origin.

Mr. SACHER. And the origin.

Mr. BOYD. There is this about it, however. These books are not all published by the same publishers.

Mr. SACHER. The books themselves will show that.

Mr. FANELLI. Let's make sure that is agreeable to the witness.

Mr. SACHER. I do not care about the witness.

Inspector PHELAN. I think he should look at all of them and see if he is familiar with them.

The WITNESS. I think a couple of these may not have been during the time I was a member of the Communist Party. I would like to qualify the knowledge I have of them.

Mr. SACHER. You probably won't.

The WITNESS. The program of the Communist International, together with the Status of the Communist International, copyright 1929. That was before I was a member of the Communist Party, published by the Workers' Library Publishers. I am familiar with it and know that it was distributed by the Communist Party.

Mr. SACHER. Well, if there is any one you are not [p. 110] familiar with or that was not distributed, tell us that, because we are stipulating. That is why we are stipulating that you would testify.

The WITNESS. Well, there is a slight difference.

Inspector PHELAN. May I ask a question?

The WITNESS. I want to be exact.

Inspector PHELAN. Were all of these documents distributed by the party, to your own knowledge, during the time that you were connected with that organization?

The WITNESS. Yes; some of these were not distributed in as large a measure because, for instance, these resolutions of the Sixth World Congress, while still available to Communists while I was there and accessible to their schools, was not as widely distributed as some other documents. That is the only qualification I would make.

Inspector PHELAN. Are counsel ready to enter into that stipulation?

Mr. SACHER. Yes; that he would so testify.

Inspector PHELAN. What is the stipulation for the record, please?

(Stipulation read.)

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, is that satisfactory?

Mr. BOYD. It is satisfactory to the Government.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

[P. 111] Mr. BOYD. I now offer in evidence Government exhibits 15 and 26, inclusive.

Mr. SACHER. I object to those exhibits, Mr. Inspector, on the ground that they are immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, not binding upon the respondent, and have no probative force or value in this proceeding.

Inspector PHELAN. Overruled.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

(Whereupon Government's exhibits 15 to 26, inclusive, heretofore marked for identification, were received in evidence.)

Mr. SACHER. Can't we have copies?

Mr. BOYD. I am sorry; there are none.

Inspector PHELAN. Is there any objection to loaning them to counsel after they are in the record here?

Mr. BOYD. I see no objection.

Mr. SACHER. Can we have them over the week end?

Mr. BOYD. Providing they are available to us at the hearing at all times.

Mr. SACHER. Oh, sure.

Mr. FANELLI. Mr. Presiding Inspector, may I ask, in view of the fact particularly that I am ordinarily in Washington and Mr. Sacher is ordinarily in New York and we are preparing this case together, I [p. 112] would ask counsel at least to check insofar as there may be some extra copies of that around the place; we would like to borrow them.

Mr. BOYD. I will be glad to loan you duplicates of any of those books we have.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Mr. Budenz, you mentioned the fact, or referred to schools. Did the Communist Party of the United States of America conduct schools in the United States?—A. Yes; it conducted several characters of schools.

Q. Tell us about them.—A. Originally they had the workers' school all throughout the country. They were open schools, open in the sense that they invited members of the party in general and also those who were sympathetic or even those whom they wanted to win to the party to attend these workers' schools. Later these workers' schools were all changed over, being given specific names like Jefferson School in New York and Lincoln School in Chicago and the like. That was during the Browder period in part. Then, in addition to that, though, they also had the secret schools; that is, the national training school, the State training school, and the section training school. Those were secret schools for members of the party only, those being trained to be [p. 113] leaders in the party; and they were held at various camps and places like that, so they had several different characters of schools.

Q. Did they use textbooks at these schools?—A. Yes; they used textbooks. That is, they used different literature from time to time.

Q. Did they use any of this literature here at those schools?

Mr. SACHER. Now, just one moment. I am going to ask that the witness be required to state whether he knows which of the proposed—I take it these are other exhibits, Mr. Boyd.

Mr. BOYD. The same ones.

Mr. SACHER. If it is the same ones, I am going to ask that the witness be required to state in which of the many schools he has mentioned here he can say that any or all of the exhibits have been or are being used. I am going to object to an omnibus statement in this case.

Inspector PHELAN. What is the question?

(The reporter read the question.)

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled. Let the witness examine the exhibits and state which, if any of them, he knows were used in such schools.

Mr. FANELLI. And which schools.

Mr. SACHER. Is that right?

[P. 114] The WITNESS. That is right.

Mr. SACHER. May I suggest that the witness refer to the publication by exhibit number so that when we get to read the record we can see what it is?

Inspector PHELAN. That would be helpful.

The WITNESS. Government's exhibit 22 was used in both schools.

Inspector PHELAN. Which schools?

The WITNESS. Well, in all of the schools in one form or another.

Inspector PHELAN. You refer to both types of schools, then?

The WITNESS. That is right. That is, under Marxism and Leninism it was used. This was used as auxiliary reading. Government's exhibit 20, used as auxiliary reading in all schools. In courses on Marxism and Leninism, wherever they were held, this was referred to all schools, Government's exhibit 16.

Mr. SACHER. Why don't you take a quick glance at them? If your answer is "all schools," just put it in.

Mr. BOYD. Take your time in perusing the exhibits.

The WITNESS. Government's exhibit 26, well, at least, was referred to in all schools and used in the schools of the party proper. That is what I call the [p. 115] national training and district schools.

This likewise, which is a companion piece, Government's exhibit 23, was used in the same capacity as reading matter for the schools in general, as I recall, but as a textbook in Marxism and Leninism in the national training school and the section school.

Government's exhibit 25 was used during my very early part of the party, and I am not sure that it was used in the party schools.

Government's exhibit 24 was used as a side reference, at least, though not as a textbook proper, mostly in the party schools. This [indicating exhibit 25] was practically not used at all during my membership in the party in the general schools.

That was the case likewise with Government's exhibit 17.

I have no knowledge of Government's exhibit 19 being used in the schools.

I have no knowledge of Government's exhibit 21 being used in the schools, although reference to it was made because it was a document of the party, but not as a textbook, certainly.

Government's exhibit 18 was used only as auxiliary reading in the schools in both, but particularly in the party schools. This was for popular distribution, [p. 116] however, rather than for school work.

And this is a standard book for the schools in Marxism and Leninism, Government's exhibit 15.

Inspector PHELAN. Were those books sold to the students in these two types of schools or furnished in connection with the courses of study?

The WITNESS. They were sold to the students; yes.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Were what is marked "Government's Exhibits 16 to 26, inclusive"—
A. Just a moment. There is a variation here, by the way, that you should bear in mind. That is, when the Jefferson School came into existence, there was a course in Marxism presented there which may not have used all of these documents. I can say, though, that there was used Government's exhibit 26, Government's exhibit 15, Government's exhibit 23, Government's exhibit 16, Government's exhibit 22.

Inspector PHELAN. When did that school come into existence?

Mr. FANELLI. Which school?

The WITNESS. The Jefferson School as distinct from the Workers School. Well, let me try to recall. It was approximately, though the date may have to be changed exactly, approximately 1941, 1940—may be a [p. 117] little later.

Inspector PHELAN. Did the school operate locally in New York City?

The WITNESS. There had been workers schools through different cities of the United States. They were done away with, and in their place were established other local schools which had different names. That was under Browder's leadership. These schools were the Samuel Adams School in Boston, the Jefferson School in New York, the Lincoln School in Chicago, and some other schools. Those are the ones that I recall.

Inspector PHELAN. Were those schools open to the public in the sense that the party was inviting people in to take the instruction which the schools offered?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; those were open schools. They had open public offices. The other schools, the national training school and the State training school and the section training schools, were secret; that is to say, it was restricted to people chosen by the officials of the party and held without any label or address or anything like that. They were generally held at some camp when the camp season was over with. Those were for training leadership in the party.

Inspector PHELAN. How widely distributed was the other type of school? You spoke of Boston and New York [p. 118], I believe. Were there other schools throughout the United States?

The WITNESS. Yes; in certain cities throughout the United States. I just cannot recall their names now or locations, but there were others.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed, Counsel.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Do you know whether or not they taught the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence at these schools to which you have made reference?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. FANELLI. Could we have that question repeated?

(The reporter read the question.)

Mr. FANELLI. I just do not understand the question, Mr. Inspector. Could it be rephrased? I do not know what "taught the overthrow" means.

Mr. SACHER. Taught.

Mr. FANELLI. Oh, I misunderstood.

Mr. SACHER. That being the case, I object to the question as calling for the most ridiculous of conclusions.

Inspector PHELAN. I will sustain that and I will ask the question.

Did you at any time have any connection with the [p. 119] management of any of these schools, either the schools inside the party or the schools that were open to the public?

The WITNESS. As a member of the State committee I passed on their curricula several times; as a member of the national committee on the curricula.

Inspector PHELAN. What governing body of the organization—

Mr. SACHER. May I suggest that you ask him what might appear in the curricula that would indicate that they teach the overthrow of the Government?

Inspector PHELAN. I was leading up to that, Counsel.

What governing body of the organization was responsible for the over-all direction of these two types of schools?

The WITNESS. Well, the national committee was generally responsible for them all. The State committees were responsible for the schools in their own localities. Whether they were open or secret—by the way, there was, however, a special educational department, creators of special educational records. For instance, "Pop Mendel" was the head of the educational department for the private training schools.

[P. 120] Inspector PHELAN. Did he sit on any of these governing committees at that time?

The WITNESS. Well, he regularly reported to them from time to time.

Inspector PHELAN. Do you know just how this educational director was appointed? What I am trying to get at is—

The WITNESS. Oh, he was appointed by the national committee, and in the States he was appointed by the State committee.

Inspector PHELAN. Did you testify that you yourself had served on the national committee?

The WITNESS. That is correct. Also—

Inspector PHELAN. For what period?

The WITNESS. Well, I cannot recall the years at the moment, because there was an interval there when I was made president of the Freedom of the Press Co., Inc.; and my impression is that during that interim I was not on the national committee for certain defensive reasons.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Can you tell us about when you were on the committee?—A. I became a member of the national committee about the year after I joined the party in 1936, and I was a member all throughout the Chicago period.

Inspector PHELAN. That would be up to about what [p. 121] year?

The WITNESS. That would be up to and including 1940. Now, if I remember correctly—I may be a little bit mixed up in this—but, if I remember correctly, when I became president of the Freedom of the Press Co., Inc., the understanding was for defensive purposes that I would not be a candidate for the national committee; and I wasn't for a couple of years, if I remember correctly. There was a couple of years there where there was an interim I was not on the national committee.

Inspector PHELAN. During the time you served—

The WITNESS. But in 1945, when I left the party, I was still a member of the national committee.

Inspector PHELAN. During the periods that you served on the national committee, was the party operating these schools of which you have spoken?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Inspector PHELAN. Was the party operating those schools under the direction of a national committee?

Mr. SACHER. If it please the inspector, I would like to object to this whole line of questions. I don't want to be discourteous to you, and I do not want to retard the proceedings, so if you will grant me an exception to your complete line of questions and answers I will appreciate it.

[P. 122] Inspector PHELAN. The objections will be overruled and an exception granted.

The WITNESS. Your inquiry was whether the national committee directed these schools?

Inspector PHELAN. During the time that you served on the committee.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; in a general way they directed the schools. Of course, they allocated the direct running of the schools to educational departments, but they, in general, supervised them and approved or disapproved what the schools did.

Inspector PHELAN. On what do you base your statement that these particular exhibits or certain of them were used in those two types of schools?

The WITNESS. Well, that was a regular procedure, almost auxiliary. The point of the matter is that Marxism, Leninism, whenever on the program of the schools—and that was the heart of the school—would include certain of these well-known documents which are part of the theory of Marxism-Leninism.

Inspector PHELAN. You spoke of the curricula of the schools. What, in general, would that embrace?

The WITNESS. Well, there would be public speaking; there would be courses in English, courses in parliamentary [p. 123] law for union activities, courses in other things of that character. Some of them were courses in history, history of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, sometimes, which was a special textbook for that.

Inspector PHELAN. Were there certain specified books to be used in connection with certain specified courses?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SACHER. That is true of Harvard University, too, I understand.

Inspector PHELAN. I just want to get the record clear. Proceed, Counsel.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. I believe you testified that these exhibits 18 to 26, inclusive, were offered for sale by the Communist Party during the entire period you were a member of the party. That is from 1935 to 1945; is that correct?—A. A couple of them were not widely distributed, but in general that is correct. I have distinguished, I think, between the different exhibits.

Q. Did the party offer these exhibits for sale as a matter of raising funds or for the purpose of spreading communism?—A. Primarily for the purpose of spreading communism. That is why they are in existence, that is why the Communist [p. 124] Party exists.

Q. Who paid for the publishing of these books; do you know?

Mr. SACHER. I suppose the World-Telegram publishes for the purpose of publishing.

The WITNESS. The payment for these books, of course, was sometimes complicated. That is, the party creates different corporations. The Daily Worker is a special corporation, the International Publishers, Workers' Library Publishers. Technically those corporations pay for them, but these reports on them, their finances, and the stabilization of them is all the party responsibility—the national committee's responsibility.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Can you—

Inspector PHELAN. May I ask a question for clarity here? Do I understand that the national committee is the highest governing board of the party in the United States?

The WITNESS. Well, in one way it is. The national committee is the board which functions between conventions, but the political committee, which is the executive committee of the national committee, functions in between sessions of the national committee and frequently when the words "national committee" are used [p. 125] it means political committee because the political committee has power to issue statements even in the name of the national committee without calling the national committee together. So a great many of these questions are allocated in detail or in continuous operation to the political committee, which is the executive committee, though, of the national committee.

Under the new constitution, because the Communists are always changing the names of these different committees, it has a new name. I think it is called the national board now, but it was formerly known as the political committee.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Referring to these books here, how about the Workers Publishers? Is that owned and controlled by the Communist Party, or was it owned and controlled by the Communist Party during the period that you were a member of the party?

Mr. SACHER. I just want to interpose an objection on the ground, as I said before, that you could not prove the ownership of a dog with that kind of a question. I think it is irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent.

Inspector PHELAN. I will sustain it and suggest that the witness be asked what, if anything, he knows as to any relationship between the Workers Publishing Co. and the Party?

[P. 126] The WITNESS. The Workers Library Publishers is a corporation formed by the Communist Party, or an organization formed by the Communist Party, which reports regularly to the Communist Party, for which the Communist Party is responsible financially and promotionally.

There are many such corporations formed by the Communist Party for defense and other purposes, legal purposes.

Inspector PHELAN. In what form does it report to the Communist Party and to what governing body of the party?

The WITNESS. It takes the report of the financial standing to the national committee, and then this is referred to the political committee for its detailed examination.

Inspector PHELAN. That is a periodic report, is it, at intervals?

The WITNESS. It is done from time to time. I do not know whether you call it periodic. It generally is before the national conventions, and then it is—the reports for the political committee are more periodic without reference to the national committee.

I have been at certain political committee meetings on other matters where a report has been made on the finances on one or the other of these corporations or [p. 127] organizations.

Mr. BOYD. I would like these two books marked for identification, please.

(Whereupon the books referred to were marked "Government's Exhibits 27 and 28" for identification.)

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Referring to what is marked "Government Exhibit 27," will you state whether or not you know what that is [handing same to witness].—A. I know the publication; yes.

Q. The Communist?—A. The Communist was then the official theoretical organ of the Communist Party and continued so for a number of years until its name was changed to Political Affairs.

Q. On the preface there appears: "The Communist, a magazine of theory and practice of Marxism and Leninism published monthly by the Communist Party of the United States of America, entered as second-class matter, November 2, 1927, at the post office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879."

Mr. SACHER. Are you offering that in evidence?

Mr. BOYD. I am now offering in evidence Government's exhibits 27 and 28 for identification.

Mr. SACHER. If it please the inspector, I heard Mr. Boyd read from this. That is why I was anxious to [p. 128] see this, in which it says on the top of this magazine, "Entered as second-class matter, November 2, 1927, at the post office at New York, N. Y."

Now, I am going to object to the receipt of this by yourself as inspector here, on the ground that this cannot conceivably be used—I am referring now to Government's exhibit 28 for identification—as a basis for any conclusion in this proceeding for the following reason: Under the law the Postmaster General of the United States is charged with the duty to exclude from the mails all matter which advocates, teaches, et cetera, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence.

In view of the fact that this publication appears on the face of it that it was received and passed through the mails by the Postmaster General, I respectfully submit that the Government of the United States has placed its imprimatur on Government's exhibit 28, and that which it itself saw fit to distribute through the mails cannot now constitute any part of a basis for the deportation of any inhabitant of the United States. That applies, of course, to both of the tendered exhibits.

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled, and the documents will be marked in evidence.

Mr. SACHER. I respectfully except.

[P. 129] (Whereupon Government's exhibits 27 and 28, previously marked for identification, were received in evidence.)

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Did Mr. Santo hold any office in the Communist Party at the time you were a member of the Communist Party?—A. Well, in 1936 and 1937 he was a member of the State trade-union commission.

Q. What is the State trade-union commission, Mr. Budenz?—A. That was an organ of the Communist Party created to infiltrate the trade-unions and to discuss their problems and to advance the Communist view in the trade-unions. It was created by the State committee of the Communist Party of New York. These commissions exist all through the country in every State organization of the Communist Party.

Q. Did you attend any meetings of this commission at which Mr. Santo was present?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member also at that time as labor editor of the Daily Worker.

Mr. SACHER. You were a busy little man, weren't you? You got around everywhere.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Did Mr. Santo ever make any reports to this committee at any time you were there?—A. Yes; he did on a couple of occasions.

[P. 130] Q. Do you remember the subject of those reports?—A. In a general way. It is a long time ago.

Q. What was the subject of those reports?—A. The subject of those reports was on one occasion I know—

Mr. SACHER. I ask for a specification of at least the month.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. About when was this committee meeting held?—A. It is very difficult to give the month. I have met him at many meetings. In fact, many apartment-house meetings, because the party meets in all sorts of ways.

Inspector PHELAN. Can you fix the year?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; the year is 1936 and 1937, in those years. It had to be.

Mr. SACHER. Are those the only years you claim?

The WITNESS. Yes; those were the only years in that capacity.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. You referred to one specific meeting.—A. Those were the only years I was a member of the State trade union commission.

Q. About when was this specific meeting to which Mr. Santo made a report?—

A. Well, it had to be between the spring of 1936 and the fall of 1937.

[P. 131] Q. Where was the meeting held?—A. It was held in the Workers School in 35 East Twelfth Street. That is the headquarters building of the Communist Party.

Q. Who was present at this meeting?—A. We met in some of the offices of the Workers School.

MR. SACHER. Just a moment. I object, Mr. Inspector, to the attempt by this witness to drag in any other people, and I submit that the only question at issue is the attendance of the respondent and of nobody else, and I therefore ask that testimony concerning any others allegedly present be excluded.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, it might be pertinent to determine whether this was or was not a Communist meeting.

MR. SACHER. Well, the witness has already said it was, and I take it that counsel for the Government is not questioning veracity, and as yet there has been no attempt to impeach this witness. That may come later.

I am not saying "Yes" or "No," but for the time being the record does not show any impeachment, so I think that it would be improper.

Inspector PHELAN. I think the question is proper. The objection will be overruled.

[P. 132] MR. SACHER. I respectfully except.

The WITNESS. May I have the question again, please?

(The reporter read the question, as follows:)

Q. Who was present at this meeting?

The WITNESS. Some of those present I can recall. Sam Nesain, formerly of the unemployment council and now an organizer in a number of unions. I. Rosenberg, of the shoe workers, United Shoe Workers. Michael J. Obermeier, of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen.

Well, as members of the committee, there was also Irving Potash, of the furriers, and Shulman, who is Louis Weinstock's colleague in the painters. Offhand those are the people I remember.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. Was Mr. Santo present?—A. Yes; he made a report on the transport.

Q. And what was the subject of that report?—A. Well, in regard to the activity of the transport workers at that time. The reason I recall his particular report is that it dealt with the difficulty of collections in part; that is, of dues collections.

Q. Did you say collections for what?—A. For the organizations.

Q. What organization?—[P. 133] *A. The transport workers; and, as a matter of fact, Rose Wortis, who was present—she was the director of the trade-union work in the New York district—she was inclined to be critical of the fact that the union at that time was not on a more stable basis. The report centered around this idea.

Q. Was this a union meeting or was this a meeting of the State trade-union commission of the Communist Party?—A. State trade-union commission of the Communist Party.

Q. Were there any persons present at this meeting who were not members of the Communist Party?—A. No, sir. These meetings were held by the Communist Party every so often; once a week or twice a month in this Workers School; and only members of the Communist Party active in the trade-unions, could be in attendance.

Inspector PHELAN. Were they especially called for or regularly scheduled meetings?

The WITNESS. There was a regular schedule. Sometimes it was changed by necessity, but it was a regular schedule of a certain evening in the week, or twice a month. I don't recall, and I think it was approximately one a week.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. How did one become a member of this State trade-union commission?—[P. 134] A. Appointed by the State committee of the Communist Party.

Q. About how many meetings would you say you attended, conducted by the Communist Party, at which Mr. Santo was present?—A. Well, I should say four. I can remember—I should say that would be a correct estimate.

Q. And those four meetings were held between the years 1935 and 1940?—A. No, no; 1936 and 1937.

Inspector PHELAN. Were those all meetings of the same committee that you have spoken of?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; that was a regularly held meeting every so often. Inspector PHELAX. And these four meetings that you speak of, having seen the respondent present, were meetings of that particular body?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; of which the directing agent was Rose Wortis. She was present also. She is the trade-union director of the State organization operating at that time under Jack Stachel.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. What was the purpose of the State trade-union commission? What were its functions?—A. To discuss the problems in the unions where Communists were active and also to discuss the progress of [p. 135] Communist activity in these unions, including recruitment into the party, the advance of Communists to official positions, the control of the unions by the Communists, and things of that character. There came to these meetings general representatives of three different unions of an evening. That is to say, sometimes the dealings would be three to five people, sometimes one person, sometimes two, but generally three unions were heard, the Communist representatives in three unions were heard of an evening.

Q. Were heard by the members of the State trade-union commission?—A. That is right.

Q. And this commission was comprised of how many persons, again?—A. Well, of 10 to 15 people.

Q. Your membership in the State trade-union commission terminated in about 1937?—A. When I went to Chicago; yes.

Q. And how long were you in Chicago?—A. Oh, I was there until 1940, when I returned to become president of the Freedom of the Press Co., Inc.

Inspector PHELAX. I think this is an excellent point to adjourn until 2 o'clock is counsel are in [p. 135-A] accord.

(Whereupon, at 12:30 p. m., the hearing was adjourned for luncheon recess until 2 p. m.)

[P. 136]

AFTERNOON SESSION, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1947, 2 P. M.

LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Direct examination (continued) by Mr. BOYD:

Q. Mr. Budenz, you testified to attending a certain meeting in the trade-union commission of the Communist Party in which Mr. Santo, respondent, made a report?—A. That is right.

Q. And I believe you testified that he reported on dues collections?—A. Yes, dues collection in the transport system. That was a review of that session.

Q. Dues collection for the Communist Party or for the TWU?—A. That was in regard to the TWU, but he also reported on party recruitment.

Q. What party recruitment?—A. Communist Party.

Q. What did he say about party recruitment?

Mr. SACHER. Just a moment. Is this on the basis of a refreshment of the witness' recollection during the lunch hour? Is that what this is based on?

[P. 137] Mr. BOYD. No; I had no knowledge of it, so I certainly could not have refreshed his recollection.

Mr. SACHER. My recollection is that this witness completed his testimony of what he claimed transpired at this meeting of the spring of 1936 and the fall of 1937, and he—

Inspector PHELAX. I hadn't so understood it, counsel. I assumed that this would be further developed.

Mr. SACHER. That is just an exfoliation, so to speak. All right, if that is what it is.

Mr. BOYD. I ask that counsel's remarks be stricken from the record.

Inspector PHELAX. That may go out.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. What did he say about recruitment, Mr. Budenz?—A. Details of it are not longer fresh in my mind, but the idea was in regard to getting more members of the party in that particular section of industry.

Q. When you say the party, you mean—A. Communist Party. That was one of his assignments. That was his assignment in part. He was the political representative of the Communist Party.

Q. Assigned to—[P. 138] A. Transport. The assignments were made of different Communists to different industries.

Q. Who made these assignments?—A. They were made by the different organs of the party, the State committee of the New York party, in case of activities within New York State, always under the direction of Jack Stachel, who was the political committee's man at that time in charge of labor in general, labor relations in general.

Q. Did you ever attend any other meetings of the Communist Party in which Mr. Santo, respondent, was present?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. Will you please state when and where?—A. It was a convention of the Communist Party, national convention secret session of the delegates. I am not sure whether it was 1936 or 1938, but it is a matter of public record. It could be checked.

Mr. SACHER. You say it was secret. How could it be a matter of public record?

The WITNESS. Oh, the convention was public. But this particular session was what you call executive, I suppose. Most of the sessions of conventions of the Communist Party are of that character. But this was particularly so. And a delegation of [P. 139] Communists from the transport industry presented Rose Wartus, the New York director on labor, with a great display of roses. Red roses, for her work in transport.

By Mr. BOYD:

Q. When you say her work in transport, what do you mean?—A. Her work in directing Communists like Santo and others in their work in the transport industry.

Q. Were you present at this meeting?—A. Yes; I remember the roses on the side of the stage.

Q. Was Mr. Santo present at this meeting?—A. He was one of the delegation, or he was on the stage, but he did not speak.

Q. Was Mr. Santo a delegate to this National Convention of the Communist Party?

Mr. SACHER. I object, unless the witness gives the basis for his statement.

A. Well, I am not sure of that. As a matter of fact, anyway, he was present there, as a Communist, at this particular session.

Q. Were you present as a Communist?—A. I was present there as a delegate.

Q. Did you attend any other meetings of the Communist Party at which Mr. Santo was present?—[p. 140] A. Two other meetings, and large national committees of the Communist Party, around 1940 or 1941; that is, in those years. On one occasion in which I was introduced to him again, we were all there together, by Jack Stachel, in the back of the hall.

Mr. SACHER. Where was this; when was this?

The WITNESS. Well, it was 1940 or 1941.

Mr. SACHER. You were introduced to him then?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. SACHER. After having met him 4 years before?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SACHER. You were introduced 4 years after you had met him?

The WITNESS. That is common among Communists.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed, gentlemen. You may cross-examine later.

The WITNESS. Jack Stachel just said, "This is a good Bolshevik, Comrade Santo," and told me, and we laughed and I said, "Well, of course, I know him." It was in the back of the fraternal clubhouse, the hall. I mean that is the hall, the fraternity clubhouse in the forties, where this meeting of the enlarged national committee was held, to my recollection.

[P. 141] By Mr. BOYD:

Q. You made reference to Rose Wartus; who is Rose Wartus?—A. Rose Wartus is the director of labor work in the New York district of the Communist Party.

Q. Of the Communist Party?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did she hold that position at the time of the convention?—A. Yes; she did. She has held it for many, many years. She is in charge of the entire labor activities of the Communist Party in the New York district, under the direction of whoever is the national director, or for the political committee. At that time, Jack Stachel, very frequently he was, though Roy Hutchins supplanted him sometime or other.

Q. Directing your attention to these exhibits again, Government exhibits 15 to 28, do these exhibits contain the doctrine of ideology of the Communist Party of the United States of America?—A. What is that?

Q. Do these exhibits, exhibits 15 to 28, inclusive, contain the doctrines and ideologies of the Communist Party of the United States of America?

Mr. SACHER. As to what time?

[P. 142] Mr. BOYD. As of the time that you were a member of the party. In other words, between 1935 and 1945?

A. That is correct in general. The Communist Party has one basic principle all the time.

Q. What is that basic principle?—A. That is the Marxism, Leninism, the overthrow of all bourgeois, democratic governments by armed force.

Q. And is the United States Government considered a bourgeois government?—A. It is considered the chief bourgeois democratic government.

Mr. BOYD. I have no further questions.

Cross-examination by Mr. SACHER.

Q. Where were you born?—A. Indianapolis, Ind.

Q. Did you ever live in Terre Haute, Ind.?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever known by any other name than Louis Francis Budenz?—

A. No, sir. I may have written in the Daily Worker, but I don't even recall that. Once in a while it was a practice, but I never passed myself off as anyone but Louis Francis Budenz.

[P. 143] Q. Are you married?—A. Oh, I am, indeed.

Q. What is your wife's name?—A. Margaret Rogers.

Q. Margaret Rogers Budenz?—A. That is correct.

Q. When did you marry her?—A. I married her in St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1945.

Q. How many children do you have?—A. Four children.

Q. You did not have those children between the time of the marriage in St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1945 and this twelfth day of September 1945, did you?

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Presiding Inspector, I object.

Mr. SACHER. Wait a minute. I am on the track of something, and I want a chance to go after it.

Inspector PHELAN. Strike it out as argumentative. You may rephrase the question.

Mr. SACHER. I will rephrase the question, Mr. Inspector.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Did you have the four children that you and your wife, Margaret Rogers Budenz, have between the date of your marriage at St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1945 and this [p. 144] 12th day of September 1947?

Mr. BOYD. Just a moment. I would like to renew my objection. It is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial.

Inspector PHELAN. Same ruling.

Mr. SACHER. Mr. Inspector, I ask the same indulgence. I promise to connect it. And I ask your indulgence. Now, for Heaven's sake, you cannot do this for the prosecution and deny it to the defense. When you said earlier that you were going to give us the same latitude that you gave the Government—

Inspector PHELAN. You know there is a way of asking that question that isn't objectionable.

Mr. SACHER. You tell me. I don't know.

Inspector PHELAN. Shall I ask it?

Mr. SACHER. Yes. Would you be good enough to?

Inspector PHELAN. How many children do you have?

The WITNESS. Four children. Four girls.

Inspector PHELAN. Will you state the dates of the birth of each of these children?

The WITNESS. Most decidedly. One of them was born on June 13, 1934, at the time of the [p. 145] Toledo strike. The other, March 11, 1937. The other, 1943. The other, 1946.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Do you then say that these first three children were had by you and Margaret Rogers Budenz before you were married to her?

Mr. BOYD. Again, I object to this question.

Mr. SACHER. I am leading to something. I will connect it in a moment. Give me a moment or two and I will connect it.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. SACHER :

Q. You were not married to her at the time that you had these children; is that it?—A. Not technically.

Q. What do you mean, "not technically"? What other way were you married to her?

Mr. BOYD. Just a moment, please.

Mr. SACHER. I am going to prove bigamy against this man, and I ask for an opportunity to prove that bigamy.

Mr. BOYD. I ask that this line of questioning be stricken as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. [P. 146] It has no bearing on the issues here.

Mr. SACHER. I want to prove that this man committed the crime of bigamy in the State of New York, and I want to prove that, because of the commission of that crime, his creditability is impaired, and I therefore demand the opportunity to show that Budenz is a bigamist.

Mr. BOYD. If the man has not been convicted of the crime—

Mr. SACHER. But I have a right to show that he committed the crime. He has been getting away with bigamy, and I want to show that he committed the bigamy.

Mr. BOYD. I renew my objection, Mr. Inspector.

Inspector PHELAN. Objection, in the absence of evidence of a conviction, is sustained. You could ask him if he ever has been convicted of bigamy.

Mr. SACHER. Let me read you the rule of law.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

Mr. SACHER. In 70 Corpus Juris, at page 882, section 1095, it is said as follows [reading]: "It is usually held that for the purpose of impeachment and as bearing in his creditability, a witness may be interrogated in cross-examination as [p. 147] to his commission of a crime or guilt thereof, where such crime reflects on his integrity and creditability as a witness, subject, however to his right to refuse to answer incriminating questions."

Now, there is no rule of law, Mr. Inspector, either in the Federal courts or in the State courts, which limits the right of impeachment on the grounds of commission of crime to those instances where the man has been convicted of a crime. The cross-examiner has a fundamental right to prove, through the testimony of the witness himself, the commission of crime.

I grant you that I won't be entitled to prove the commission of the crime in the absence of a conviction by any witness other than this witness himself. But the rule is so old and so well established and so well known to every lawyer in America that on the cross-examination of a witness you may bring up his commission of a crime that will bear on his creditability, regardless of whether or not he has actually been convicted of it.

And I demand the opportunity to prove that Budenz is a bigamist, having committed the crime of bigamy in the State of New York, and I am prepared, as I told Mr. Boyd this morning, that I would prosecute him criminally [p. 148] for libel. I am ready to answer to Budenz' charge of criminal libel if he denies that he committed bigamy in the State of New York.

Now, I demand the opportunity to prove those facts.

Inspector PHELAN. What does counsel have to say in answer to the argument that that is a proper impeaching question?

Mr. BOYD. I think in this State you can attack him on proof of conviction. But you can't attack a man in the matter that is being conducted here. I don't think it is proper cross-examination.

Inspector PHELAN. Well, I may say that my impressionable rule was similar. However, this hearing is not conducted under strict rules of evidence, and for that reason I will permit the question to be asked at this time.

By Mr. SACHER :

Q. I show you this book and ask you whether you wrote this book [hands to witness].—A. I wrote it; yes, indeed.

Q. Do you have an extra copy which we can put in the record as evidence?—A. No; I haven't.

[P. 149] Q. What's the matter? Are you all sold out?

Mr. SACHER. I ask that this be marked as "Respondent's Exhibit A" for identification.

(Book marked "Respondent's Exhibit A" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER. Now I read you the following from page 15, respondent's exhibit A for identification—

Mr. BOYD. Pardon me just a moment. Has the book been admitted in evidence yet?

Mr. SACHER. No. Do you want it in evidence?

Mr. BOYD. I certainly do.

Mr. SACHER. I will offer in evidence the following pages, Mr. Inspector. I will offer in evidence pages 115 and 117 of respondent's exhibit A for identification. Would you like to see it, Mr. Boyd?

Mr. BOYD. Yes, I would.

(Mr. Sacher hands book to Mr. Boyd.)

Mr. BOYD. I suggest that the book be admitted in its entirety and reference be made to portions.

Mr. SACHER. No, Mr. Boyd. As the good lawyer that you are, you know that the only propriety of the offering of anything in evidence is that it is material and relevant to the inquiry being made. I [p. 150] am interrogating him only in regard to matters which are on pages 115 and 117. That is the extent of the thing which I admit. And I might say parenthetically, Mr. Inspector, that there is no obligation on me even to offer that much. You always have a right to ask a witness, "Did you ever write so and so and so"; isn't that so?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SACHER. Then I withdraw my offer and ask the witness the following.

By Mr. SACHER:

I invite your attention to the following language at page 115: "It was at that time that I met Margaret, and we became husband and wife."

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, there is a long-distance call out here for Mr. Boyd. If we can just have a short recess.

(Whereupon a 10-minute recess was taken.)

By Mr. SACHER:

The WITNESS. May I explain that to you?

Q. Just wait a minute. You gave nobody any mercy. Santo couldn't ask you for mercy. Just answer the question.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed. What is the question?

[P. 151] By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Isn't it a fact that you wrote as follows at page 115: "It was at that time that I met Margaret and we became husband and wife. Little did we suspect then, when our views of life, and more or less almost mocked at Catholicism, that her understanding and intelligence would help us back to Bethlehem and Rome. A Unitarian educated on a godless philosophy at the University of Pittsburgh, and in the Freudian Psychoanalytic School for Social Work, Margaret had no knowledge of Catholic history or philosophy. But hers was a warm heart and a long-suffering patience. It was on the very day that I was arrested at Toledo in the Autolite strike that our first daughter, Julia, was born prematurely in New York.

"After her came Josephine, and then Justin. They were not reared in the knowledge of the church and God, but had a respect for the beliefs of their neighbors that testified to an effort at education of the heart."

I will ask you if you wrote that.

A. I did, but I want to explain it.

Mr. SACHER. Now, Mr. Inspector—

Inspector PHELAN. I am holding the hearing, Counselor.

Mr. SACHER. What are you doing? Are you acting as judge or prosecutor here? I want an [p. 152] opportunity to run my examination as I see fit. And, if this witness wants to make any explanations, he can do it afterward, when he is examined on redirect. At this moment I have had an impossible examination, and I will not tolerate it, Mr. Inspector, that you or anybody else should disrupt this cross-examination.

Inspector PHELAN. Just a moment. I think any witness is entitled, after he answers your question—

Mr. SACHER. I am not through. That is a foundation for another question. I want to get the date that he refers to when he says, "It was at that time that I met Margaret and we became husband and wife." Am I entitled to ask that?

Inspector PHELAN. Put your next question.

Mr. SACHER. All right.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I ask you what is the time that you refer to when you say here, "It was at that time that I met Margaret and we became husband and wife"? What year was that?—A. That was in 1933, but we were not married technically.

Q. Wait a minute. Next question, who is Gizella I. Budenz?—A. She was my first wife. Divorced woman.

[P. 153] Q. When were you married to Gizella Budenz?—A. Well, I don't remember the exact year any more.

Q. Well, was it in 1916?—A. When I lived in St. Louis, Mo.

Q. Was it in 1916?—A. We were married in Terra Haute, Ind.

Q. Well, I asked you before whether you ever were in Terra Haute, Ind. and you said "No."—A. You said, didn't I live there.

Q. Didn't you live there when you married her in Terre Haute, Ind.?—A. No.

Q. What year did you marry her in Terre Haute?—A. It was a Gretna Green wedding.

Q. What is that?—A. A Gretna Green wedding. We went to Terre Haute. You could do that and—

Q. What happened? What did you do? Did you seduce her, or something?

Mr. BOYD. I ask that these remarks be stricken from the record.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I am just asking you questions, and you just answer them. Was it in 1918 that you married Gizella?—A. Yes; it was.

Q. [P. 154] And did you remain married to Gizella until she obtained a divorce from you on the ground that you deserted her and failed to support her in the year 1938?—A. On the technical grounds of desertion—

Q. Technical, my eye. Were you divorced by her on the grounds of desertion in the year 1938?—A. Counsel is familiar with the legal procedure.

Q. Yes, or no? I ask you was it in the year 1938 that she divorced you?—A. Yes, indeed.

Q. And it was from 1916 to 1938 that you remained in a state of marriage with Gizella Budenz; is that right?—A. I was separated from her for 7 years. I was separated from her for 7 years, from 1931 on.

Q. Now, look, let's not go into what you were separated from her. You were married to her and you remained married to her until you were divorced from her, weren't you?—A. I was separated from her.

Mr. SACHER. I move to strike it out as not responsive. Mr. Inspector, I ask the witness be directed to testify as to whether he was married to Gizella until 1938.

The WITNESS. Technically, I was. For 7 [p. 155] years.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Marriage. The holy sacrament is a technicality to you, isn't it, Mr. Budenz?—A. Not since I became a Catholic. It was when I was a Communist.

Q. Well, you took up with Margaret before you became a Communist, didn't you?—A. That's right.

Q. You testified that it was in 1933 that you took up with Margaret; isn't that right?—A. But I was—

Q. Answer my question. Isn't it a fact that you took up with Margaret in 1933?—A. That's right.

Q. That was 2 years before, according to your testimony, you became a member of the Communist Party; is that right?—A. This is a matter—

Q. Is that right, or is it not?

Mr. BOYD. Mr. inspector, I think the attorney here should allow the man an opportunity to answer the question.

Inspector PHELAN. Give him an opportunity to answer.

[P. 156] Mr. SACHER. He will have all the opportunity in the world. It isn't lack of opportunity that is bothering this poor man now.

Inspector PHELAN. Answer the counsel's question.

Mr. SACHER. Wait a minute, Mr. Examiner.

Inspector PHELAN. Answer the counsel's question. If you have anything else to say, you will be given a later opportunity in the course of the questioning. And I will ask counsel.

The WITNESS. That is right. I was already working with the Communists, though.

Mr. SACHER. If it please the examiner, I now offer in evidence a certified copy of the petition for divorce of Gizella I. Budenz, together with the decree nisi of the Court of Chancery of the State of New Jersey, index No. 116-133, in the action entitled "Gizella I. Budenz, petitioner, and Louis Francis Budenz," and I also offer in evidence the final decree of divorce issued by the court of chancery on the 13th day of July 1938 in the action entitled "Gizella I. Budenz against Louis Francis Budenz." And in particular I invite Your Honor's attention to certain allegations which I will refer to after you [p. 157] have received them in evidence. I offer these in the following order as respondent's exhibits A, B, C, and D, respectively. The petition for divorce will be A; the decree nisi will be B; and the final decree will be C. Would you like to see them, Mr. Boyd?

Mr. BOYD. Yes, I would.

(Mr. Sacher hands papers to Mr. Boyd.)

(Petition for divorce, decree nisi, and the final decree marked "Respondent's Exhibits A, B, and C," respectively, and received in evidence as of this date.)

Inspector PHELAN. These documents will be admitted and are so marked.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Now, Mr. Budenz, Gizella says here in paragraph 1 of her petition, respondent's exhibit A: "Petitioner was lawfully married to her present husband, Louis Francis Budenz, the defendant in this suit, on December 23, 1916, in the city of Terre Haute and State of Indiana." Is that statement true?—A. That's correct.

Q. She says in the second paragraph: "There were no children born of the marriage; but in 1917, in St. Louis, Mo., petitioner and defendant adopted a female child named Louise. Said adopted daughter is now 20 years of age and is married." Was that statement true?—[P. 158] A. That is correct.

Q. In item 3 she says: "Petitioner and defendant lived together as husband and wife from the date of the marriage aforesaid continued until September 1, 1930." Is that statement correct?—A. That's correct.

Q. And in paragraph 4 she says: "On September 1, 1930, petitioner and defendant were living together as husband and wife at 1330 Bryant Street in the city of Rahway, county of Union, and State of New Jersey." Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Q. And then in paragraph 5 she says: "On September 1, 1930, defendant deserted petitioner and has, ever since that date and for more than 2 years last past, and down to the date hereof willfully, continued, and obstinately deserted petitioner, and during said entire period—namely, from September 1, 1930, down to the date of the commencement of this action—defendant has willfully, continued, and obstinately refused to live with the petitioner as husband and wife and has during said entire period lived and still does live willfully, continued, and obstinately separate and apart from petitioner." Was that statement correct?—A. That is correct.

[P. 159] Q. And in paragraph 6, "at the date of the commencement of the desertion afore-mentioned, petitioner and defendant were both bona fide residents of the State of New Jersey." Was that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then in paragraph 9 she says: "Petitioner knows that defendant resides at apartment 22, 328 East Fifteenth Street, in the city of New York, county of New York, and State of New York." Did you live at that address at the time of this petition, which was on or about August 1936?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. Were you living at that address at that time with Margaret?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before that time, you had lived in Williamsburg; is that right?—A. Yes, sir. Separately entirely from my first wife. From 1930.

Q. I did not imagine you were operating a harem. One at a time is enough.

Mr. SACHER. Mr. Faulli suggests that—I withdraw that. Mr. Faulli has withdrawn that.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Did you ever go through any civil ceremony of marriage with your present wife, Margaret?—A. Yes, sir.

[P. 160] Q. When did you go through that ceremony?—A. Oh, civil?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, I was married by Monsignor Sheen in St. Patrick's Cathedral. That was civil and religious too. There was a civil filing in the city of Yonkers, where I live.

Q. Did you have to procure a certified copy of the decree of divorce from your first wife, Gizella?—A. Well, that I don't know.

Q. Who attended to that for you, Monsignor Sheen?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Budenz, you will recall that the final decree of the court declared as follows—and I read from respondent's exhibit C:

"The court having in this cause by a decree nisi, bearing date and entered on the 12th day of April A. D. 1938, ordered, adjudged and decreed that the petitioner, Cizella I. Budenz, and the defendant, Louis Francis Budenz, be divorced from the bonds of matrimony for the cause of desertion, unless sufficient cause be shown to the court why said decree should not be made absolute within 3 months from the date thereof; and application being now made to the court by the petitioner for an order that said decree nisi be made absolute and that a final [p. 161] and absolute decree be entered; and no cause to the contrary being shown or appearing:

"It is thereupon, on this 13th day of July A. D. 1938, by His Honor, Luther A. Campbell, chancellor of the State of New Jersey, by virtue of the power and authority of this court, and of the acts of the legislature in such case made and provided, doth hereby order, adjudge, and decree that the said decree nisi be made and become absolute, and that the said defendant, Louis Francis Budenz, are divorced from the bonds of matrimony for the cause aforesaid and the marriage between the said petitioner and the said defendant is hereby dissolved accordingly, and the said parties and each of them are and is hereby freed and discharged from the obligations thereof."

Do you remember that language in the final decree of divorce?

A. Well, I don't remember all the language, but I remember that there was a final decree of divorce.

Q. And that was the only decree of divorce, the one that I have just read, and which is respondent's exhibit C, that was ever made by any court of competent jurisdiction in this country or anywhere else, dissolving the bonds of matrimony between you, Louis Francis Budenz, and your wife [p. 162], Cizella I. Budenz; is that correct?—A. Well, I don't know. That is my impression. I don't know all the papers that were served at that time. I know in 1938 I was granted a final divorce in New Jersey.

Q. That is the only one; you were not granted it, you did not apply for it. Your wife got it.—A. I mean she was granted it.

Q. That is the only divorce you know of between you and Cizella; is that right?—A. Yes; that is the only one I know of. If that is the one, I don't know that that is the one that you are quoting from. In 1938 she was given a final decree of divorce on the basis of my having not lived with her for 7 or 8 years.

Mr. SACHER. May I ask for a short recess at this time?

Inspector PHELAN. Granted. Five minutes.

(Whereupon a 5-minute recess was taken.)

Mr. SACHER. Mr. Inspector, at this juncture I wish to point out that, on the basis of the statements contained at page 115 of the book of this witness, in which he states that he and his present wife became husband and wife in 1933, as testified to here on the stand, and in view of the fact that [p. 163] at the time that he and Margaret became husband and wife he had another wife, he had a wife living, I respectfully submit to you that under the provisions of section 340 of the penal law of the State of New York, which reads as follows: "A person who, having a husband or wife living, marries another person, is guilty of bigamy, and is punishable by imprisonment in a penitentiary or State prison for not more than 5 years."

In that connection, Mr. Inspector, I call to your attention the case of Hayes against the People, in 25 New York 390, in which the court sustained a conviction in a case where the second marriage, as in the case of this witness, was a nonceremonial marriage. In these circumstances, Mr. Inspector, I respectfully submit that the respondent in this case has established, out of the mouth of this witness himself, that he is a bigamist, a criminal. And on that ground I respectfully request that all of the testimony given by this bigamist be stricken from the record.

Inspector PHELAN. Denied.

Mr. SACHER. If it please the inspector, in order to proceed with other cross-examination of the witness, it will be necessary for us to examine these 10 to 15 exhibits that were introduced. And [p. 164] therefore, with your permission, I would suggest that we defer this further examination, cross-examination of the witness, until such time as we have had an opportunity to go over the material for the purposes of cross-examination.

Inspector PHELAN. I think that is a fair request. When would you suggest that we call and finish this witness?

Mr. SACHER. We might just as well at this time discuss the question of an adjournment. Tomorrow is Saturday, and I don't work on Saturday. Monday and Tuesday are the high holy days, which I shall observe, so that I cannot be in attendance on those days. I will, however, use some of the intervening time to examine those exhibits, and I shall be happy to be ready to proceed with this witness on Wednesday morning, so you need have no delay whatever in completing his examination.

Inspector PHELAN. In view of the fact that we won't convene again until Wednesday, would it not be possible to continue on Saturday, thus giving us an extra day?

Mr. SACHER. I would love to do that, but ever since Hitler came to power, I, as a Jew, insist on maintaining my Sabbath, just as other people maintain [p. 165] theirs, and I would therefore like to observe the Sabbath tomorrow.

Inspector PHELAN. In view of counsel's statement, we will not consider a Saturday hearing. It was merely a suggestion that we might conserve time.

Is there any further proceeding that we could take today in order to take advantage of the hour that remains?

Mr. SACHER. I don't know. Maybe Mr. Fanelli has some motions.

Mr. BOYD. Is that the only phase of cross-examination that you intend to pursue? In other words, is there some other phase that you could take up today?

Mr. SACHER. Mr. Boyd, I don't like to appeal for consideration on this ground, but if you have observed the pace at which I have been going in the last 40 minutes, I am not in condition to take up any further cross-examination. So I would appreciate it if you wouldn't press on my going on any other matter. I may have them on Wednesday.

Inspector PHELAN. Is there any objection to excusing this witness until Wednesday and calling your next witness now?

[P. 166] Mr. BOYD. Well, there is only an hour before an adjournment now. I think perhaps that this would be as good a time as any to adjourn.

Inspector PHELAN. All right. The hearing is adjourned until next Wednesday morning, at the hour of 10:30 a. m.

(Whereupon at 3:05 p. m. an adjournment was taken until Wednesday, September 17, 1947, at 10:30 a. m.)

MAURICE A. ROBERTS,

For the Department of Immigration.

HARRY SACHER, and

JOSEPH A. FANELLI,

For the Respondent.

LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ, called as a witness on behalf of the Government, having previously duly been sworn, resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Cross examination (continued) by Mr. SACHER:

Inspector PHELAN. Respondent is present and all the counsel are present. Proceed.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Did you work for the American Federation of Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers at any time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what years did you work for them?—A. Well, I do not remember exactly, but it was in 1928, for example, 1929.

Q. How about the year 1930, Mr. Budenz?—[P. 169] A. 1930?

Q. Yes, how about 1930?—A. Well, I went with the Conference of Progressive Labor Action.

Q. Don't you remember a strike in the year 1930 against the Kramer Hosiery Mills in Nazareth, Pa.?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. What year was that?—A. 1929.

Q. Are you sure it was 1929?—A. Well, it began then. It have have extended over until 1930.

Q. What is your best recollection as to whether you were still there in 1930?—A. Perhaps in the early part of 1930 I may have been, although I am not quite clear because I went with the Conference for Progressive Labor Action about that time.

Q. Did you ever stop at the Hotel Easton in Easton, Pa., in the year 1930?—A. Well, I don't recall.

Q. You mean to tell us that you don't remember whether you were in the Hotel Easton in 1930?—A. I was in 1929, but I am not sure in 1930.

Q. You are not sure about 1930?—[P. 170] A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any reason why the year 1930 is blocked from your memory at this time, Mr. Budenz?—A. No, sir.

Q. None at all?—A. Except that I am not quite certain about my connection with the Conference for Progressive Labor Action.

Q. Suppose I show you this letter on the stationery of the Hotel Easton in Easton, Pa., bearing date of May 14, 1930, and ask you whether you sent that letter to anybody from that hotel on that date [handing to witness]?—A. I refuse to answer that question.

Q. On what ground do you refuse to answer, Mr. Budenz?—A. First of all, this is not a smear investigation. Secondly, it violates my constitutional rights.

Q. Which of your constitutional rights does it violate?

Mr. BOYD. If the presiding inspector please, I do not see that this line of questioning is germane in the issues here involved.

Inspector PHELAN. Well, I assume that it is preliminary.

Mr. SACHER. It is preliminary to establishing a number of things.

[P. 171] Inspector PHELAN. The witness, if he declines to answer, will have to state the grounds as counsel has asked.

The WITNESS. Well, counsel is trying to show—do you mean to say what offense I committed?

Inspector PHELAN. Well, let me see if I may clarify it, and counsel will correct me if I am wrong.

The only ground a witness may refuse to answer a question on, is on the ground that it may incriminate him. Now, do I understand that it is your desire to refuse to answer that question on that ground?

The WITNESS. It is.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. In other words, Mr. Budenz, you refuse to answer whether you signed this letter on the ground that it may tend to incriminate you; is that right?—A. That is right?

Mr. SACHER. I ask that it be marked for identification, please.

Inspector PHELAN. What is the next exhibit in order?

(Letter dated May 14, 1930, marked "Respondent's Exhibit D" for identification as of this date.)

[P. 173] Mr. BOYD. May I see the document, please?

Mr. SACHER. Shall I wait until you have read it, Mr. Boyd?

Mr. BOYD. Please.

Mr. SACHER. I would just like to say, Mr. Inspector, that I am extending an unusual courtesy to counsel for the other side when I permit them to look at a paper that is not in evidence; so I expect some reciprocity.

Mr. BOYD. You anticipate offering it in evidence, do you not? That is the usual custom.

Mr. SACHER. No; I haven't made an offer. You are entitled to look at it when I make the offer. Mr. Budenz will tell you that. He is a lawyer.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. You are a lawyer, aren't you?—A. I was educated as one; yes.

Q. What do you mean you were educated as one? As a matter of fact, you were graduated from a law school?—A. That is correct.

Q. What was the name of the school, Indianapolis Law School?—A. That is right.

Q. And how long ago was that?—[P. 173] A. That was 25 years ago. Just a moment, 35 years ago.

Q. Did you ever know a girl by the name of Louise Gahen?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you get to know her in the year 1930 while you were at the Easton Hotel?—A. I refuse to answer that.

Q. On what ground do you refuse to answer that?—A. It may incriminate me.

Q. Is that what you learned in law school? Did you learn that in law school?

Mr. BOYD. This is not proper examination.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Or were you told by counsel here today?—A. I was not told by counsel anything on this matter.

Q. Where did you learn that you have the right to testify on the ground that an answer to my question may tend to incriminate you?—A. Because I see that a smear is being developed here.

Q. Well, you are not objecting on the ground that it is a smear. You are objecting on the ground that that it may expose you to criminal penalties, aren't you? Isn't [p. 174] that the ground of your objection, that an answer may expose you to criminal prosecution and conviction?—Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't that the ground?—A. May I have the question again?

Q. Isn't the answer yes?—A. That is right.

Q. Would you care to tell the inspector which State or Federal statutes you are afraid you will be incriminated under if you testify?—A. Well, that I am here to state.

Mr. BOYD. I object to the question, if you please. After all this man is not qualifying as an expert in law.

Inspector PHELAN. I think counsel, that is calling for a conclusion.

Mr. SACHER. I think if I may briefly say this, Mr. Inspector, because I, like yourself, am anxious to move ahead, but I believe that while a witness may not be obliged to disclose the facts in his answer on the basis of which a criminal prosecution might take place, I do believe that in order that the court or administrative agent may determine whether the claim is made in good faith, that a witness may be required to state under what [p. 175] law or statutes he fears exposure to criminal prosecution and conviction.

Mr. PHELAN. I think counsel is correct on that. The mere assertion of a constitutional privilege without stating some basis is not in and of itself sufficient.

Mr. BOYD. I think the question calls for conclusion on the part of the witness and I object to the question on that ground.

Inspector PHELAN. Possibly counsel could rephrase the question.

Mr. SACHER. Well, Mr. Inspector, I think that a violation of one law is as bad as another, as Epictitus used to say, and perhaps it is of no great consequence; so I won't press the inquiry.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Did you ever spend any time with Louise Gahen in the State of Connecticut, specifically in the city of Stamford and more specifically in the year 1930?—A. I refuse to answer that on the same grounds.

Q. On what grounds is that, that you will incriminate yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. I show you this envelope and ask you whether this [p. 176] is your handwriting on that envelope [handing to witness]?—A. I am not sure. It looks like it.

Q. You do not deny that it is your writing?—A. I do not; no.

Mr. SACHER. I offer it in evidence.

(Envelope marked "Respondent's Exhibit E" and received in evidence as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. On this Respondent's Exhibit E, which bears a photograph of the Hotel Easton with the name Hotel Easton and the name of Easton, Pa., appear the following words in your handwriting: "In case of accident to Budenz, these belong to Miss Louise Gahen." Is that right?—A. That is correct.

Q. You therefore knew Miss Gahen, didn't you?—A. Oh, yes; I said I knew her. I said that originally, sir.

Q. And do you know what was contained in this envelope, Respondent's Exhibit E, when you said, "in case of accident to Budenz, these belong to Miss Louise Gahen"; do you know what was in Respondent's Exhibit E?—A. Well, now, let's see. I don't recall definitely now.

[P. 177] Q. Let us see if we can refresh your recollection. I show you these papers and I ask you to be good enough to preserve them in the order in which they appear here, and ask you to read all these letters from Louise to you and tell me whether that refreshes your recollection as to what was in this envelope, Respondent's Exhibit E?—A. I will have to refuse to answer this question.

Q. On what ground?—A. On the ground that it would tend to incriminate me.

Q. Do you think, Mr. Budenz, there is anything I can ask you that you won't refuse to answer on the ground that it will incriminate you?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," as the Psalmist says. So let us take these one by one. Did you ever stop at the Great Northern Hotel in the city of New York in the year 1930?—A. Well, I may have. I don't recall.

Q. You do not deny it, do you?—A. No; I don't deny it. I don't recall it.

Q. Let me show you a letter and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection as to whether you did stay in the Great Northern Hotel [handing witness]?—A. [Witness looking at letter].

[P. 178] Q. I show you this paper and I ask you to read it, and tell us whether that letter from Louise refreshes your recollection as to whether you were in the Great Northern Hotel at that time?—A. No; it doesn't.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that this be marked for identification, please.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit F" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Can you tell the inspector how many times in the last 17 years you spent a night in the Great Northern Hotel right here at 109-121 West Fifty-sixth Street in New York City? How many times were you there in the last 17 years?—A. Well, I can't recall being there at all, to tell you the truth. I can't recall it.

Q. You cannot recall it?—A. No.

Q. But you won't deny it?—A. No; I can't deny it.

Mr. BOYD. If the Court please, this line of questioning is argumentative. The witness has answered the question.

The WITNESS. I can't recall ever having been [p. 179] in the Great Northern Hotel. I may have been and I may not.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Mr. Budenz, did you ever visit the city of Bernardsville?—A. I don't know where that is.

Q. A little distance away from Easton?—A. Yes; I know where it is.

Q. You are familiar with the name Bernardsville?—A. I am indeed, yes.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, may I interrupt? I assume that you propose to connect this questioning up with the issues of the case.

Mr. SACHER. Oh, sure. I tell you frankly that this is all directed ultimately to establishing once again that this man has committed crimes under the Federal laws with a view to impeaching his credibility. That is what this is heading for. That is what my evidence is directed to here and I shall, of course, demand a full opportunity, an adequate opportunity in any event to accomplish that purpose.

Inspector PHELAN. Proceed.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. You are also familiar with the name of a sculptor by the name of George Barnard; is that right?—[p. 180] A. No; I am not.

Q. Never heard of George Barnard, the sculptor?—A. Except in a general way.

Q. Of course, you knew his name back in 1930, didn't you?—A. I think not; no. I don't recall his name at all. I mean, I don't recall any intimate knowledge of his name.

Q. Well, but you were, according to your book, anyway, you were quite a literate person, interested in literature, the arts, etc., weren't you?—A. To a degree, but I don't know everyone who is engaged in this business.

Q. But George Barnard was an outstanding American sculptor, wasn't he?—
A. It doesn't recall to my mind anything specific. This is the first time that he has been called to my attention in any specific way. I may have known it in a casual way, but not in a specific way.

Q. Do you recall whether you registered in the Great Northern Hotel under the name of Bernard, second name?—A. I refuse to answer that.

Q. On what ground do you refuse to answer that?—A. That it may tend to incriminate me.

Q. Do you remember an occasion when you told your [p. 181] wife, Gizella, that you had registered at the Great Northern Hotel with Louise Gahen and that you had registered under the name of Bernard because you got the idea from the name Bernardsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or, did you ever tell her that you got the idea from the name of George Bernard, the sculptor?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't recall ever telling Gizella that?—A. No, I most decidedly did not.

Q. But you did spend time with Louise at the Great Northern; isn't that right?—A. I refuse to answer that question.

Q. Did you spend time with Louise in Stamford, Conn.?—A. I refuse to answer that.

Q. As the ground of your refusal to answer that you transported her across State lines for immoral purposes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Which constitutes a violation of Federal law?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the grounds?—A. No, sir; that is not the ground.

Q. What is the ground, then? Do you refuse to [p. 182] answer that, too?—
A. Well, I am being accused of living with a person in a hotel and I think that that is technically an accusation that one can refuse to answer.

Q. How about the crossing of the State lines, does that bother you at all, transporting a woman across State lines for immoral purposes?—A. No, sir.

Q. What crime do you claim you committed or you may be charged with having committed by reason of spending the night in a hotel with a woman, what crime, if not under the Federal statute for immoral transportation across State lines?—A. Well, in various States there are various statutes on subjects of that character.

Q. Of what character? Do you mean adultery, fornication; what do you mean?—A. One or the other, and besides that, counselor, this is a very small piece of business you are engaging in.

Q. You mean that white slavery is a small piece of business to you; is that what you are saying? Is white slavery in your opinion a small piece of business?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is the Mann Act a small piece of business?—[P. 183] A. No, sir.

Q. Do you regard the violation of the Mann Act as a small piece of business?—
A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Would you regard a violator of the Mann Act as a person unworthy of belief?

Mr. BOYD. If the Court please, I object to that question.

Inspector PHELAN. Sustained.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you Respondent's Exhibit F and ask you whether you received this letter from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. I do not recall.

Q. Do you recall whether the letter was addressed to you?—A. I do not.

Q. You mean the sunny waters, the white sand and sky where a few white clouds—

Mr. BOYD. Just a minute. I object.

Mr. SACHER. Wait a minute. I am not reading from the letter. I am just refreshing my recollection. I am not referring to the contents of a paper now. I am asking him apart from the paper.

[P. 184] Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, I would like to seek some authority that a witness may be impeached by evidence of acts which might be criminal where they are not connected up directly with the issues of the case and where there hasn't been any conviction. I am somewhat disturbed over that.

Mr. SACHER. If you wish to call a recess for an hour, I will go back to my office and dig up 100 authorities, not one. As an elementary principle of law, when any witness offers himself for testimony, you may contradict that witness in one of a number of ways: One, by prior inconsistent statements; two, by evidence from the witness himself of specific acts of conduct which would constitute either crimes or immoral conduct, not only crimes but immoral conduct, and that testimony is confined to eliciting from the witness, himself—in other words, as I said the other day, it would be utterly incompetent to call third parties to testify to these specific acts; and the third method is by proof of conviction of crime.

Now, I am pursuing the second method here.

INSPECTOR PHELAX. As to the limits of that second method, I am a little doubtful. As to the limits of that second method I am doubtful that we aren't going a little too far afield in this instance.

[P. 185] However, proceed for the present.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and I ask you to read it very carefully and tell me whether you received this one from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. On what ground do you refuse to answer that?—A. It may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that this be marked for identification.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit G" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I ask you to look at this letter and tell me whether you received that from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same answer.

Q. Well, you haven't read it yet. You don't know whether it will tend to incriminate you or not. Maybe it says something nice about you for once.—A. Same answer.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that that be marked for identification.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit H" for identification as of this date.)

[P. 186] By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Did you know a doctor by the name of Dr. Kenworthy?—A. No, sir.

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether it refreshes your recollection as to who Dr. Kenworthy was [handing to witness]?—A. No; it doesn't.

Q. Was he an abortionist?

Mr. BOYD. I object to this line of questioning.

A. I have no idea, sir.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Did you receive this letter from Louise Gahen?—A. I refuse to answer that.

Q. On the ground that it will incriminate you? Is that it?—A. That's right.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that this be marked for identification.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit I" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received this one from Louise Gahen? Read it before you say it will incriminate you [handing to witness].—A. I refuse to answer.

[P. 187] Q. On the ground it will incriminate you?—A. Yes; that it may.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that this be marked for identification, please?

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit J" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Now I ask you to read this one and tell us whether you received this one from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same answer.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that it be marked for identification.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit K" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this one. I do not think you will say that that incriminates you?—A. Same grounds.

Q. You refuse on the grounds that it will incriminate you?—A. Yes.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that this be marked for identification.

(Letter consisting of two pages marked "Respondent's Exhibit L" for identification as of this date.)

[P. 188] By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received that from Louise Gahen.—A. These are letters generally presented in a divorce proceeding.

Q. Well, you would know about that. You have gone through that. I wouldn't. Just tell us whether you received that, Mr. Budenz.

Mr. BOYD. I object to remarks on the part of counsel and ask that they be stricken.

Mr. SACHER. I think they were as valid as the witness' observation.

Inspector PHELAN. He is answering the observation of the witness, counsel.

The WITNESS. Yes; I was married to a divorced woman originally.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. We all know about that, but how about this letter? That is what we do not know about and that is what we would like you to tell us. Did you get that letter from Louise Gahen?—A. Same answer.

Q. That is, you refuse to testify on the ground it may tend to incriminate you?—A. That is correct.

[P. 189] Mr. SACHER. May I have this letter marked for identification? (Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit M" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I now show you another epistle and ask you whether you received this from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same answer.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that it be marked for identification, please.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit N" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received that from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same answer, for the same reason.

Q. That is, you refuse to testify on the ground that it may tend to incriminate you; is that it?—A. Yes.

Mr. SACHER. Will you be kind enough, Mr. Inspector, to mark this for identification?

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit O" for identification as of this date.)

[P. 190] By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received that from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same objection.

Mr. SACHER. I ask the inspector to mark that please.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit P" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received that from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same answer.

Mr. SACHER. I ask to have it marked for identification, please.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit Q" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received this from Louise Gahen [handing to witness]?—A. Same reply.

Mr. SACHER. Now, if it please the inspector, I respectfully request that the inspector read this proposed exhibit, and I ask for the judgment of the inspector as to whether the objection of the witness is well founded, that that letter may tend to incriminate him?

[P. 191] (Inspector reads letter.)

The WITNESS. May I give my ground, inspector?

Inspector PHELAN. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. The counsel for the respondent is endeavoring to show a continuous relationship, one letter with another, and this letter indicates that relationship is continued, as explained by other letters.

Mr. SACHER. And the man has admitted that he knew Gahen. There is no denial of that; so that a mere communication from her to him would not tend to incriminate him, assuming that the contents of the letter do not contain anything on the basis of which a prosecution could be based. Of course, I do want to say that, if this letter goes in, I shall offer all the other letters by providing that the handwriting in the letters is the same.

Inspector PHELAN. It seems to me that it is the witness' privilege to object to all the letters on constitutional grounds, if it exists. Of course, as he has indicated, it is a connected course of conduct, I assume. I do not think that a single letter could be taken out of the series and accepted if the others are kept out on the ground that he asserts,

Mr. SACHER. Well, he is the best judge as to [p. 192] whether he committed the crime, I guess, at this juncture.

Mr. BOYD. I ask that the remarks of counsel be stricken from the record.

Mr. SACHER. I am just stating what the Supreme Court of the United States has said.

Mr. BOYD. I still ask the remarks be stricken from the record.

Inspector PHELAN. They may go out.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit R" for identification as of this date.)

The WITNESS. It is my constitutional privilege to make this objection. That has been made many times by many people.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this letter and ask you whether you received this one from Louise Gahen [handing witness]?—A. Same answer.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that it be marked for identification.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit S" for identification as of this date.)

Inspector PHELAN, Counsel, I am reserving [p. 193] a ruling on this entire course of questioning. I would like to hear it briefly argued after the noon recess—

Mr. SACHER. You will have to give me an extra bit of time.

Inspector PHELAN. On the point that I spoke of as to whether and to what extent a witness can be impeached even out of his own mouth with regard to the specific occurrences.

Mr. SACHER. Oh, I will be glad to argue that.

Inspector PHELAN. Incidentally, at the same time I would like to hear from counsel for the Government on the same point.

Mr. BOYD. We will be glad to do so, Mr. Inspector.

Mr. SACHER. Will you please mark that?

Inspector PHELAN. It is marked.

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I ask that it be marked for identification.

[P. 194] (Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit T" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. I show you this one and ask whether you received that from Louise Gahen [handing to witness].—A. Same answer.

Mr. SACHER. I ask that that be marked for identification.

Inspector PHELAN. That will be U.

(Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit U" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. Do you recall being arrested in the city of Springfield, Ill., in October 1933?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not arrested in that city?—A. No, sir.

Q. Springfield, Ill.?—A. No.

Q. You had an adopted daughter by the name of Louise, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was she with you in Springfield, Ill., in October 1933?—A. I believe she was. I think she was.

[P. 195] Q. You were there at the time, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you this letter contained in an envelope bearing date October 7, 1933, and ask you whether this refreshes your recollection as to whether you were arrested in the city of Springfield, Ill. [handing to witness], in October 1933?—A. I was not arrested in the city of Springfield, Ill., in October 1933.

Q. In what city were you arrested?—A. On what charge? I have been in the labor movement. You know that.

Q. I am not asking you about the labor movement. These are extracurricular activities we are asking you about now.—A. The fact of the matter is, well, certainly proved by a number of your comrades, Counsel.

Mr. SACHER. I move that the witness be admonished.

Inspector PHELAN. That may go out. Please answer the question.

The WITNESS. The point of the matter is that I was not arrested in the city of Springfield, Ill., at any time.

By Mr. SACHER:

[P. 196] Q. Were you arrested on a morals charge anywhere in Illinois in 1933?—A. No, sir; I was not, at any time.

Q. That letter doesn't refresh your recollection at all?—A. I was not arrested on any such charge.

Q. What was the situation in regard to the statements made by your daughter in this letter, can you tell the Inspector? I want to call one or two sentences to your attention. Look at this down here and tell the inspector what it was about [indicating].—A. I refuse to answer that.

Q. On what ground?—A. Same ground.

Q. That it will incriminate you?—A. Yes.

Q. This is 3 years later after the event referred to with Louise Gahen, isn't it; isn't that right?—A. Right.

Q. So that 3 years later you still refuse to answer things on the ground that it will tend to incriminate you; is that correct?—A. That is correct.

Mr. SACHER. I offer this letter for identification.

[P. 197] (Letter marked "Respondent's Exhibit V" for identification as of this date.)

By Mr. SACHER:

Q. The matter referred to in Respondent's Exhibit V for identification do not relate to Louise; is that right, Louise Gahen; they have no connection with Louise Gahen; is that right?—A. No, no.

Q. As a matter of fact, if you will look at the letter again you will see that Margaret Rogers was with you at the time, the woman that is now your wife; isn't that so?

Mr. BOYD. I object to this line of questioning. No proper foundation.

Mr. SACHER. I am trying to refresh the witness's recollection as to something that he has refused to answer on the ground that it will incriminate him.

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel, I think that is going a little afield. I will sustain the objection.

Mr. SACHER. Exception.

Can we have a recess for a few minutes?

Inspector PHELAN. Yes; we will take a 5- [p. 198] minute recess.

(Whereupon a 5-minute recess was taken.)

Inspector PHELAN. Gentlemen, counsel for respondent has suggested that we recess until 1:30 and then hand up authorities on the point as to whether this questioning is proper, with the thought that we may save time by doing so, if there is no objection on the part of the Government.

Mr. BOYD. No objection on the part of the Government.

Inspector PHELAN. The hearing is recessed until 1:30 p. m.

(Whereupon the hearing was adjourned to 1:30 p. m., September 17, 1948.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

(1:30 p. m., September 17, 1947)

LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Inspector PHELAN. Counsel for respondent and the Government are here. Proceed. I would like to have counsel argue briefly the point that was raised just prior to the recess. I trust counsel can keep the argument down to 5 minutes for each side.

Mr. SACHER. Mr. Fanelli will present the argument.

Inspector PHELAN. And the argument will not be recorded in the record.

(There was a discussion off the record on the objection of Mr. Boyd.)

Inspector PHELAN. The objection is overruled. You may have an exception.

Mr. BOYD. Exception.

(Whereupon a 15-minute recess was taken.)

Inspector PHELAN. The respondent and all counsel are present. Proceed.

Mr. SACHER. In regard to the witness, Budenz, I have one inquiry I am not prepared to make at this moment. If it is agreeable to the Presiding Inspector, I will be glad to call Mr. Boyd this evening and let him know whether I will want Mr. Budenz back tomorrow. I will call you before 6, if you want it so.

[P. 200] Mr. BOYD. I would be agreeable to that but Mr. Budenz has other activities. If at all possible, I would like to have you complete your cross examination today.

Mr. SACHER. If it were possible for me to do it I would love nothing better. But I cannot at this moment. There is a bit of written material in regard to which I have to interrogate him and I haven't got the writing here. And I will call you and let you know later in the day whether I will have it or not. If I don't have it today, then we can let him go.

Mr. BOYD. I understand, then, that the defense has completed their cross-examination with the exception of one item.

Inspector PHELAN. So I understand with the exception of possible questioning on that further item, if counsel decides to do that.

It seems that counsel isn't prepared to go any further anyhow, so that, at the moment, that leaves us in the position of going ahead with some other witness. If later there is any argument or dispute, we will have to argue it or dispose of it as it comes up.

Call your next witness.

Mr. BOYD. I understand that Mr. Budenz is [p. 201] excused at this time?

Inspector PHELAN. Unless he is recalled at some future date.

Mr. SACHER. The point is this: I will know this afternoon whether he is to be recalled or not. I would therefore suggest that, so you can have some continuity in the record, that if I am in a position this afternoon to indicate that I want him back, I will indicate that to Mr. Boyd.

Mr. BOYD. Is there a possibility of calling him this afternoon?

Mr. SACHER. I do not think so, because I doubt if I will have it within an hour.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Budenz will not be available tomorrow morning in any event. At least, he will not be available until tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. SACHER. All right. If this comes, I will be just as happy to have him in the afternoon as in the morning.

Those present were Mr. Baldwin, Judge Leser, Dr. Lovejoy, Mr. Theodore Marburg, Mr. Charles Marburg, Miss Poe, Mr. Porter, and Miss Snow. Mr. Charles Marburg in the chair.

The names of those who had consented to serve on the committee were announced as follows: Dr. Harold N. Arrowsmith, Mr. Rignal W. Baldwin, Mr. George G. Carey, Jr., Mrs. Rufus Gibbs, Dr. W. Stull Holt, Mr. Wallace Lanahan, Dr. Owen Lattimore, Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, Judge Oscar Leser, Dr. Arthur O. Lovejoy, Dr. Kemp Malone, Mr. Charles L. Marburg, Mr. Theodore Marburg, Mr. F. Mr. Charles Marburg announced that Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan had accepted the chairmanship of the National Organization with headquarters at 120 Broadway, New York City. Quoting from a telegram from Mr. R. F. Seton-Harris, executive secretary of the national organization, "Fighting-Funds for Finland, Inc., is now actively forming in each State. Its charter calls for monies and other donations to be outright gifts to the Republic of Finland without restriction for the purchase of armaments and other munitions in defense of Finland * * * all organizing expenses are to be privately underwritten as far as possible, so that funds will go in toto to the Finns." Mr. Seton-Harris also emphasized the importance of speeding up organization plans in order that action could start at once to rush collections to the courageous Finnish people.

Mr. Theodore Marburg presented a statement for the press. A copy is attached to these minutes. A letter written by Mr. Marburg which was to appear in the Morning Sun the following day was also read.

Mr. Charles Marburg announced that Mr. F. Furnival Peard, of the Maryland Trust Co., had consented to receive contributions for Fighting-Funds for Finland, Inc., in Maryland.

Respectfully submitted.

QUOTATIONS FROM OWEN LATTIMORE'S WRITINGS

"The spread of direct Russian control over Asia would be disastrous for the countries of Asia as well as for America and Europe." ("The Situation in Asia," by Owen Lattimore (Little, Brown & Co., 1949). Page 12.)

"No Chinese government can be genuinely independent if it is subject to manipulation by Russia." (Statement signed by Mr. Lattimore together with Senator Flanders, Senator Murray, and Professors Dulles, Fisher and MacNair, December 30, 1946.)

"At the same time, any new departure in United States policy in Asia must be proof against the accusation of 'appeasing' Communism as a doctrine or Russia as a state." (Article in "The Atlantic Monthly," January 1950, by Owen Lattimore.)

"Those of us who have never been Marxists have many straightforward disagreements with the Marxists." (Book Review in the "New York Herald Tribune" by Owen Lattimore, November 30, 1947.)

"United States policy should aim to increase the ability of countries in Asia to do without Russia, by encouraging a steady improvement of the three-way economic relationship between Asia, Europe, and America, including the resumption of the supply of raw materials from Asia, the sale of Europe's manufactures in Asia, and American financing both of industrialization in Asia and recovery in Europe. The American financing should be undertaken as a sound enterprise in increasing production and consumption, not as a doling out of subsidies to keep the economies of Asia and Europe stagnantly alive." (Article in "The Atlantic Monthly," January 1950, by Owen Lattimore.)

"* * * American policy, to be successful, must operate through the United Nations as much as possible and strengthen the United Nations as much as possible. A two-world system of American allies and satellites, ranged against Russian allies and satellites, is not enough in America's favor and may be too much in Russia's favor. Only by working through the United Nations can the third countries, which are already critically important in Asia and may become important in Europe, be brought closer to the American side than to the Russian side." ("The Situation in Asia" by Owen Lattimore (Little, Brown & Co., 1949) Page 227.)

"The fact is that the American interest, of course and without further discussion, lies in making sure of the minimum expansion of Russian control and influence." (Lecture by Owen Lattimore, Mt. Holyoke College, June 1948.)

"Nationalism is the only bedrock on which a political structure can be built in China—or anywhere in Asia—today. If we are as quick as the Russians and the Communists of Asia are to build on that bedrock, then the new political structures that are being built in China and all over Asia will incorporate many features of capitalism, private enterprise, and political democracy in their third country' architectural design. If the Russians and the Communists continue to keep ahead of us in accepting Asia on its own terms, there will be more socialism in the superstructure." ("The Situation in Asia" by Owen Lattimore (Little, Brown & Co., 1949). Page 180.)

"I do not believe that a spread of Communism anywhere in Asia (or indeed in Europe or America) is either inevitable or desirable. * * * More than that, I believe that the country which most people in Asia would like to imitate and emulate is America rather than Russia." (Article in "China Monthly," December 1945, by Owen Lattimore.)

"What I believe in, and what my whole record shows I believe in, is the spread of democracy, not the spread of Communism." (Article in "China Monthly," December 1945, by Owen Lattimore.)

"[A safe American policy] would guarantee that the Chinese Communists remain in a secondary position, because it would strengthen those Chinese who are opposed to Communism. * * *" (Article in "Virginia Quarterly Review," 1940, by Owen Lattimore.)

"We shall have turned the disadvantage of an Asia that we are not strong enough to control into the advantage of an Asia strong enough to refuse to be controlled by Russia. We shall have given a fresh impetus to both capitalism and political democracy." ("The Situation in Asia" by Owen Lattimore (Little, Brown & Co., 1949). Page 237.)

"The fact is that my comments and interpretations have always been so independent that I have in my time been criticized by Chinese, Japanese, Germans, Russians, and Mongols, as well as by intemperate American writers. * * * The criticisms run all the way from calling me an arch-imperialist to calling me a Red." (Article in "China Monthly," December 1945, by Owen Lattimore.)

"A great part of Asia's hopes, however, will be fulfilled, and should be fulfilled with American cooperation. We have everything to gain by being on the side of hope." ("The Situation in Asia" by Owen Lattimore (Little, Brown & Co., 1949). Page 238.)

"Our cardinal need there is a United China, carried forward on a current of orderly reforms. There is no need for violent revolution; but, unless the current of orderly reforms is given a free channel, there will be violent revolution. It would be a tragic folly, and the culminating folly of two decades, if American vacillation and failure to support the patriots in China—the hard-pressed guardians of the American stake in evolutionary democratic progress—should let loose defeatism, civil war and revolution. America has no time to lose. We must have a policy that does not limit us to defending the possessions of the democracies, but pledges us to support and spread democracy itself." (Article in magazine "Asia," April 1941, by Owen Lattimore. Page 162.)

ATTACKS ON OWEN LATTIMORE IN COMMUNIST PRESS

[From Problems of History of China, April 1949]

VOPROSI ISTORII (QUESTIONS OF HISTORY, 1949)

The proclivity to libel and slander the struggle of the toilers of China in the revolution of 1925-27 is explained not only by the fully understandable hatred of the learned lackeys of imperialism towards the revolutionary movement of the masses. Slander is also used in a given case to represent, despite the truth, the Chinese bourgeoisie, who betrayed the national interests of the country, as the progressive force of the Chinese national-liberation movement.

This notion in this or another form can be found in the writings of all the authors we have named. Lattimore, the former American adviser to Chiang Kai Shek in the years of the second World War, formulates it most clearly. Lattimore advertises the clique of Chiang Kai Shek as "the bearer of the revolutionary traditions" of the Chinese people. The mercenary rulers of Kuomintang China, according to the affirmation of Lattimore, are the "sons and heirs of the Chinese revolutionaries who were active twenty and thirty years ago" [Lattimore, Owen and Eleanor. The Making of Modern China, p. 183. London, 1945]. The Kuomintang's betrayal of the revolution in 1927 Lattimore holds to be only a sensible craving to make a "pause" in order "to consolidate the already achieved successes (?!) and to attempt to win with the help of negotiations (with foreign powers—L. B.) that which still remained to be won (?)” [Lattimore, op. cit., p. 138. Here are clearly manifested the causes of the Lattimore's sympathy toward Chiang Kai Shek and Co. He is attracted by the rejection of this clique of traitors of the struggle with imperialist expansion, of the struggle for a genuine liberation of China].

[In: The Pacific Ocean, a political, social, and economic quarterly review. No. 1. Published by the State Social and Economic Press, Moscow, 1935]

EXCERPTS FROM AN ARTICLE BY N. TERENTIEV, TITLED “PACIFIC AFFAIRS”

* * * Mr. Lattimore asserts that the coronation of Pu Fe is a new step forward in the direction of “supporting the independence of Mongolia.” The author's assertions, to a considerable extent, reveal that fact that this term is applied by him to Japanese politics not in an ironical sense, but literally, and that the reactionary forces in Inner Mongolia, having put themselves in the service of the aggressive Japanese plans, are constantly and respectfully called by him “conservative Mongolians.” Analyzing the further invasion by Japan into that portion of Inner Mongolia which remains under Chinese control, Mr. Lattimore once again, with complete seriousness, speaks of “the politics of Japan and Manchukuo supporting the conservative Mongolians on terms favorable to the Mongols themselves” * * * (p. 218).

* * * Mr. Lattimore finds himself under the hypnotic influence of his own theory concerning the struggle between land and marine (naval) tactics in the politics of the powers in relation to China and Eastern Asia, and from the point of view of this theory he attempts to partially explain—and to a certain degree justify—the Japanese invasion of Manchuria. * * *

* * * We also consider that Mr. Lattimore's scholasticism is similar to Hamlet's madness, and finds its system with a rather obvious political content” * * * (p. 217).

* * * Among the group of articles earning special attention is the declaration of the editor of the Magazine, Mr. Owen Lattimore (the article “Mongolia Enters World Affairs” in the March issue, the commentary “Japanese Europe” in the June edition, and the commentaries “Empire and Exploitation,” “Land power of the Japanese Fleet” in the December edition). To begin with, let us note that we are separated (divided) from Mr. Lattimore by insurmountable differences in opinion, not only in a general world outlook, which is not worth special mention, but also in the concrete evaluation of the current political situation in the Far East * * * (p. 217).

* * * According to Lattimore, “a Japanese continental policy is unthinkable without an active Mongolian policy (politics),” “a Japanese aggressive policy in Inner Mongolia is inevitable,” and in the same way evidently, is justified, the similar idea that “no less inevitable is a conflict between Inner and Outer Mongolia.” After all this, it appears that, “even though the government of Outer Mongolia is strong * * *” and even “has for its leaders probably the best people of the country,” it still “unquestionably is a government of the minority” (?) and cannot be considered stabilized until the generation which still remembers olden times has died out * * * (p. 218).

* * * A further development of these same ideas, in the December issue, brings Mr. Lattimore to the decision that the Japanese militarists with Araki at their head are acting on purely idealistic bases, that they “are sincerely working for the creation of a strong Manchukuo with its very own sound financial, industrial and trade organizations freely and profitably trading for itself with Japan, but economically not drained (exhausted) and in the future becoming dependent on Japan” that the “military idealists” of the latter defend “the Empire's structure, which can more properly be characterized as a federation, than as plain (naked) exploitation,” and that “the Pan-Asiatic movement” is directed towards the “establishment of a group of Asiatic countries in Manchuria, Mongolia, and Northern and Southern China, which will be under Japanese political hegemony, but would not demand individual support from Japan, which could divide and weaken Japanese military and economic resources.” Mr. Lattimore, it is true, emphasizes the conflict between military and civilian points of view which exist in Japan, and leaves the problem open, of whether the victor will be “Federation or Exploitation,” but the very manner in which this problem has been formulated by the author misinforms the reader concerning the actual aims and methods of the Japanese Aggressive policy in Manchuria and China and is direct apologetics for Japanese imperialism.

In another of the articles mentioned earlier, the same land-naval theory blooms. This brings Mr. Lattimore to the conclusion, that Japan is supposedly ready at any moment to make concessions in naval matters, in return for "a betterment of her position in Manchuria, China, and Mongolia." Mr. Lattimore even feels that if the Japanese naval tonnage norm were really to be raised, that would be nothing more than a concealed defeat of Japan, which "not being able to establish (confirm) its new profitable positions on the continent, would be forced to return to the less satisfactory policy of naval protection (defense) of a land position." Even if we were to agree with the essence of this evaluation—and we feel that Japan's refusal of the Washington Naval Act is an action which not only strengthens Japanese pretensions for rule of the continent, but supplements them with plans of naval expansion, which Japan has no thought of refusing—then the verbal peelings, heaped up by Mr. Lattimore, would leave us alienated from his point of view (p. 219).

EXCERPTS FROM AN ARTICLE BY A. LIFSHTITZ TITLED "THE MAGAZINE 'PACIFIC AFFAIRS' FOR 1935"

* * * In this manner Mr. Lattimore once again returns to that apology (apologetics) of the plundering Japanese politics in relation to Mongolia, which is so precisely expressed in his above-mentioned book (The Mongols in Manchuria). This conception of his is here again woven together with the scholastic theory of the beginning of a new era of "land power" as opposed to "marine (naval) power," which supposedly characterized the period right up to the beginning of the 20th century. This "new era," in the author's opinion, must logically lead to the "rebirth of Mongolia," evidently under Japanese protection.

Lattimore's concept stems from the thesis of the supposed readiness of the Japanese to give the Mongols actual independence. In part, concerning Manchuria, these fantasies of Lattimore's are criticized in the already mentioned article by Grazhdantsev, and Lattimore himself was forced to admit, in a footnote, that his original expectations did not materialize * * * (p. 169).

* * * However, inasmuch as we are speaking of the article in "Pacific Affairs," it is not difficult to see that Lattimore's deliberations and especially the conclusions which inevitably follow them (which ask to be made because of them) are very close to the Japanese slogan of "the battle with the communistic threat," and that his article can and will serve as justification for Japanese aggression in Northern China and in Mongolia (p. 170).

* * * Of course, Mr. Lattimore can say that he is not responsible for the actions of the Japanese, but after all he is a politician and not an archeologist, and cannot in his writings become diverted from the concrete and extremely threatening surroundings in the region of Japanese operation, or from the criminal acts of aggression, either in preparation, or already completed by the Japanese imperialists * * * (p. 170).

THE SITUATION IN ASIA. By Owen Lattimore. 238 pp. Boston. Atlantic-Little, Brown. $2.75.

'SITUATION IN ASIA' CRITICIZES U. S. GOVERNMENT POLICY IN FAR EAST

(By David Carpenter)

Owen Lattimore's Situation in Asia is extremely critical of our government's policies in that immense area of colonial and semi-colonial peoples. He shows that our government has done nothing but alienate the people's forces seeking national liberation in Asia.

Lattimore, who is the director of the Walter Hines Page School of Foreign Relations at Johns Hopkins University, points out that our dependence on the Kuomintang has served only to make the United States hated by the Chinese people. He contrasts, to our disadvantage, the reliance on the unpopular imperialist agent Syngman Rhee and the maintenance of U. S. occupation troops in South Korea with the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the establishment of a native peoples government in North Korea.

He shows clearly that the efforts by the U. S. government to make Japan a major bastion against the Soviet Union must end in failure.

Lattimore proposes that our government end its alliances with dictatorial, corrupt anti-people's forces in Asia. He urges that we stop intervention in the internal affairs of the colonial and semi-colonial countries. He asks that we aid the peoples of Asia to achieve national independence.

All this is to the good as far as it goes. But Lattimore goes completely off the beam in his efforts to explain the relationship of political and social forces in Asia and their impact on world affairs. And as long as we fail to recognize the reality of these relations so long will we be unable to help in the achievement of those aims Lattimore proposes.

In the first place, Lattimore argues that the colonial and semi-colonial peoples struggling for national independence are developing a "third force" that seeks to remain equi-distant from American and Russian power. He refuses to admit that the struggle is completely an anti-imperialist struggle, to drive out the American, British, French, and Dutch capitalists who are subjecting their native peoples to super-exploitation for their raw materials and as markets for capitalist products.

Lattimore admits that the Asiatic colonial and semi-colonial peoples are looking to the Soviet Union for examples of how oppressed peoples achieve independence and are turning away from the United States because of its imperialist line. But he makes this a contest of tactics which the United States can change by adopting new methods.

Lattimore refuses to see that the reason the colonial people turn to the Soviet Union for their example is precisely because of the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of socialism in that country. As Stalin points out, etc.:

"It is precisely because the national-colonial revolutions took place in our country under the leadership of the proletariat and under the banner of internationalism that pariah nations, slave nations, have for the first time in the history of mankind risen to the position of nations which are really free and really equal, thereby setting a contagious example for the oppressed nations of the whole world.

"This means that the October Revolution has ushered in a new era, the era of colonial revolutions which are being conducted in the oppressed countries of the world in alliance with the proletariat and under the leadership of the proletariat."

The core of the leadership in the colonial struggle against imperialism and the guarantee of the achievement of national independence lies in the growth and development of the native Communist Parties, springing out of the exploited native working classes and leading the exploited working class and the oppressed peasant masses. That is why the imperialists, under the leadership of the United States, direct their main fire against the destruction of these native Communist Parties.

Secondly, Lattimore makes the mistake of assuming that the relationship of the United States and the Soviet Union in Asia is that of a struggle for power. Here he falls into the trap laid by American imperialism, which would like to hide the reality of its efforts to maintain its grasp of the resources and man-power of Asia.

This approach to American-Soviet relationships obscures the truth. The Soviet Union is not seeking world power. When the colonial peoples look for alliances with the Soviet Union, it is because they see in that socialist country the true defender of their national aspirations. When the Soviet Union aligns itself with these peoples, it is not just a counter-alliance to protect its own borders against the attack of imperialism, it is fundamentally a defense of the national interests of the peoples of these oppressed nations.

Because the peoples of the world recognize that an attack on the Soviet Union is an attack on the defender of their own aspirations, because they see in such an attack on their own efforts to break the hold of imperialism, they join with the Soviet Union in a common front against imperialism. They have already seen how the peoples of the Eastern European democracies were able to protest themselves from the encroachment of imperialism and to begin their own internal development as the result of alliances with and protection by the Soviet Union.

In our own country, if we are to adopt the proposals Lattimore makes for "the situation in Asia," it is necessary for us to loosen the hold of the imperialists on our government. Otherwise, our official policies will continue to be that of oppressing the colonial peoples in the interests of our monopoly capitalists.

THEY CALLED ME A SPY

(By Emmanuel S. Larsen)

I often wonder how great a portion of the American reading public knows what became of the "espionage" case that figured so prominently in the headlines of the Nation's newspapers on June 7, 1945.

Since I was one of the six persons involved and was made the "goat" in the final settlement of the case, I deem it timely to give my story to the American people while its representatives in Congress are investigating the remarkable circumstances surrounding the entire affair.

I was born in 1897, in San Rafael, Calif. My father was a teacher; he had taken great interest in the Chinese revolutionary movement and had made the acquaintance of many of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's adherents. In 1906, after the San Francisco fire, we went to China where my father was to teach in the Imperial University in Chengtu.

My boyhood in China was very much different from that of most other American children there, for I was taught by my parents to like and respect the Chinese, among whom we were residing as guests. I attended Hua Yang Middle School, and when I was not yet fourteen, I was already so completely Chinese in my speech, thoughts and outlook on life that I can honestly say that what goes on in the average Chinese mind is no "Oriental mystery" to me. I have, of course, since then acquired sufficient of the American characteristics to enable me to judge China rather impartially, and because my friends always said I was mentally a Chinese I have, perhaps, been excessively conscientious in my attempt to be strictly impartial in my career as an analyst of Chinese affairs.

In 1911, when we were about to leave China, I did not have a single boyhood friend of European stock; my playmates were all Chinese with whom I had played, studied, fought, and dreamed. One particular boy, who was my constant companion, schemed and talked endlessly of what we would do for China when we grew up. Together we pored over the illustrations in the British magazine Graphic; we compared the pictured splendor of the outside world with the often pitifully low standards of living in China; and I frequently had a hard time explaining such embarrassing questions as why foreign gunboats were free to cruise at will on Chinese rivers and why foreigners in China generally treated the natives with such contempt. These little friends of mine, not only then, but when we met in later years, placed so much confidence in me and expected such great things of me, that to this day I feel that I have succeeded very poorly in fulfilling my promises to them.

When the revolution broke out, our family went to Denmark, where my father wanted to visit his aged mother. He signed a five-year contract to teach in a school in Denmark, and I thus received my high school education there and later received my B. A. from the University of Copenhagen. In 1916, we returned to the United States, where my father entered the Chicago school system and I found employment in the oriental art department of Marshall Field's famous store. My daily contact with Chinese objects of art made me long for China, and as a result of several applications, I was favored with an appointment to the Chinese Postal Administration when I was barely 20 years old.

My first station in China was Canton. After a year, I was sent to my old home in West China; there I had a thrilling reunion with my former classmates. The western world was then in the throes of a devastating war, and I had little to brag about in regard to western civilization; my Chinese friends, on the other hand, modestly apologized for the chaos into which the greedy warlords of China had thrown their country. Our somewhat more mature thoughts and discussions now centered around plans to make China and America the sister republics of all times by bringing together the peoples of these two great nations. I had to confess that Chinese youth knew so infinitely much more about America than our people knew about China.

In the summer of 1918, I registered for war service in the United States Army and was on my way home when armistice was declared. Returning to work in the postal service, my duties took me on extensive travels through most of China; I was stationed in Taiyuan, Peking, Foochow, Amoy, Hangchow, and Mukden. It was as postmaster in the port of Amoy that I was called upon by the Directorate of Posts in Peking to supply biographical information about the many new military and political personalities who had suddenly come before the public eye as leaders of the Kuomintang forces that were then threatening the North China government. Amoy was an excellent locality for the study of these new elements, for the port lay on the dividing line between the political entities of north and south China.

Right from the start I became very fond of this minor part of my regular duties, and the collection of current Chinese biographies thus became my principal hobby since the year of 1923.

The politics of early revolutionary days were extremely involved; the many groups and factions were interwoven in a confusing pattern due to the maneuvers of numerous minor leaders who for purely selfish reasons would climb first on one bandwagon and then on another as the fortunes of the revolutionary wars developed.

Outstanding and more clearcut, however, were the leaders of the Nationalists who fought their way up to the Yangtze Valley in 1927. They were the forces of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, under the able military leadership of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. They had started out from Canton in 1924 after many local reverses. Dr. Sun had tried in vain to obtain the support of the United States and Britain, but his attempt to seize and utilize Chinese customs funds had been answered with American naval gunfire. Right then and there we had chilled the friendship that the Chinese Republicans had held for us; we had literally pushed Dr. Sun's revolutionaries into the arms of Soviet Russia. Russian advisers and military supplies, thereafter, streamed into Canton, and, in 1924, Chiang Kai-shek's revitalized armies had finally been able to start their northward march. When these armies reached the Yangtze, Dr. Sun had died, and Chiang felt that he could no longer retain his Soviet Russian advisers. He dismissed Galen and Borodiu and many staff officers attached to their advisory mission; but large units of his armies had already been so thoroughly indoctrinated in communism that they refused to obey Chiang's headquarters; under the leadership of Mao Tse-tung, Ho Lung, Chu Te and others, these pro-Communist troops fled to the hills of central and southern Kiangsi and began to harrass the newly established Nationalist Government in Nanking.

I was then stationed in Mukden, where I was postal accountant for the southern part of Manchuria. As an official of the North China regime, which consisted of a bewildering blend of modern diplomats and old-time warlords, I was beset with misgivings concerning my future as a Chinese official. I was beginning to have great faith in Chiang Kai-shek's new government; our official reports, read eagerly by all of us in the North China government, indicated that the Nationalists had a very definite policy and were actually doing things. The main item on their program was unification of China, and the next one was to present to the outside world an orderly state with a balanced budget and thereby, in an honorable and acceptable manner, accomplish the abolition of the unequal treaties. To China's enemies, however, these were the very things that must not materialize. Russia armed and aided the opposition to Chiang's government because she wanted to see China sovietized; Japan armed and aided the northern generals because she liked these greedy weaklings and feared a strong and unified China under Chiang. The British played their usual small die-hard merchant-politics in China, and our Government did a pretty good job of following in their footsteps.

I held a good position in Mukden, with a fairly high salary and an excellent residence; and I had been decorated three times by the North China regime, yet I felt that I wanted to get out and go into business on my own. During 1926, on a hunting trip in Manchurian Inner Mongolia, I had become acquainted with a young and very brilliant Mongol lama, known as the 'Te-ch'ing-mu Lama, with headquarters in the Ko-ken Monastery, in the Solun area of northwestern Manchuria. The lama, who was a graduate of a university in Peking and spoke fluent Chinese, was the spiritual leader of the many clans under the Khorchin League of Mongols. Immensely wealthy, and with unlimited power and influence over his Mongol herdsmen, he was eager to invest millions in model ranches and tanning factories. After I had visited his headquarters several times and spent many pleasant days roaming over the plains with him in my Dodge car, he prevailed upon me to resign from the Chinese government and join him in the capacity of an adviser. In the latter part of 1927 I, therefore, made careful preparations for adequate export outlets, through British firms in Tientsin, and I spent six months studying up on wool and sheep-breeding. With the aid of a Czechoslovak engineer and several Australian sheepmen, we finally built three ranches, a tanning factory, some roads, and imported merino rams and numerous cars and trucks. I was the first American pioneer in that part of Asia. Soviet Russians had been coming into the border town of Taonan for several years to buy wool and furs; they now streamed in bent on wrecking my business. But I had a fairly well established partnership with the lama, the Chinese garrison commandant and the Mongol resident prince. The Russians were constantly telling the Mongols and the Chinese that Americans were swindlers and thieves and urging them not to deal with me. The Japanese, on the other hand, owned the stock in the Szepingkai-Taonan Railway, had staked off a Japanese concession outside the city walls of Taonan, and strongly resented any American establishing himself in this coveted area. As usual, China was the battle ground of foreign powers, each with their eyes on rich or strategically important morsels of China's periphery. Japan wanted the Taonan-Solun plains of Inner Mongolia as a jumping-off place for a huge mechanized army aimed at Siberia and Outer Mongolia; Russia wanted this area with its gentle grades from the Mongolian Plateau down to the fertile Sungary valley of Manchuria for exactly the same reasons—conquest.

And just as the pattern would appear, the Japanese took Manchuria first (in 1931) and then lost it to the Russians (in 1945). I did not stay long in Mongolia; in 1928, after the assassination of Marshal Chang Tso-lin, there was a change of officials in Taonan, and the new garrison commandant was eager to please the Japanese and forced me to leave. I went to Tientsin in the autumn of 1928 and joined the British-American Tobacco Co., which sent me to Peiping to take charge of their traffic department there.

That same year I married a Russian girl I had met in Manchuria. I was already fairly well conversant with the Russian language, and as a result of my Russian marriage I became well acquainted with the various types of Russians—Whites and Reds alike. I found the Russians by nature to be a fascinating people; they are hospitable to the extreme; they love to laugh and joke, much as the average American. But the Soviet Russians seemed to live under a cloud of restraint; they were ever cautious in their conversation, and there was hardly anything they dared to discuss freely. The few Soviet Russians that one met in the International Club and at parties were so noncommittal that they were outright boring; it was simply impossible for an American to have anything to do with them. It was obvious, however, that every adult Soviet Russian was a cog in Russia's political machine, and they went about their sinister duties in China with clock-like precision, never daring to become friendly with Chinese or westerners, and constantly spying on each other. A year or two among those people would be the best cure for any American with a hankering for the Communistic way of life. By apologists it was always explained that it was necessarily so during the first years of the Russian revolution, where everyone was engaged in a gigantic struggle; the struggle must still be on, for I have observed that the present-day officials of the U. S. S. R. in Washington act in exactly the same manner, keeping aloof from the people in whose midst they live and discouraging even their children from associating with their American schoolmates.

Five and a half years with the British-American Tobacco Co. ended with the closing of the company's traffic branch in Peiping. I decided to return to the United States and sailed for home in the spring of 1934. I went to Chicago, where my father was still connected with the school system, but since conditions for employment, especially in my particular field of interest, were extremely poor at the time, I returned to China in the autumn of the same year. When I got back to Peiping I met a Chinese friend of mine in the street who said he had been looking for me for several months. He was an intelligence officer in the Gendarmerie, the military police under the Ministry of War. He explained to me that when the Chinese forces retreated from Jehol in 1933, many Chinese commanders had buried their large and fresh stocks of arms in the vicinity of Peiping rather than risk a futile stand against the Japanese. Subsequently some of these commanders had secretly gone back to their caches and unearthed their munitions hoards which were now finding their way into the hands of all sorts of lawless elements. General Shao Wen-k'ai of the Gendarmerie wanted me to assist in the apprehension of Chinese officers involved in this illicit arms traffic. He had selected me for this work, my friend told me, because of my fluent Chinese and my knowledge of personalities in Chinese military circles. He offered me a handsome salary and commissions on all seizures; but what intrigued me most was the fact that the Gendarmerie's personalities files were made available to me, and I was able to check on the accuracy of information. I had collected patiently as a hobby during the past 11 years. In some instances, of course, I found that I was way off, while in others I was right on the beam; the most amusing, however, was to find some of my own earlier reports to the Chinese government copied verbatim and tucked away in the secret files. General Shao, a highly intelligent man and a student of Buddhist philosophy, accorded me all the usual privileges of a foreign "guest" and I had a high regard for this modest and ascetic looking officer. It was, therefore, painful to me to learn many years later that during the Japanese occupation of North China, he had become a puppet official. I have often wondered whether he and a number of his men did not join the Japanese the better to keep an eye on them. For his whole organization, prior to the invasion, was much feared by the Japanese, and he himself was extremely anti-Japanese.

In the early part of 1935 the Japanese found out that I was working for the Chinese Gendarmerie; the Japanese military attaché in Peiping contacted me and offered me the alternative of quitting the Gendarmerie or possibly getting run over by a Japanese military truck. I was then seeking a divorce from my Russian wife, who had fallen under the spell of a young German aviator, and since I intended to return to the United States anyway, I told the Japanese attaché that I would be glad to accept a good riddance visa for travel via Japan on my journey home.

Back in the United States, I discovered that no matter how much Chinese a man knows about China, he would not qualify for any official position without the stamp of approval of the men who control positions in the Far Eastern field. I, therefore, went to the University of Chicago, enrolled for a brief course, qualified for one Rockefeller scholarship after another, and in the course of six months found myself in Washington, a candidate for the position of research analyst in Chinese affairs in the Office of Naval Intelligence. I was employed by the Navy in October 1935, and served almost nine years as Chinese analyst.

During the war, I became acquainted with almost all the naval officers serving in the Far Eastern branch of the Intelligence system. One of these was Lt. Andrew Roth, a brilliant young boy who had been commissioned a junior lieutenant after completing the Navy's special course in the Japanese language. The fact that he had been commissioned and accepted for work in Naval Intelligence placed him in the status of a man whose loyalty to the U. S. government was not doubted by the authorities and whom I had no need of fearing. My friendship with Roth was neither very intimate nor of long duration, but—as was the general practice—we frequently went to lunch together and occasionally got together in the evening over a glass of beer or a pot-luck dinner, ending up with a good argument, ranging anywhere from Japanese Shinto to my Chinese personalities file.

One day Roth came to my desk in the Navy Department around noontime and asked me whether I had had my lunch; I told him that I hadn't. He then asked me if I would like to walk up-town with him and have lunch, and I readily agreed. When we had crossed Pennsylvania Avenue at 17th Street, and I was about to suggest going into the Trianon Cafe, Roth stopped me and asked me whether I knew a man named Philip Jaffe. For the moment I could not recollect where I had seen the name but was sure that I did not know any such person. He then explained that Jaffe was publisher and editor of the magazine "Amerasia," and I then remembered having often seen the name. Roth told me that he was well acquainted with Jaffe and knew that he and I would have a lot in common since Jaffe also was interested in Chinese personalities and would be in a position to trade information with me. I was particularly interested in the biographies of the Communist leaders in China, Roth knew, and he suggested that we get together. I asked him how that would be possible, and he smilingly informed me that Jaffe was in Washington that day, and he, Roth, was just then on his way to have lunch with him and would be glad to bring me along and introduce me.

We walked over to the Statler Hotel and met Jaffe in the lobby. First we had a cocktail in his room and then we had lunch in one of the dining rooms. While eating, we discussed the conditions under which we could trade information concerning Chinese personalities. Jaffe said he would visit Washington about once a month and would then ask me for biographical notes or background material on personages he had in mind, and if I didn't have such information ready on my cards, he would pick it up on his next trip. Likewise I was to give him a list of personalities I was studying, and he would try to supply them to me on his next trip. Thus started my relations with Jaffe, ever so innocently, as far as I could see, and I was quite happy to have a new source of information. Incidentally, I may mention here that the personalities information available from official sources was generally negligible and very similar to the tedious and euphemous stuff that one may find in any Who's Who. What I valued in my collection was the off-the-record "dirt" on a man's character, hitherto unpublished information about his past career, earlier political affiliations and the real reasons for his switching from one faction to another. Most of the China experts in Naval Intelligence did not believe in the importance of collecting such data, and I had a hard time explaining to one of my superiors that China, as many other countries, was governed not so much by ideologies as by personalities.

After that I began to read Jaffe's magazine Amerasia with greater interest. I found that all the government agencies in Washington that handle Far Eastern affairs subscribed to Amerasia and took its comments and opinions quite seriously. I was several times called upon to give my own opinion to superior officers regarding Amerasia articles that interested them; at times I found that the general picture presented by Jaffe corresponded pretty accurately with that given us by our naval and military attachés in China; however, it generally resembled much closer that of our State Department's field representatives in China. In the June issue, 1944, Jaffe published a strong criticism of Joseph Grew, particularly attacking his book: My Ten Years In Japan. At that time I had not read Mr. Grew's book, nor was I well acquainted with the opposing Far Eastern policy groups in the State Department. In fact I had just then started to think of asking for a transfer to the State Department. Nor had I ever given Jaffe any information except Chinese personalities notes of my own origin. I had, however, noticed that Roth took a strong interest in Jaffe's article on Mr. Grew; Roth told me that he was working on a book, in which he also would attack Grew. I personally did not like Mr. Grew's postwar policy, but had nothing to do with it at that time. On his next trip to Washington, Jaffe invited my wife and me out to a Chinese restaurant for dinner and told us that he was worried over reports that Joseph Grew had been unduly angered by Jaffe's June article. Jaffe did not explain how he had obtained this information, but it had very obviously come to him from someone in the State Department. He asked me whether I thought he ought to go and talk to Grew and I told him that it certainly could do no harm to meet Mr. Grew face to face and clarify the sorest point in dispute. I understand that Jaffe did go to see Grew, who told him that much of what he had written in Amerasia was wrong due to sheer ignorance of fact; to which Jaffe had answered that it was regrettable that not more facts were made available to the press.

Since I severed my connections with the government service, I have been asked several times by the FBI and members of the congressional committee investigating the Jaffe case, whether I ever heard Roth discuss secret and confidential matters with Jaffe or whether I ever saw Roth carry out government documents from the Navy Department. I must admit that on the few occasions that I was together with Roth and Jaffe, I never did hear them discuss anything that could possibly violate the government's Secrecy Act. Perhaps this discreet attitude was an act put on specially for my benefit, but that is, of course, purely conjecture on my part. It is a fact, however, and a very strange one at that, that after introducing me to Jaffe for the purpose of exchanging personalities data, Roth never once asked me how I was getting on with Jaffe or in any other way even hinted at the matter. As time went by, I thought this strange but finally put it down as just so much gentleman's and naval officer's discretion on his part.

As to carrying out documents from the Office of Naval Intelligence I can only say that there existed at that time a sort of caste system, which differed between officers and civilian experts; the former wore gold badges which entitled them to carry out anything without inspection, whereas the latter wore green badges and were not permitted to remove any documents from the building. Therefore, if I wanted to take a voluminous document home and read it over the week end, I had to ask an officer to carry it out for me and then hand it to me when we got out of sight of the guards. This was a rather frequent occurrence, I would say, and although officers and analysts trusted each other implicitly, the usual practice was for an officer to examine the material the civilian employe was removing temporarily from the premises. Many a time have I brought home the papers on which I had worked all day and then continued long into the night with my work at home.

On September 1, 1944, when I was transferred to the State Department, I felt that nine years with the Navy Department had been pleasant and instructive. I had learned a lot about the merits of the various intelligence systems employed throughout the world and had developed many improvements of our system; I had also brought to a high degree of perfection my personal reference cards on Chinese leaders and political groups and had presented the Navy with copies of my most important cards and subsequently built up a separate file especially adapted for use by the officers of the Intelligence services. I had, however, reached a grade in my civil-service status beyond which I could not go, and I was eager to take a hand in the shaping of our policy toward China. My transfer to the State Department gave me precisely this opportunity; I was attached to the planning and research unit which was entrusted with the drafting of basic postwar policy toward China, Japan, Korea, Siam, and the various Far East dependencies.

Coming from Naval Intelligence, where policy was, perhaps, not always clear-cut, but always typically American and largely free from politics, it was amazing and bewildering to step into State Department and find that there was little general policy, while every clique and group had its own preconceived policy to suit its particular political aspirations. There was within the Far Eastern Division a clique generally known as the pro-Japanese faction, although this is strictly speaking a misnomer, since none of its members were actually pro-Japanese. It was more a case of their being ignorant of the affairs of China and the psychology of the Chinese people and more accustomed to dealing with the Japanese. They were, therefore, suspicious of the Chinese, and favored a strong postwar Japan as the main stabilizer in Asia rather than a strong China. One fairly good reason for that was that they feared China would go communistic and play power politics hand in hand with Soviet Russia against the interests of the United States. Another, and less well-founded reason, was their fear that a victorious postwar China, fully emancipated in the family of nations, would be a haughty block of 475 millions which would some day present a much greater threat to us than that of which sassy little Japan had been capable. The chief proponents of this so-called pro-Japanese policy were Joseph Grew, his close adviser, Eugene Dooman, and many lesser lights, mostly yes-men, with which the department is so stuffily packed. Meeting with these men on the policy committee was often an experience bordering on the farcical; the wording of policy decisions was often watered down till it became meaningless and valueless; there were provisions for this and that to happen or not happen, so that no matter what happened, our diplomats would be able to wiggle out of what they had meant, and the same policy would be applicable to diagonally opposite purposes. Perhaps I am the one who is just ignorant of the ways of diplomacy, but I still have to see a single instance of good results accruing to this country's foreign relations from the "slimy" code of diplomacy.

Then there was within the crew on the China Desk a group of men, who for some reason or other had chosen to champion the cause of the underprivileged Chinese, as if the latter hadn't been able to take pretty good care of himself for thousands of years in one of the greatest democracies of all mankind. Time and space are insufficient in this article to give an outline of village and other self-government throughout the ages in an ancient democracy where coolies have risen to rule an empire and where the principal prerequisites for advancement were scholarly learning and the respect of the people. There have, of course, always been tyrants and power politicians who usurped the power that was not rightfully theirs; we have such men in our country this very day. But Chinese history and legend alike is rich in stories of the ultimate downfall of such men who did not live according to the code of the inherent and truly democratic ethics of the Chinese. And if such men have come to power in recent times, their downfall is no less certain in a modern China, where political emancipation and material advancement have been in geometric progression during the last decades. But the average American does not realize that China is such a large country with so massive a population, living on so different a standard, and largely without the means of communications that we possess, that political advancement to match our standards cannot be brought about overnight. The period of political tutelage imposed by the Kuomintang undoubtedly is beginning to seem unduly long to the educated people of China and must appear horribly long-drawn-out to the average American observer. But the principal gripe of the Chinese masses is one rising out of economic discontent, and to understand the reasons for the latter one must take into consideration many, many factors, foremost of which is the terrific impact of China's head-on collision with the western world barely a hundred years ago. With the fall of the Manchu empire came fantastic and distorted ideas of a new freedom. Since the country was—and to a certain extent still is—divided geographically and dialectically, regional leaders first sprang into prominence; their contribution to national advancement and social reform was erratic and of little value and often a direct deterrent to real progress that could only come through national unity. Chiang Kai-shek, therefore, held fanatically to a program of national unification first as the foundation for political emancipation. I sincerely believe this policy is correct, and had it not been for evil foreign influences in China, unification would have been realized many years ago.

But all this is the problem of the Chinese people, and I cannot see where it becomes the problem of a few minor career men in the United States Government. Their functions as servants of this Republic are to maintain smooth and pleasant relations with the properly constituted and duly recognized foreign governments with which this Nation comes into contact. Instead they set themselves up as the reformers of China, critical of every political appointment that Chiang, as head of the Chinese state, makes from time to time. I can see where the urgency of the war effort imbued them with the importance of keeping our ally, China, in the fight, and, undoubtedly, this gave the anti-Kuomintang elements in our State Department a marvellous opportunity to further their partiality to all opponents of the Nationalist government. It tended to unduly encourage the opposition which, as a result, looked in vain to this country for the aid that could not possibly be extended to it. Nevertheless, this was wrong and constituted a betrayal of their duties as diplomats, and I believe it has done considerable harm to our relations with China as well as to the internal situation in China. A constant critical attitude, on our part, toward the de jure government of China, and a consistent flow of moral support to the Communists, tended to unduly encourage the opposition to our war ally. When Gen. Patrick Hurley resigned as Ambassador to China in December, 1945, he was right when he charged that members of the "China Group" within the State Department had deliberately sabotaged his official policy in China.

In the spring of 1945, I was at the height of my activity in research and policy planning in the State Department. I worked largely on postwar problems of Manchuria and Korea. My chief was Dr. Blakeslee, and my colleagues were Dr. Hugh Borton, Mr. Paul Josslyn, now consul-general in Singapore, and Mr. Robert Feary. Our group in general was conservative and in no way partial to any particular ideology. We were analysts confronted with problems that had to be tackled realistically from the point of view of serving the best of American interests in a postwar world, yet with the greatest possible understanding of the problems of the people within the countries we dealt with. When we met on the policy committee, however, we were seated around a conference table with foreign service members of the Japanese and Chinese sections of the Far East Division. We wrote papers on policy, submitted them to the committee for discussion, made changes in conformity with motions that were voted on, and finally filed our completed papers with the higher authorities. In general, the system was good and the problems were well handled. However, it happened fairly frequently, especially with papers concerning postwar policy toward China, that the China group of foreign service officers fought stubbornly against anything that favored the Kuomintang in the slightest. Thus, for instance, before our forces in the Pacific had launched the attack on Japan proper, and while it was still generally believed that the China coast was next in line for invasion, a paper on Manchuria was submitted to the policy committee; the problem was what we would do with the Manchurian administration if we were to invade that area and seize it and Chungking troops would be unable to penetrate Communist-occupied North China and take over Manchuria from us. Were we to sit tight and govern Manchuria for an indefinite period, or were we to hand it to any local Chinese faction, even the Communists? The author of the paper was Mr. Feary, and his proposal was that we ought to hand over Manchuria to the Chinese Communists if Chiang Kai-shek's troops were not there to take it over at once. The proposal struck me as outrageous, since we had promised China at the Cairo Conference that Manchuria would revert to China, and by that we unmistakably had meant to the properly constituted government of China. I launched the initial protest and obtained sufficient support to defeat the proposal. Mr. Feary was furious. He was a well-meaning fellow with a good record in the Embassy in Japan, but he knew nothing about China or Manchuria and had most likely been strongly influenced by the China group of the foreign service. And for one who was not really familiar with Chinese affairs, such influence was almost to be expected, for the officers in the department relied largely on dispatches from the field, and the writers of such dispatches, such as John Service, Emmerson, Davies, and Ludden, were all violently critical of the Chungking government and full of praise for the Communists and the Democratic League. Chief believer of these field reporters was John Carter Vincent, then chief of the China Section in the State Department and now head of the Far East Division.

After the policy meeting concerning Manchuria, a tall, young foreign service officer of Scandinavian extraction pulled me aside and warned me in a friendly way that I would soon get into trouble if I opposed the anti-Kuomintang group in the China Section. This young man died recently, but long before his death I had already made a statement to the above effect before the congressional investigating committee in Washington. Not long after the incident, I met Roth in the street one day, and he told me that he had heard from a young man named Friedman that John Carter Vincent suspected me of being "too close to the Chiang Kai-shek crowd." I resented the remark, since I had never had anything but purely social relations with the Chinese Embassy in Washington, and I wondered whether Roth was merely testing me out with a fabricated story or whether Vincent actually had expressed such suspicion to Friedman. For that reason I did not take it up with Vincent.

A few days later, some time in the latter part of May, I came home from office in the afternoon and found Andrew Roth in my apartment, chatting with my wife. He seemed extremely nervous and told me that he and his wife had originally intended to meet at our apartment somewhat later for a friendly chat, but that he had just received some startling news which he was in a hurry to tell his wife. He said that whereas he had been ordered to Honolulu by the Navy, his instructions had suddenly been cancelled; he expressed the belief that the Navy had changed its mind about his transfer because of his book, which he had submitted to the naval authorities for inspection prior to publication.

Since Roth was early, and didn't know where his wife was shopping, he had to wait an hour or so, during which time he had little to say but continued to evince considerable uneasiness. Then his charming and talented wife arrived, happy and smiling, only to become dumbfounded and strangely peeved about the news of the Navy's sudden change of plans. I tried to say something comforting to her about the Navy probably having a better job for him or, perhaps, wanting merely to postpone his departure for Hawaii until his book had been passed, but she brushed my remark aside in a peeved manner that indicated complete mental preoccupation and fear of some danger. It is possible that both Andrew and Rene Roth were aware, at that time, that they were being shadowed; however, they said nothing about it. I myself felt perfectly at ease, for I was not even faintly aware that I was on the brink of any trouble. Yet it was not long after that when the sensational "espionage" case broke.

The 6th June, 1945, was an exceptionally chilly day in Washington. When I left my office in the State Department, I decided I would walk home. Usually I did not allow myself this luxury, as I was always in a hurry to get home and do a few hours' work on my private card file.

About seven o'clock, I had just sat down to dinner with my wife, Thelma, and little daughter, Linda, when there was a knock at the door. I went to the door and found two men who asked me in a very business-like manner whether I was Emmanuel S. Larsen, to which I answered in the affirmative. They immediately stepped into the apartment and informed me that I was under arrest. I couldn't believe it and asked them if this was some sort of a joke, but they assured me that it was no joke and that they were agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Naturally I asked them what the charges were, but they simply stated that I would find out in due course. In the meantime they proceeded to search my apartment from end to end. In a private filing cabinet they found about 4,000 of my Chinese biographical cards and a number of copies of Government documents from various agencies, all dealing exclusively with Chinese personalities. During the search which lasted till almost midnight, I was painstakingly questioned by the agents concerning my relations with Jaffe and my possible knowledge of and relations with communists and other subversive groups. I made a clean breast of my relations with Jaffe and had no difficulty in denying that I had ever had any relations whatsoever with parties advocating the overthrow of our present government and constitution. I explained that I had, in fact, no experience in or understanding of these phases of American politics, except for the few individuals who appeared to me to be working in favor of the Chinese Communists, and I knew of them only through my work in the Far Eastern research field. A female agent had entered the apartment with the others, probably in the capacity of a stenographer; she and a male agent kept my wife separated from me throughout the search. From time to time I saw Thelma seated in the sun porch with the agents, and it appeared that the stenographer was typing her answers to questions posed by the agent. On one occasion my wife signalled to me and asked me if I objected to her making a statement, and I told her that I had no objections and that she was free to tell all she knew, as I preferred the truth to be known. My six-year-old daughter had moved about the apartment for several hours, ignored, distressed, sensing that something was wrong, and occasionally moving close to me only to press my hand and look pleadingly up into my eyes. Eventually she had fallen asleep in an easy chair in the bedroom, her little face pale and her hair in disarray. About midnight, when the agents prepared to take me away, I was permitted to transfer the sleeping child to her bed.

I was not handcuffed; merely taken out and placed in a car. There were several cars lined up on the street outside the apartment, and at the entrance stood silent and grim agents, all tall, dark and handsome, giving the appearance of a movie version of the capture of the Touhy gang. In the K Street field headquarters of the FBI, I was photographed—oh yes, with large numbers on my chest—then fingerprinted and then grilled again till about three o'clock. By this time I was terribly exhausted and sleepy. I had suffered from a slight headache and sore throat that day and had hardly eaten any lunch; I had walked home from office and had missed my dinner; furthermore I had been placed in such mental anguish as does not come to many people in their lives, for in the K Street building I had been solemnly informed that I was charged with violation of the espionage act, and remember, there was a war on! Frankly, I did not understand what it was all about. On the way to the office of the U. S. Commissioner, I began to turn the matter over in my mind. Could it be that they arrested me on an espionage charge because I had been working at home on copies of official documents? Or was it because I knew Jaffe? And what was this about Jaffe, seeing that they had asked me so many questions about my possible knowledge of his political affiliations? Was it possible that I had been associating with a man who was, perhaps, involved with the Nazis, the Japanese, or even the Soviet Russians? Of course, there were no answers to all those questions in my mind, and with the sense of futility comes a strange inclination to lapse into an apathy. I was in such a condition when I was taken into the Commissioner's office, and I believe I must have been there for a few minutes before I suddenly realized that I was sitting next to John Service of the State Department and Lt. Andrew Roth of the Office Naval Intelligence.

I began to understand things now. My mind became wide awake again. I knew that Service had known Jaffe, and it dawned on me that here I was, arrested together with every other government employe who had had anything to do with Jaffe. And then, on the other hand, how could that be? Why did I not see there Mike Michael Lee and John Emerson and Franklin Day and all the other persons Jaffe had spoken of as his friends in Washington? The whole thing was still a puzzle to me. I turned around and asked John Service in Chinese what it was all about, and he told me very curtly to shut up. When it came to the arraignment, there was considerable discussion between the FBI agents and Commissioner Turnage. All the mumble-jumble about article this and that of espionage act did not seem to convey much to the Commissioner; at least I heard him say that he still didn't quite understand "what in the hell" the boys were charged with. There was more explaining on the part of the agents, and then we were finally asked to stand before the Commissioner and hear the charge read.

After that, the U. S. Marshal took charge of us, handcuffed us all together and transported us to the D. C. Jail. It was then about five o'clock in the morning of the 7th June. On the way to the jail, the radio in the Marshal's car was blaring forth the news of the arrest of six spies in a sensational conspiracy to steal secret and vital information from the U. S. government. I was completely dumbfounded. Upon arrival at the jail, we were ordered to strip off every stitch of clothing and were then given a cold shower bath. After that, we were given blue denim prison overalls and our shoes. We were then taken up to the tiers and locked in individual cells. Neither Roth nor Service had spoken a word to me; on the contrary, they had seemed quite hostile to me. I considered this quite significant and began to review in my mind the time when Roth came to my desk and asked me out for lunch, and then introduced me to Jaffe. Now I had heard on the radio that the other three arrested were Jaffe, Miss Kate Mitchell and Mark Gayn. As I lay down on the bed in the cell, shivering with cold and exhaustion, I took mental stock of the names mentioned. Mark Gayn I had never met in my life, hadn't even the faintest idea of what he looked like, so I could not possibly have conspired with him. Kate Mitchell I had met twice in Jaffe's company, but I had hardly said a word to her and really might have considered that I did not know her at all. To John Service I had only spoken twice in my life, once when Mr. Ballantyne introduced me to him in one of the corridors of the State Department and another time when a group of "China hands" in the Department went out together for lunch. On both occasions I had merely said hello and the usual formalities about being glad to meet him after reading all his reports from China. Then there remained Roth and Jaffe. With neither of these had I conspired; if there had been any conspiracy, it must have been between Roth and Jaffe and not by me with either of them. The subsequent events in the preparation of the defense bore this out, for my attorney found it impossible to get together with the attorneys of the others involved. Gayn got his attorneys from the paper he worked for in Chicago; Miss Mitchell got her high-powered attorneys from Buffalo, where her uncle appeared to be prominent and influential; John Service hired his own attorneys and received generous financial aid from the China group of the foreign service officers in the State Department; Roth's and Jaffe's attorney's worked together; and my attorney, whom I told I had no money to pay him, took my case like a brave soldier, left completely out in the cold by his professional colleagues. My attorney was Arthur J. Hilland, a Lutheran of Norwegian extraction, and a man who has an enviable reputation in the courts of Washington, D. C.

Hiland's first demand on me was that I tell him the truth without concealing anything and without the slightest deviation from facts. Like Mohandas Gandhi, who was a practicing lawyer for twenty years in South Africa, Hilland believes that if you get your facts straight the law will take care of itself. And when

Hilland got the facts from me, his next move was to take me straight into the Justice Department for a conference with Assistant Attorney General MacInerney, and the prosecuting attorney in the case, Mr. Hitchcock. It was not long before Hilland and I were invited in for another conference, and then another. I, on my part, felt that I had nothing to conceal and nothing to worry about. My principal worry had been my wife's difficulty in raising a $10,000 bail in order to get me out of that comfortable D. C. Jail, from which most others walk out, with or without permission. Over and over we discussed the facts of the case as far as I knew them, and it became evident to the Justice Department that there were no grounds for indicting me on any espionage charges, and the charges were dropped. A grand jury—before which, for some reason or other, my attorney advised me not to appear—indicted Jaffe, Roth and me on charges of removal and possession of official documents, while it completely cleared Gayn, Mitchell and Service. The Grand Jury proceedings are secret; yet it has been reliably reported to me that Service testified before the Grand Jury that I was the one who had given Jaffe the documents that were found in his possession. If he said this, it was a lie, and it seems strange that in this country, where there is supposed to be justice for all, one man can testify against another without giving the accused an opportunity to defend himself. Service went scot-free and even received apologies in writing from both Mr. Joseph Grow and Secretary Byrnes. When I read of this in the papers, I wanted to confirm my status with the pro-leftist "China group" in the State Department; I called Mr. Drumright on the phone; Drumright, I would say, is an excellent diplomat, and as impartial as one could possibly expect an American official to be; his answer was brief and to the point; all he said was: "Vincent wouldn't touch you with a ten-foot pole."

That was really all I wanted to know. I was now convinced that John Service, because of his strong anti-Kuomintang and his pro-Communist leanings, had received not only financial aid from his friends in the State Department but also sufficient pull to obtain quick and complete vindication. This seemed entirely unfair to me, because from a word dropped here and a hint there I had myself come to feel pretty certain that Service, whom Jaffe knew and admired, was Amerasia's real pipeline from the State Department. I may, of course, have been wrong in this assumption, for I had no definite proof. There may have been others, for Jaffe had many contacts throughout the various government agencies in Washington.

I lay awake nights and hoped for a speedy trial and a real knock-down, drag-out fight which would bring the real culprits to light. August and September went by, slowly, painfully. For some five or six weeks I had remained on the State Department payroll as "on leave with pay"; now I had passed to the status of "on leave without pay." I owned a tiny piece of property on the Civil War battlefield, near Manassas, and I used to go down there every day for weeks at a time and work like a madman, repairing the little house on it, for no other purpose than to work up a good sweat and forget my troubles, and at least to get tired enough to be able to sleep at night.

Then suddenly one day I had a bombshell explode over me in the form of a news report that Jaffe had pleaded guilty to the possession of government documents and had been ordered to pay a fine of $2,500. His brief hearing or trial in court had apparently implicated no one; yet I felt that his small fine, measured by his plea of guilt, must have been the result of an arrangement. I went up to the Justice Department for further conferences with Mr. Hitchcock, trying to sound him out on the matter of whom Jaffe had implicated. Hitchcock was pressing me hard for some sort of confession so as to get the case over with, but his attitude was still the same friendly one as from the very start, openly admitting to me that he did not believe I was guilty of any disloyalty. I, therefore, concluded that Jaffe had not implicated me; and since no other arrests were made, it seemed that Jaffe, perhaps, had not been made to implicate anyone in the settlement of his particular case.

The Justice Department felt that they had insufficient evidence against Roth, while against me they at least had the evidence consisting of documents seized in my apartment. Technically, therefore, I was guilty of a crime, although this crime of taking home official documents was being committed daily by almost every government employee, except, perhaps, those who were more interested in cocktail parties than their work and completely forgot the war effort the moment they left their offices. Mr. Hitchcock, therefore, suggested that if I did not enter a plea of guilty I might enter a plea of nolo contendere. The idea of this was at first repulsive to me; I thought I had suffered enough as a result of a humiliating arrest and attending publicity constantly referring to me as a spy. I had lost my livelihood because of a blunder: if there really was any espionage—and I don't know even now whether there was or not—then it was most unfortunate that it was not proven, unfortunate for the welfare of the nation and unfortunate for me, because I would then have been completely exonerated. I, therefore, felt that the Justice Department owed me some sort of compensation for charging me under the espionage laws and then dropping those dreadful charges, and I thought the minor charges of possessing documents in the best of faith might conveniently be dropped.

But there just had to be a goat somewhere; I don't usually accept the part willingly; but it so happened that in October there appeared an article in one of the Washington papers to the effect that Representative Dondero of Michigan was about to launch a bill in the house to order an investigation of the "espionage" case. I sort of welcomed this investigation and felt that it might clear me completely; but I also realized, since my case had not been settled yet, that an example might be made of me. I immediately went to see Mr. Dondero; at first he was extremely skeptical; but through mutual friends in high places he was assured that I had never in any way whatsoever been affiliated with communistic or other subversive activities, either in this country or abroad. Unfortunately, for the same reason, I was unable to give Mr. Dondero any information that he wanted about Mr. Jaffe's and Lt. Roth's alleged subversive activities, but I was able to and willingly did acquaint him with the truth of the "espionage" case as well as I knew it. After my conversation with Mr. Dondero, I felt that it would, perhaps, be better to make some sort of a settlement right now, before he let go his blast in the House. I told my attorney that I was in favor of entering a plea of nolo contendere and, at the worst, pay some sort of a small fine. He was against it in principle and was all for fighting the case to the bitter end, even if we had to go to the supreme court. But he argued that if that was the way I felt, and my wife agreed with me, then he would make no objections and would help me see it through as well as he could manage it. That same night we informed the Justice Department that I was ready to enter the plea of nolo contendere. The following day I requested Secretary Byrnes to allow me to resign from my position in the State Department, and the answer came through with my resignation accepted "for personal reasons." A few days later, on the second of November 1945, I went before Judge Proctor in the U. S. Court for the District of Columbia. The Justice Department's attorney, Mr. Hitchcock, told the court that he was convinced there had been no disloyalty on my part and that he, therefore, recommended a small fine. The court fixed the fine at $500; and with the knowledge and consent of the Justice Department, the fine was paid immediately by an attorney acting on behalf of Mr. Jaffe; the same attorney likewise reimbursed me for bond expenses and my own attorney's fees.

When I walked out of that courtroom into the sunshine and fresh autumn breeze, I felt like a free man again, yet I could not get away from the smarting stigma of the fine. I couldn't help brooding over this for a few days. Then my mother, who had been hospitalized in Washington with a broken leg since August 9, came home to our apartment, and all of a sudden we were busy with preparations for a trip by car to Florida, to bring mother back to her home in St. Petersburg. From there, my wife and I and our little daughter visited Miami for the first time in our lives. We stayed 10 days in a hotel right on the beach, and at no time have ever loafed so luxuriously, without a care in the world, for a brief spell.

On the morning of one of our last days in Miami, the papers brought news of Pat Hurley's resignation as Ambassador to China and his indignant outburst against the persons in the State Department who, he claimed, had sabotaged his important work in China.

I sympathized with Hurley in his indignation and knew there were sound reasons for it, because I had seen a good deal of what was going on in the Far East division of the State Department. His indignation was over the cross purposes to which he and the members of his staff were working in China. His instructions and the United States policy, at the time of his departure for Chungking, were to bring the Kuomintang and the Communists together, in order to prevent the Allied war effort from being jeopardized on the Asiatic mainland. His modus operandi was fairly simple; by sheer personality he was to get the two parties first to agree that they would agree, and then, by maintaining a reserved but correct attitude toward the Reds, he was to make it clear that the United States, in war plans and operations alike, intended to deal solely with the Nationalist government, to which he had been accredited. The effect of this on the Communists was calculated to discourage them in any hopes for further moral support from official or private elements in the United States and make it clear that United States military supplies could not be given to Red units even for the purpose of fighting the Japanese as long as the Communist Army remained independent of the Kuomintang and in open rebellion against it.

But when Hurley arrived in China, he found himself surrounded by State Department field officers who resented the intrusion of a noncareer man and who, furthermore, had come to admire the Chinese Communists, among whom they had lived as observers over long periods. These field officers probably never at any time made any openly and admittedly hostile move against Hurley and his policy through the official correspondence channels, although the latter constituted their principal means of opposing him. But in the course of their relations with, and their interviewing, of Communist leaders, they showed sympathy with the Red cause in China by listening attentively to all the anti-Kuomintang gripes and reporting them faithfully and painstakingly to the Department, with personal assurances that the information was reliable. They also discussed with the Communist leaders the possibilities and probabilities of the supplying of United States military aid to the Communist forces in the coastal provinces in the event of an Allied landing in Japanese-occupied China. The effect of all this was, of course, to encourage the Communists in their alternative of holding out against Chiang's government rather than getting together with the Kuomintang in a wholehearted anti-Japanese war effort and the formulation of a new Chinese constitution. Thus Hurley's strenuous attempts at mediation were made of no avail—in fact they were wilfully sabotaged. And back in the State Department, his reports were discredited by John Carter Vincent and his crew. These men often expressed openly their hatred of Hurley and discussed means of getting him out of the ambassadorship.

I do not have the documentary evidence, and feel certain that nothing would be made available to me on request, since even Hurley was denied the use of the Department's files when he wanted to testify before the United States legislature. But I do have a fairly good recollection of some of the outstanding reports and attached comments that would bear me out in my contention that Hurley's assistants in China sympathized so openly with the Reds and were so consistently critical of the de jure Chungking government—to which they had been officially accredited—that they did considerable harm to our good relations with China.

One of the pet themes of the field officers was the question of whether the Chinese Communists had any liaison with Soviet Russia. Over and over again it was reiterated that the Chinese Communist Party was divided into three factions, (a) the political faction headed by Mao Tse-tung, (b) the army faction, headed by Chu Te, and (c) the International or pro-Soviet faction headed by the soldier poet Ch'en Shao-yü (better known by his pen-name Wang Ming); and it was unmistakable in all reports, as late as 1944 and 1945, that Wang Ming's pro-Soviet faction had lost its influence since the alleged dissolution of the Russian Third Internale. Chou En-lai, the Communist representative in Chungking, late in 1944, went out of his way to stress the point to one of our observers that whereas we here in America thought the Chinese Communists had close liaison with Moscow, this was, in fact, untrue, since there were no representatives of the Chinese Reds in Moscow. This was faithfully reported, without any comments indicating doubt of the truth of Chou's statement; yet only four months later it was confirmed that for years one of the Communists' earliest leaders, Li Li-san, had been living in Moscow as liaison officer and that radio communications with Moscow did exist and that three Russians in Yen-an were responsible for the functioning of the radio equipment.

A mystery closely associated with liaison was that of actual Soviet aid to the Chinese Communists. It has been steadfastly denied by anti-Kuomintang publishers that aid of any sort was rendered in recent years. Yet I remember distinctly that in the early part of 1944, when the "Kazak incident" occurred in the Altai region of Sinkiang province, it was generally known, and it was duly reported by one of the department's field officers that Soviet Russia was involved. The Kuomintang armies were at that time surrounding the Communist forces in Shensi and Kansu, and it appeared that Russia engineered the Kasak revolt in order to draw Nationalist troops into Sinkiang and thus relieve the pressure on the Chinese Communists. These are the things the American public has never been allowed to know.

About the same time, namely early in 1944, there was wide speculation in Allied Councils as to whether Soviet Russia would enter the war or not in Asia. Dr.

T. V. Soong, Foreign Minister in Chungking, told an official of this country that he was convinced that when Germany was defeated, the Russians would attack Japan, but that the mode and locality of their offensive would be for the sole purpose of serving communistic interests in Asia. Soong warned us that our real headaches would then commence. Officers in the China Section of the State Department discredited this warning and preferred to believe the Communists who contended that they were in no way receiving the support of Russia; they also preferred to believe John Davies who reported that the Chinese Communist Party was dominated by a faction with a non-Russian orientation. And finally, as late as the spring of 1945, when Ambassador Harriman returned from Moscow to Washington, they preferred not to believe him when he reported that, in his opinion, Soviet Russia would support the Chinese Communists in the event of Russo-Japanese hostilities in Asia.

The best evidence, however, that the "non-Russian orientation" story was clever propaganda, is the record of Communist military success in Manchuria since the entry of Russian forces into that territory, and particularly since their withdrawal northward. The American public must surely have read and understood that Japanese munitions, seized by the Russians, were allowed to fall into the hands of the Chinese Communist forces in Manchuria who robbed China of her principal war prize, namely the return of 40 million Chinese citizens to Chinese central government control.

One of my principal objections is to the manner in which our diplomatic field officers have conducted themselves in China by appearing overzealous in their willingness to listen to and report the most long-winded expressions of discontent on the part of anti-Kuomintang elements, while they have hardly ever bothered to record any of the Kuomintang's arguments against its opponents. I remember how our Consul in Kweilin interviewed General Li Chi-shen on the subject of the Democratic League, and then waxed hot in his report in an effort to faithfully impress the Department with all the abuses that General Li had heaped upon the Chungking government. It appeared strange to me that a United States official should have seen fit to be receptive to such violent criticism of the regime to which he was accredited. These field officers seemed to believe anything that the Communists told them. Thus, just as John Davies believed that the Communists had a non-Russian orientation, John Service tried hard to convince Washington that the Communists were pursuing a policy of avoidance of civil war. I remember that Ambassador Gauss did not quite subscribe to this and argued that the steady expansion of Communist fortifications showed that the Reds intended to take over control of all China. And I also recollect that in trying to discredit Ambassador Gauss's analysis of the Communist-Kuomintang dispute, Mr. Vincent suggested that it was rather the failure of the Kuomintang to enlist popular enthusiasm for the reforms championed by the Communists that was largely responsible for the present difficulties in China.

The "Democratic League" was represented in official dispatches as a moderately liberal political organization although there were rumors that many of its members in the working committees were communists. Because this organization did not openly declare itself a 100 percent for the Chinese Communist program, its members were able to operate throughout Nationalist China. In the latter part of 1944, General Chu Te told John Service that he thought the Democratic League was an organization determined to introduce some good reforms but that he did not believe the movement would amount to much and particularly that it would not denounce the Kuomintang government. This was indeed a strange statement to forward to Washington without comments, since we were daily reading other reports of the League's regular denunciations of Chiang and his government and for its plans for the overthrow of the Kuomintang. And when the Communist representative arrived in Chungking on the 24th January, 1945, to present Yen-an's proposals to Ambassador Hurley, it was made quite clear by the Communists that the Democratic League was to be included in a conference of all parties. Thus the Communists had suddenly come out strong for the League, yet I failed to see within the ensuing months any report on this important change in the League's political affiliations.

TYPICAL CASE OF BIASED REPORTING

The encouragement, extended to the Chinese Communists by our officials and writers, was such that the Reds in China, at the time of our 1944 Presidential election, declared they would sit back and wait for greater United States pressure on the Kuomintang. The two southern cities of Kweilin and Liuchow, where the United States Army maintained large airbases, were then being attacked by the Japanese, and Communist Chou said openly that if Chiang's armies couldn't hold back the Japanese, and these two cities were lost, he was sure the United States would put some real pressure on the Kuomintang.

It was obvious from the reports that our officials in the field had given the Communists to understand that wherever American military action was contemplated in China, Communist forces would be utilized if Nationalist forces were not on the spot at the time of operations. Secretary Ludden of our Embassy in Chungking reported at the end of the year 1944 that in certain areas the Communists were then well organized and ready for action against the Japanese "when circumstances and equipment permit." It must be remembered that, at the time, Ambassador Hurley was trying hard to discourage the Communists from too strong a stand; yet morale boosting encouragement appeared to flow from the United States to Yen-an through a number of secret channels, and the anti-Kuomintang clique in the China section of the State Department was able to see its views on their enemy Hurley well expressed when the Communist newspaper "Hsin Hua Jih Pao" in Chungking said:

"We deeply regret the statements made by General Hurley as he does not understand the popular demand for democracy. * * * And if the United States fails to supply the strongest Chinese forces—the Communists—with arms, the war will be prolonged and losses increased. We are of the opinion that General Hurley will aggravate disruption, promote civil war and postpone victory."

EXHIBIT No. 90

[From the New York Times, Tuesday, October 31, 1944]

ALLIES HERD 40,000 NAZIS TOWARD MEUSE; 3 JAPANESE CRUISERS BOMBED AT MANILA; STILWELL RECALL BARES RIFT WITH CHIANG—LONG SCHISM SEEN—STILWELL BREAK STEMS FROM CHIANG REFUSAL TO PRESS WAR FULLY—PEACE WITH REDS BARRED—GENERALISSIMO REGARDS THEIR ARMIES FIGHTING JAPANESE AS THREAT TO HIS RULE

The following account of the recall of Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell is by the Chungking correspondent of the New York Times, who has just returned to this country. It was delayed and finally cleared by the War Department censorship in Washington.

(By Brooks Atkinson)

Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, relieved of his command in China, Burma, and India, before leaving Chungking on October 21 made a final swift tour of some of the military bases in his command and then flew directly toward Washington in his silver-colored transport plane facetiously dubbed "Uncle Joe's Chariot."

For the last two months negotiations had been going on between President Roosevelt's personal representative, Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek to give General Stilwell full command of the Chinese ground and air forces under the Generalissimo and to increase China's participation in the counteroffensive against Japan.

Although the Generalissimo at first was inclined to agree to General Stilwell's appointment as commander, he decided later that he would accept any American commander except General Stilwell.

PRESSED FOR REFORM

His attitude toward the American negotiations became stiff and hostile. At a private meeting of the standing committee of the Kuomintang (National party) Central Executive Committee this month he announced the terms of his personal ultimatum to Americans who were pressing him for military and governmental reform.

He declared that General Stilwell must go, that the control of American lend-lease materials must be put in his hands and that he would not be coerced by Americans into helping to unify China by making terms with the Chinese Communists. If America did not yield on these points, he said China would go back to fighting the Japanese alone, as she did before Pearl Harbor.

President Roosevelt agreed to the Generalissimo's demand for General Stilwell's recall. Dividing the huge China-Burma-India war sector in two, the War Department appointed Maj. Gen. Albert G. Wedemeyer, now Deputy Chief of Staff to Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten, as Commander of United States Army Forces in China and Lieut. Gen. Daniel I. Sultan, General Stilwell's Chief of Staff in India, as Commander of United States Army Forces in India and Burma.

After a career of more than twenty years largely devoted to military affairs in China and two years and eight months as commander of the United States Army Forces in China, Burma and India and as Allied Chief of Staff to the Generalissimo, "Vinegar Joe" Stilwell has now concluded a busy and constantly frustrated attempt to help China stay in the war and to improve the combat efficiency of the Chinese forces.

Uncle Joe speaks Chinese. He knows more about China than most foreigners. He is more intimately acquainted with the needs and capacities of the Chinese Army than the Generalissimo and Gen. Ho Ying-chin, Minister of War and Chief of Staff, because he has repeatedly been in the field with the troops.

He is commonly regarded as the ablest field commander in China since "Chinese" Gordon. The second retreat with Stilwell seemed the final one. It was not from the enemy but from an ally.

The decision to relieve General Stilwell has the most profound implications for China as well as American policy toward China and the Allied war effort in the Far East. It may mean that the United States has decided from now on to discount China's part in a counter-offensive.

Inside China it represents the political triumph of a moribund anti-democratic regime that is more concerned with maintaining its political supremacy than in driving the Japanese out of China. America is now committed at least passively to supporting a regime that has become increasingly unpopular and distrusted in China, that maintains three secret police services and concentration camps for political prisoners, that stifles free speech, and resists democratic forces.

THE MAIN DIFFERENCE

The fundamental difference between the Generalissimo and General Stilwell has been that the latter has been eager to fight the Japanese in China without delay and the Generalissimo has hoped that he would not have to.

In no other way is it possible to understand the long series of obstructions and delays that have made it impossible for General Stilwell to fulfill his original mission of equipping and training the "unlimited manpower" resources of the Chinese Army.

The Generalissimo has one positive virtue for which America is now indebted; he has never made peace with the Japanese, although there have been times when his Ministers thought the future looked hopeless. But the technique of preserving his ticklish balance of political power in China keeps him a passive man.

Although he is the acknowledged leader of China, he has no record of personal military achievement and his basic ideas for political leadership are those of a war lord. He conceives of armies as political forces.

In an enormous, loosely strung country populated chiefly by ignorant peasantry he maintains his authority by preventing any group from becoming too powerful. A few well-equipped armies under a command not entirely loyal to him personally might upset the military and political balance inside China and curtail his authority.

The Chinese Communists, whom the generalissimo started trying to liquidate in 1927, have good armies that are now fighting guerrilla warfare against the Japanese in northeast China. The generalissimo regards these armies as the chief threat to his supremacy. For several years he has immobilized 300,000 to 500,000 (no one knows just how many) Central Government troops to blockade the Communists and keep them from expanding.

Distrusting the Communists, the generalissimo has made no sincere attempt to arrange at least a truce with them for the duration of the war. The generalissimo's regime, based on the support and subservience of General Ho, Dr. H. H. Kung, Minister of Finance, and Dr. Chen Li-fu, Minister of Education, has remained fundamentally unchanged over a long period and has become bureaucratic, inefficient, and corrupt.

Most of the armies are poorly fed and shockingly maltreated. In some parts of the country the peasants regard the armies as bandits and thieves. In Honan last Spring the peasants turned against the Chinese armies during the Japanese offensive in revenge for the ruthlessness with which the armies collected rice during the famine years.

Most of China's troubles now are the result of her having been at war with Japan for more than seven years and totally blockaded for two and one-half

The reason nothing is done to alleviate the miseries is that the generalissimo is determined to maintain his group of aging reactionaries in power until the war is over, when, it is commonly believed, he will resume his war against the Chinese Communists without distraction.

Bewildered and alarmed by the rapidity with which China is now falling apart, he feels secure only with associates who obey him implicitly. His rages become more and more ungovernable and attack the symptoms rather than the causes of China's troubles.

ACQUESCENCE IN REGIME

Since the negotiations with General Hurley began the generalissimo's attitude toward America has become more resentful and American criticisms of China is hotly rebuked. Relieving General Stilwell and appointing a successor has the effect of making us acquiesce in an unenlightened, cold-hearted autocratic political regime.

Into this stagnant, baleful atmosphere General Stilwell came in February 1942, animated by the single idea of fighting the Japanese immediately. Like most foreigners who know the Chinese people, he loved them, for they are the glory of China. From long experience Stilwell had great confidence in the capacities of the Chinese soldiers, who even then were fighting on nothing.

In November 1941 the Magruder Military Mission had already made an agreement with the generalissimo to train and equip the Chinese Army on the theory that it would then become unnecessary to ship thousands of doughboys to fight on Chinese soil. The war in China was initially handicapped by the decision to fight Germany first and Japan second. General Stilwell was never able to get 1 percent of the American Army for use in his C-B-I theatre and was never able to get all the equipment he has wanted, because it has always been needed elsewhere.

On March 3, 1942, less than a month after he had arrived in China, General Stilwell was plunged into the calamitous Burma campaign without notice. He had to return to Chungking to induce the generalissimo to come to the front to vest him with sufficient authority to command the troops.

Even then the command was never secure or efficient. There were other troubles. At a time when the troops needed transport, most of China's trucks were hauling civilian loot out of Burma up the road into China, where goods were worth huge sums of money.

When at last Stilwell got out of Burma into India he did persuade the generalissimo to let him feed, train, and equip the Chinese soldiers who finally arrived. After training of a year and a half, those soldiers were the backbone of the Chinese divisions who got Myitkyina back last August and are now pushing toward Bhamo to free the Burma road. Inside China everything Stilwell has tried to do has been obstructed and delayed.

The generalissimo and his staff, like the United States Air Force, which they get free and which asks for nothing except food and airfields, which we equip with buildings and installations. But the Chinese Government hedges and hesitates over anything involving the use of its armies. Foreigners can only conclude that the Chinese Government wants to save its armies to secure its political power after the war.

A nervous and driving field officer who is impatient with administrative details and political tangles, General Stilwell is no diplomat. He goes straight to the point in his dealings with anybody. He is plain and salty. He is personally incapable of assuming a reverential mood toward the generalissimo, and he is impatient with incompetent meddling in military command. Although General Stilwell is anything but arrogant, the generalissimo complained that the American was trying to subjugate him.

But with the situation in China as it is, no diplomatic genius could have overcome the generalissimo's basic unwillingness to risk his armies in battle with the Japanese. Amid the intrigue and corruption of China's political and military administration, General Stilwell has been a lone man trying to follow orders, improve the combat efficiency of the Chinese Army, force open the Burma Road, and get China back into the war.

Now he has been forced out of China by the political system that has been consistently blocking him and America is acquiescing in a system that is undemocratic in spirit as well as fact, and is also unrepresentative of the Chinese people, who are good allies.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The matter of the controversy which has arisen over the Wheeling Intelligencer's report of Senator McCarthy's speech in Wheeling has come to my attention.

I do not approve of the manner in which it has been handled. Our newspapers have no desire to become involved in a political controversy. Our only interest is in accurate reporting, and there is no reason why we should withhold any information concerning the authenticity of stories appearing in our columns.

I have today talked with Mr. Frank Desmond, the reporter who wrote the story in question. He tells me there can be no doubt that Senator McCarthy did use the figure "205" in referring to his list of men in the State Department who have been named as members of the Communist Party, and members of a spy ring.

We, of course, have no knowledge as to the accuracy of the figure. As I have stated above we are only interested in the fact that our reporting was accurate.

Very truly yours,

AUSTIN V. WOOD.

MCCARTHY CHARGES REDS HOLD UNITED STATES JOBS—TRUMAN BLASTED FOR RELUCTANCE TO PRESS PROBE—WISCONSIN SENATOR TELLS LINCOLN FETE HERE "CHIPS DOWN"

(By Frank Desmond of the Intelligencer staff)

Joseph McCarthy, junior United States Senator from Wisconsin, was given a rousing ovation last night when, as guest of the Ohio County Republican Women's Club, he declared bluntly that the fate of the world rests with the clash between the atheism of Moscow and the Christian spirit throughout other parts of the world.

More than 275 representative Republican men and women were on hand to attend the colorful Lincoln Day dinner of the valley women which was held in the Colonnade Room of the McLure Hotel.

Disdaining any oratorical fireworks, McCarthy's talk was of an intimate, homey nature, punctuated at times with humor.

But on the serious side, he launched many barbs at the present set-up of the State Department, at President Truman's reluctance to press investigation of "traitors from within," and other pertinent matters.

He said that recent incidents which brought traitors to the limelight is the result of an emotional hangover and a temporary moral lapse which follows every war. However, he added:

"The morals of our people have not been destroyed. They still exist and this cloak of numbness and apathy needs only a spark to rekindle them."

Referring directly to the State Department, he declared:

"While I cannot take the time to name all of the men in the State Department who have been named as members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who, nevertheless, are still working and shaping the policy in the State Department."

The speaker dwelt at length on the Alger Hiss case and mentioned the names of several others who, during the not so many years, were found to entertain subversive ideas but were still given positions of high trust in the Government.

"As you hear of this (Hiss) story of high treason," he said, "I know that you are saying to yourself—well, why doesn't Congress do something about it?"

"Actually, ladies and gentlemen, the reason for the graft, the corruption, the disloyalty, the treason in high Government positions—the reason this continues is because of a lack of moral uprising on the part of the 140,000,000 American people. In the light of history, however, this is not hard to explain.

"It is the result of an emotional hangover and a temporary moral lapse which follows every war. It is the apathy to evil which people who have been subjected to the tremendous evils of war feel.

"As the people of the world see mass murder, the destruction of defenseless and innocent people and all of the crime and lack of morals which go with war, they become numb and apathetic. It has always been thus after war."

At another time, he declared:

"Today, we are engaged in a final all-out battle between communistic atheism and Christianity. The modern champions of communism have selected this as the time and, ladies and gentlemen, the chips are down—they are truly down."

In an informal quiz with his audience, the Senator answered a number of questions dealing mostly with the plan of Secretary of Agriculture Brannan to destroy millions of tons of potatoes, eggs, butter, and fruits; he gave forth-right views on the old-age and social-security problems and a number of other topics.

McCarthy was introduced by William Callahan, executive director of the Ohio Valley Republican organization. Mrs. Eberhard, president of the women's group, presided, while program director, Mrs. Robert J. Harshman, introduced Callahan. State Senator William Hannig led the group singing.

The invocation was delivered by the Reverend Philip Goertz, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, and the benediction was pronounced by the Reverend W. Carroll Thorn, of St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

Senator McCarthy arrived by Capital Airlines at the Stifel airport late yesterday afternoon and was greeted by former Congressman Francis J. Love and Tom Sweeney, Jr., who drove him to the Fort Henry Club.

[From the Nevada State Journal (Reno), February 12, 1950]

MC CARTHY BLASTS STATE DEPARTMENT—SENATOR TELLS REPUBLICANS ACHESON'S STAFF IS FULL OF TRAITORS

(By Edward Conners)

Senator Joseph A. McCarthy of Wisconsin last night indicted the Democratic State Department as full of traitors and dubbed Dean Acheson's defense of Alger Hiss in his reference to the Sermon on the Mount as one of the greatest blasphemies in history.

The ex-Marine, who has been a thorn in the side of the Truman administration ever since his whirlwind campaign and election from Wisconsin after being discharged from the service in 1945, told more than 400 Nevada Republicans last night in the Mapes Hotel that democracy is being sold out from within—especially within one of our most vital governmental functions, the State Department.

Last night's crowded banquet room was filled with Republicans from throughout Nevada observing the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, the founder of their party and to hear one of the more aggressive and progressive national leaders.

COMMUNISTS

Senator McCarthy, who was introduced to the mixed crowd of both Bourbons and interested citizens from all sections of Nevada, cautiously referred to members of the State Department staff in the light of being out-and-out Communists but left no doubt in the minds of the audience as to their absolute loyalty to the United States Government and democracy.

Warming up to the subject he chose as his theme last night the Senator startled many of the already stern faces among the audience with a résumé of the Communist program to dominate the world and made his declaration that two such world-apart ideologies as communism and democracy evidently cannot exist in the world as it is today.

He said that two vast camps are indulging in a great armament race but that the "mad moment has not yet arrived for civilization to destroy itself."

But that the crucial moment in the world's history is at hand and that civilization as we know it today is squaring off for "a show-down fight," was a point the Wisconsin solon drove home to his audience last night.

In referring to Acheson's blasphemy, Senator McCarthy said that the stand taken by the Secretary of State could well be the spark that "would sweep from power the intellectuals" who have sold out to the Communists.

Following Alger Hiss' sentence to Federal penitentiary for a 5-year term, Acheson made the voluntary statement to the press that he would "not turn his back" on his former staff member and in explaining his loyalty to the convicted Federal official, he referred to Christ's Sermon on the Mount in which he did not quote the passage directly but implied that he was only following the admonition laid down in the ageless Sermon.

FIFTY-SEVEN CARD CARRIERS

Senator McCarthy, who had first typed a total of 205 employees of the State Department who could be considered disloyal to the United States and pro-Communists scratched out that number and mentioned only "57 card-carrying members," whom Acheson should know as well as Members of Congress.

He did not divulge the names of any of the 57, but dispatched a lengthy telegram to President Truman yesterday morning asking that each of those known to Congress to be pro-Communist and now employed by the State Department be exposed and expelled.

However, he did refer to at least four ex-members of the State Department who are still in positions of national and international responsibility and whose loyalties are very much in doubt.

They include John W. Service, who, Senator McCarthy said, declared that "communism is the only hope of China," while he was serving in China for the United States Government.

CHALLENGED

"This same man," who the Wisconsin Republican said was tossed out by Ambassador Joseph Grew and then reinstated by Acheson after his recommendation for China, "is now on his way to Calcutta, India, to help shape and determine Indian policy" as far as American foreign policy is concerned.

Officials of the State Department in Washington, D. C., yesterday challenged Senator McCarthy to divulge the names of the 57 "card-carrying Communists" now in the employ of the State Department, and the Wisconsin solon indicated before he reached Reno that he might do it.

Last night, however, he named, in addition to Service, Gustavo Duran, Mrs. Mary Kenny, and Harlow Shapley, none of whom he referred to as Communists but whose activities and loyalties he questioned and all of whom were given a clear bill of lading by the Senator's chief target in last night's speech, Dean Acheson, Secretary of State.

He referred to the screening board which President Truman set up as a security measure against Communist infiltration into high Government offices and made pointed remarks that of 300 that this board certified for discharge from their positions, Acheson fired only 80 of them, the Senator declared.

AFFIDAVIT OF PAUL A. MYERS

To Whom It May Concern:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,

County of Ohio, to wit:

This day Paul A. Myers, personally appeared before me Lucille M. Boek, a notary public of said county, and being by me first duly sworn says:

As program director of radio station WWVA, I read the attached 13-page speech script before it was delivered by Senator Joseph McCarthy on February 9, 1950. I reviewed our tape recording of the delivered speech before WWVA broadcast it on the same evening and again reviewed it, against the script, on the following day. I certify that the tape recording was the same as the attached script with the exception of interpolations and connective words, such as a's, and and's, and the's, which to my way of thinking did not materially change the meaning of the text.

I have initialed each page of the attached photostatic copy of Senator McCarthy's speech.

[SEAL]

LUCILLE M. BOCK.

My commission expires February 3, 1952.

Ladies and gentlemen, tonight as we celebrate the one hundred forty-first birthday of one of the greatest men in American history, I would like to be able to talk about what a glorious day today is in the history of the world. As we celebrate the birth of this man who with his whole heart and soul hated war, I would like to be able to speak of peace in our time—of war being outlawed—and of world-wide disarmament. These would be truly appropriate things to be able to mention as we celebrate the birthday of Abraham Lincoln.

Five years after a world war has been won, men's hearts should anticipate a long peace—and men's minds should be free from the heavy weight that comes with war. But this is not such a period—for this is not a period of peace. This is a time of "the cold war." This is a time when all the world is split into two vast, increasingly hostile, armed camps—a time of a great armament race.

Today we can almost physically hear the mutterings and rumblings of an invigorated god of war. You can see it, feel it, and hear it all the way from the Indochina hills, from the shores of Formosa, right over into the very heart of Europe itself.

The one encouraging thing is that the "mad moment" has not yet arrived for the firing of the gun or the exploding of the bomb which will set civilization about the final task of destroying itself. There is still a hope for peace if we finally decide that no longer can we safely blind our eyes and close our ears to those facts which are shaping up more and more clearly * * * and that is that we are now engaged in a show-down fight * * * not the usual war between nations for land areas or other material gains, but a war between two diametrically opposed ideologies.

The great difference between our western Christian world and the atheistic Communist world is not political, gentlemen, it is moral. For instance, the Marxian idea of confiscating the land and factories and running the entire economy as a single enterprise is momentous. Likewise, Lenin's invention of the one-party police state as a way to make Marx's idea work is hardly less momentous.

Stalin's resolute putting across of these two ideas, of course, did much to divide the world. With only these differences, however, the east and the west could most certainly still live in peace.

The real, basic difference, however, lies in the religion of immoralism * * * invented by Marx, preached feverishly by Lenin, and carried to unimaginable extremes by Stalin. This religion of immoralism, if the Red half of the world triumphs—and well it may, gentlemen—this religion of immoralism will more deeply wound and damage mankind than any conceivable economic or political system.

Karl Marx dismissed God as a hoax, and Lenin and Stalin have added in clear-cut, unmistakable language their resolve that no nation, no people who believe in a god, can exist side by side with their communistic state.

Karl Marx, for example, expelled people from his Communist Party for mentioning such things as love, justice, humanity or morality. He called this "soulful ravings" and "sloppy sentimentality."

While Lincoln was a relatively young man in his late thirties, Karl Marx boasted that the Communist specter was haunting Europe. Since that time, hundreds of millions of people and vast areas of the world have come under Communist domination. Today, less than 100 years after Lincoln's death, Stalin brags that this Communist specter is not only haunting the world, but is about to completely subjugate it.

Today we are engaged in a final, all-out battle between communistic atheism and Christianity. The modern champions of communism have selected this as the time, and ladies and gentlemen, the chips are down—they are truly down.

Let there be any doubt that the time has been chosen, let us go directly to the leader of communism today—Joseph Stalin. Here is what he said—not back in 1928, not before the war, not during the war—but 2 years after the last war was ended: "To think that the Communist revolution can be carried out peacefully, within the framework of a Christian democracy, means one has either gone out of one's mind and lost all normal understanding, or has grossly and openly repudiated the Communist revolution."

This is what was said by Lenin in 1919—and quoted with approval by Stalin in 1947:

"We are living," says Lenin, "not merely in a state, but in a system of states, and the existence of the Soviet Republic side by side with Christian states for a long time is unthinkable * * *. One or the other must triumph in the end. And before that end supervenes, a series of frightful collisions between the Soviet Republic and the bourgeois states will be inevitable."

Ladies and gentlemen, can there be anyone tonight who is so blind as to say that the war is not on? Can there be anyone who fails to realize that the Communist world has said the time is now? * * * that this is the time for the show-down between the democratic Christian world and the communistic atheistic world?

Unless we face this fact, we shall pay the price that must be paid by those who wait too long.

Six years ago, at the time of the first conference to map out the peace, there was within the Soviet orbit, 180,000,000 people. Lined up on the anti-totalitarian side there were in the world at that time, roughly 1,625,000,000 people. Today, only 6 years later, there are 80,000,000,000 people under the absolute domination of Soviet Russia—an increase of over 400 percent. On our side, the figure has shrunk to around 500,000. In other words, in less than 6 years, the odds have changed from 9 to 1 in our favor to 8 to 1 against us.

This indicates the swiftness of the tempo of Communist victories and American defeats in the cold war. As one of our outstanding historical figures once said, "When a great democracy is destroyed, it will not be from enemies from without, but rather because of enemies from within."

The truth of this statement is becoming terrifyingly clear as we see this country each day losing on every front.

At war's end we were physically the strongest nation on earth * * * and at least potentially the most powerful intellectually and morally. Ours could have been the honor of being a beacon in the desert of destruction * * * shining proof that civilization was not yet ready to destroy itself. Unfortunately, we have failed miserably and tragically to arise to the opportunity.

The reason why we find ourselves in a position of impotency is not because our only powerful potential enemy has sent men to invade our shores * * * but rather because of the traitorous actions of those who have been treated so well by this Nation. It has not been the less fortunate, or members of minority groups who have been traitorous to this Nation * * * but rather those who have had all the benefits that the wealthiest Nation on earth has had to offer * * * the finest homes, the finest college education and the finest jobs in government we can give.

This is glaringly true in the State Department. There the bright young men who are born with silver spoons in their mouths are the ones who have been most traitorous.

Now I know it is very easy for anyone to condemn a particular bureau or department in general terms. Therefore, I would like to cite some specific cases.

When Chiang Kai-shek was fighting our war, the State Department had in China a young man named John Service. His task, obviously, was not to work for communization of China. However, strangely, he sent official reports back to the State Department urging that we torpedo our ally Chiang Kai-shek * * * and stating in unqualified terms (and I quote) that "communism was the only hope of China."

Later, this man—John Service—and please remember that name, ladies and gentlemen, was picked up by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for turning over to the Communists secret State Department information. Strangely, however, he was never prosecuted. However, John Grew, the Under Secretary of State, who insisted on his prosecution, was forced to resign. Two days after, his successor, Dean Acheson, took over as Under Secretary of State. This man, John Service, who had been picked up by the FBI and who had previously urged that communism was the only hope of China, was not only reinstated in the State Department, but promoted * * * and finally, under Acheson, placed in charge of all placements and promotions. Today, ladies and gentlemen, this man Service is on his way to represent the State Department and Acheson in Calcutta, by far and away the most important listening post in the Far East.

That's one case. Let's go to another—Gustavo Duran, who was labeled as (I quote) "a notorious international Communist," was made assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin American affairs. He was taken into the State Department from his job as a lieutenant colonel in the Communist International Brigade. Finally, after intense congressional pressure and criticism, he resigned in 1946 from the State Department. And, ladies and gentlemen, where do you think he is now? He took over a high-salaried job, as Chief of Cultural Activities Section in the office of the Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations.

Then there was a Mrs. Mary Jane Kenney, from the Board of Economic Warfare in the State Department, who was named in a FBI report and in a House committee report as a courier for the Communist Party while working for the Government. And where do you think Mrs. Mary Jane is—she is now an editor in the United Nations Document Bureau.

Then there was Julian H. Wadleigh, economist in the Trade Agreements Section of the State Department for 11 years. And who was sent to Turkey and Italy and other countries as United States representative. After the statute of limitations had run so he could not be prosecuted for treason, he openly and brazenly not only admitted but proclaimed that he had been a member of the Communist Party * * * that while working for the State Department he stole a vast number of secret documents * * * and furnished these documents to the Russian spy ring of which he was a part.

And, ladies and gentlemen, while I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as active members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 265 * * * a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department.

One thing to remember in discussing the Communists in our Government is that we are not dealing with spies who get 30 pieces of silver to steal the blueprints of a new weapon. We are dealing with a far more sinister type of activity because it permits the enemy to guide and shape our policy.

In that connection I would like to read to you very briefly from the testimony of Larry E. Kerley, a man who was with the Counterespionage Section of the FBI for 8 years. And keep in mind as I read this to you that at the time he is speaking there was in the State Department Alger Hiss (the convicted traitor), John Service (the man whom the FBI picked up for espionage), Julian Wadleigh (who brazenly admitted he was a spy and wrote newspaper articles in regard thereto).

Here is what the FBI man said: "In accordance with instructions of the State Department to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the FBI was not even permitted to open an espionage case against any Russian suspect without State Department approval."

And some further questions:

MR. ARENS. "Did the State Department ever withhold from the Justice Department the right to intern suspects?"

KERLEY. "They withheld the right to get out process for them which, in effect, kept them from being arrested, as in the case of Schevchenko and others."

ARENS. "In how many instances did the State Department decline to permit process to be served on Soviet agents?"

KERLEY. "Do you mean how many Soviet agents were affected?"

ARENS. "Yes."

KERLEY. "That would be difficult to say because there were so many people connected in one espionage ring, whether or not they were directly conspiring with the ring."

ARENS. "Was that order applicable to all persons?"

KERLEY. "Yes, all persons in the Soviet espionage organization."

ARENS. "What did you say the order was as you understood it or as it came to you?"

KERLEY. "That no arrests of any suspects in the Russian espionage activities in the United States were to be made without the prior approval of the State Department."

Now the reason for the State Department's opposition to arresting any of this spy ring is made rather clear in the next question and answer.

Senator O'CONNOR. "Did you understand that that was to include also American participants?"

KERLEY. "Yes, because if they were arrested that would disclose the whole apparatus, you see."

In other words they could not afford to let the whole ring which extended to the State Department, be shown.

This brings us down to the case of one Alger Hiss who is important not as an individual any more, but rather because he is so representative of a group in the State Department. It is unnecessary to go over the sordid events showing how he sold out the Nation which had given him so much. Those are rather fresh in all of our minds.

However, it should be remembered that the facts in regard to his connection with this international Communist spy ring were made known to the then Under Secretary of State Berle 3 days after Hitler and Stalin signed the Russo-German Alliance Pact. At that time one Wirtaker Chambers—who was also part of the spy ring—apparently decided that with Russia on Hitler's side he could no longer betray our Nation. He gave Under Secretary of State Berle—and this is all a matter of record—practically all, if not more, of the facts upon which Hiss' conviction was based.

Under Secretary Berle promptly contacted Dean Acheson and received word in return that Acheson (and I quote) "could vouch for Hiss absolutely"—at which time the matter was dropped. And this, you understand, was at a time when Russia was an ally of Germany. This condition existed while Russia and Germany were invading and dismembering Poland, and while the Communist groups here were screaming "warmonger" at the United States for their support of the Allied nations.

Again in 1943 the FBI had occasion to investigate the facts surrounding Hiss. But even after that FBI report was submitted, nothing was done.

Then late in 1948—on August 5—when the Un-American Activities Committee called Alger Hiss to give an accounting, President Truman and the left-wing press commenced a systematic program of villification of that committee. On the day that Truman labeled the Hiss investigation a "red herring," on that same day (and listen to this, ladies and gentlemen) President Truman also issued a Presidential directive ordering all Government agencies to refuse to turn over any information whatsoever in regard to the Communist activities of any Government employee to a congressional committee.

Incidentally, even after Hiss was convicted it is interesting to note that the President still labeled the exposé of Hiss as a "red herring."

If time permitted, it might be well to go into detail about the fact that Hiss was Roosevelt's chief advisor at Yalta when Roosevelt was admittedly in ill health and tired physically and mentally * * * and when, according to the Secretary of State, Hiss and Gromiko drafted the report on the conference.

According to the then Secretary of State, here are some of the things that Hiss helped to decide at Yalta. (1) The establishment of a European High Commission; (2) the treatment of Germany—this you will recall was the conference at which it was decided that we would occupy Berlin with Russia occupying an area completely circling the city, which, as you know, resulted in the Berlin air lift which cost 31 American lives; (3) the Polish question; (4) the relationship between UNRRA and the Soviet; (5) the rights of Americans on control commissions of Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary; (6) Iran; (7) China—here's where we gave away Manchuria; (8) Turkish Straits question; (9) international trusteeship; (10) Korea.

Of the results of this conference, Arthur Bliss Lane of the State Department had this to say: "As I glanced over the document, I could not believe my eyes. To me, almost every line spoke of a surrender to Stalin."

As you hear this story of high treason, I know that you are saying to yourself—well, why doesn't the Congress do something about it. Actually, ladies and gentlemen, the reason for the graft, the corruption, the dishonesty, the disloyalty, the treason in high government positions—the reason this continues is because of a lack of moral uprising on the part of the 140,000,000 American people. In the light of history, however, this is not hard to explain.

It is the result of an emotional hang-over and a temporary moral lapse which follows every war. It is the apathy to evil which people who have been subjected to the tremendous evils of war feel. As the people of the world see mass murder, the destruction of defenseless and innocent people, and all of the crime and lack of morals which go with war, they become numb and apathetic. It has always been thus after war.

However, the morals of our people have not been destroyed. They still exist. This cloak of numbness and apathy has only needed a spark to rekindle them. Happily, this has finally been supplied.

As you know, very recently the Secretary of State proclaimed his loyalty to a man guilty of what has always been considered as the most abominable of all crimes—being a traitor to the people who gave him a position of trust—high treason. The Secretary of State in attempting to justify his continued devotion to the man who sold out the Christian world to the atheistic world, referred to Christ's Sermon on the Mount as a justification and reason therefor.

* * * And the reaction of the American people to this would have made the heart of Abraham Lincoln happy.

Thus this pompous diplomat in striped pants, * * * with a phony British accent, tells the American people that Christ on the Mount endorsed communism, high treason, and betrayal of a sacred trust, this blasphemy was just great enough to awaken the dormant, inherent decency indignation of the American people.

He has lighted the spark which is resulting in a moral uprising and will end only when the whole sorry mess of twisted, warped thinkers are swept from the national scene so that we may have a new birth of honesty and decency in government.

AFFIDAVIT OF JAMES K. WHITAKER

To Whom It May Concern:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,

County of Ohio, to wit:

This day James K. Whitaker personally appeared before me, Lucille M. Bock, a notary public of said county, and being by me first duly sworn says as news editor of radio station WWVA I was in charge of the tape recording of Senator Joseph McCarthy's speech at the Hotel McLure, Wheeling, W. Va., on February 9, 1950. At the hotel I followed the prepared script as I listened to the speech. I certify that the delivered speech, as recorded by me, and on that evening broadcast by the Station WWVA was in the same form as the attached photostat of the prepared script—with the exception of the usual added connective phrases and the addition or deletion of such words as a's, and's, and the's which, to my thinking did not materially change the meaning of the text.

I have initialed each page of the attached photostatic copy of Senator McCarthy's speech.

JAMES K. WHITAKER.

Taken, subscribed and sworn to before me this the 25th day of April 1950.

[SEAL]

LUCILLE M. BOCK.

My commission expires February 3, 1952.

Ladies and gentlemen, tonight as we celebrate the 141st birthday of one of the greatest men in American history, I would like to be able to talk about what a glorious day today is in the history of the world. As we celebrate the birth of this man who with his whole heart and soul hated war, I would like to be able to speak of peace in our time—of war being outlawed—and of world-wide disarmament. These would be truly appropriate things to be able to men as we celebrate the birthday of Abraham Lincoln.

Five years after a World War has been won, men's hearts should anticipate a long peace—and men's minds should be free from the heavy weight that comes with war. But this is not such a period—for this is not a period of peace. This is a time of "the cold war." This is a time when all the world is split into two vast, increasingly hostile, armed camps—a time of a great armament race.

Today we can almost physically hear the mutterings and rumblings of an invigorated God of War. You can see it, feel it and hear it all the way from the Indochina hills, from the shores of Formosa, right over into the very heart of Europe itself.

The one encouraging thing is that the "mad moment" has not yet arrived for the firing of the gun or the exploding of the bomb which will set civilization about the final task of destroying itself. There is still a hope for peace if we finally decide that no longer can we safely blind our eyes and close our ears to those facts which are shaping up more and more clearly—and that is that we are now engaged in a show-down fight—not the usual war between nations for land areas or other material gains, but a war between two diametrically opposed ideologies.

The great difference between our western Christian world and the atheistic Communist world is not political, gentlemen, it is moral! For instance, the Marxian idea of confiscating the land and factories and running the entire economy as a single enterprise is momentous. Likewise, Lenin's invention of the one-party Police State as a way to make Marx's idea work is hardly less momentous.

Stalin's resolute putting across of these two ideas, of course, did much to divide the world. With only those differences, however, the East and the West could most certainly still live in peace.

The real, basic difference, however, lies in the religion of immoralism—invented by Marx, preached feverishly by Lenin, and carried to unimaginable extremes by Stalin. This religion of immoralism, if the Red half of the world triumphs—and well it may, gentlemen—this religion of immoralism will more deeply wound and damage mankind than any conceivable economic or political system.

Karl Marx dismissed God as a hoax, and Lenin and Stalin have added in clear-cut, unmistakable language their resolve that no nation, no people who believe in a God, can exist side by side with their Communistic state.

Karl Marx, for example, expelled people from his Communist Party for mentioning such things as love, justice, humanity or morality. He called this "soulful ravings" and "sloppy sentimentality."

While Lincoln was a relatively young man in his late 30's, Karl Marx boasted that the Communist specter was haunting Europe. Since that time, hundreds of millions of people and vast areas of the world have come under Communist domination. Today, less than 100 years after Lincoln's death, Stalin brags that this Communist specter is not only haunting the world, but is about to completely subjugate it.

Today we are engaged in a final, all-out battle between Communistic atheism and Christianity. The modern champions of Communism have selected this as the time, and ladies and gentlemen, the chips are down—they are truly down.

Let there be any doubt that the time has been chosen, let us go directly to the leader of communism today—Joseph Stalin. Here is what he said—not back in 1928, not before the war, not during the war—but two years after the last war was ended: "To think that the Communist revolution can be carried out peacefully, within the framework of a Christian democracy, means one has either gone out of one's mind and lost all normal understanding, or has grossly and openly repudiated the Communist revolution."

This is what was said by Lenin in 1919—and quoted with approval by Stalin in 1947:

"We are living," says Lenin, "not merely in a state, but in a system of states, and the existence of the Soviet Republic side by side with Christian states for a long time is unthinkable * * *

"One or the other must triumph in the end. And before that and supervenes, a series of frightful collisions between the Soviet Republic and the bourgeois states will be inevitable."

Ladies and gentlemen, can there be anyone tonight who is so blind as to say that the war is not on? Can there be anyone who fails to realize that the Communist world has said the time is now? . . . that this is the time for the showdown between the democratic Christian world and the communistic atheistic world?

Unless we face this fact, we shall pay the price that must be paid by those who wait too long.

Six years ago, at the time of the first conference to map out the peace, there was within the Soviet orbit, 180 million people. Lined up on the antitotalitarian side there were in the world at that time, roughly 1 billion 625 million people. Today, only 6 years later, there are 80 billion people under the absolute domination of Soviet Russia—an increase of over 400 percent. On our side, the figure has shrunk to around 500 thousand. In other words, in less than six years, the odds have changed from 9 to 1 in our favor to 8 to 1 against us.

This indicates the swiftness of the tempo of Communist victories and American defeats in the cold war. As one of our outstanding historical figures once said, "When a great democracy is destroyed, it will not be from enemies from without, but rather because of enemies from within."

The truth of this statement is becoming terrifyingly clear as we see this country each day losing on every front.

At war's end we were physically the strongest nation on earth—and at least potentially that most powerful intellectually and morally. Our could have been the honor of being a beacon in the desert of destruction—shining proof that civilization was not yet ready to destroy itself. Unfortunately, we have failed miserably and tragically to arise to the opportunity.

The reason why we find ourselves in a position of impotency is not because our only powerful potential enemy has sent men to invade our shores—but rather because of the traitorous actions of those who have been treated so well by this Nation. It has not been the less fortunate, or members of minority groups who have been traitorous to this Nation—but rather those who have had all the benefits that the wealthiest Nation on earth has had to offer—the finest homes, the finest college education, and the finest jobs in Government we can give.

This is glaringly true in the State Department. There the bright young men who are born with silver spoons in their mouths are the ones who have been most traitorous.

Now I know it is very easy for anyone to condemn a particular bureau or department in general terms. Therefore, I would like to cite some specific cases.

When Chiang Kai-shek was fighting our war, the State Department had in China a young man named John Service. His task, obviously was not to work for the Communization of China. However, strangely, he sent official reports back to the State Department urging that we torpedo our ally Chiang Kai-shek—and stating in unqualified terms (and I quote) that "communism was the only hope of China."

Later, this man—John Service—and please remember that name, ladies and gentlemen, was picked up by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for turning over to the Communists secret State Department information. Strangely, however, he was never prosecuted. However, John Grew, the Under Secretary of State, who insisted on his prosecution, was forced to resign. Two days after, his successor, Dean Acheson, took over as Under Secretary of State. This man, John Service, who had been picked up by the FBI and who had previously urged that Communism was the only hope of China, was not only reinstated in the State Dept., but promoted—and finally, under Acheson, placed in charge of all placements and promotions. Today, ladies and gentlemen, this man Service is on his way to represent the State Department and Acheson in Calcutta—by far and away the most important listening post in the Far East.

That's one case. Let's go to another—Gustavo Duran, who was labeled as (I quote) "a notorious international Communist," was made assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin-American affairs. He was taken into the State Department from his job as a lieutenant colonel in the Communist International brigade. Finally, after intense congressional pressure and criticism, he resigned in 1946 from the State Department. AND, ladies and gentlemen, where do you think he is now? He took over a high salaried job as Chief of Cultural Activities Section in the office of the Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations.

Then there was a Mrs. Mary Jane Kenney, from the Board of Economic Warfare in the State Department, who was named in an FBI report and in a House committee report as a courier for the Communist Party while working for the Government. And where do you think Mrs. Mary Jane is—she is now an editor in the United Nations Document Bureau.

Then there was Julian H. Wadleigh, economist in the Trade Agreements Section of the State Department for 11 years—And who was sent to Turkey and Italy and other countries as U. S. representative. After the statute of limitations had run so he could not be prosecuted for treason, he openly and brazenly not only admitted but proclaimed that he had been a member of the Communist Party—that while working for the State Department he stole a vast number of secret documents—and furnished documents to the Russian spy ring of which he was a part.

And ladies and gentlemen, while I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as active members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205—a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department.

One thing to remember in discussing the Communists in our Government is that we are not dealing with spies who get 30 pieces of silver to steal the blue-prints of a new weapon. We are dealing with a far more sinister type of activity because it permits the enemy to guide and shape our policy.

In that connection I would like to read to you very briefly from the testimony of Larry E. Kerley, a man who was with the Counter-Espionage Section of the FBI for 8 years. And keep in mind as I read this to you that at the time he is speaking there was in the State Department Alger Hiss (the convicted traitor), John Service (the man whom the FBI picked up for espionage), Julian Wadleigh (who brazenly admitted he was a spy and wrote newspaper articles in regard thereto).

Here is what the FBI man said:

"In accordance with instructions of the State Department to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the FBI was not even permitted to open an espionage case against any Russian suspect without State Department approval."

And some further questions:

Mr. ARENS. "Did the State Dept. ever withhold from the Justice Dept. the right to intern suspects?"

KERLEY. "They withheld the right to get on process for them which, in effect, kept them from being arrested, as in the case of Shevchenko and others."

ARENS. "In how many instances did the State Department decline to permit process to be served on Soviet agents?"

KERLEY. "Do you mean how many Soviet agents were affected?"

ARENS. "Yes."

KERLEY. "That would be difficult to say because there were so many people connected in one espionage ring, whether or not they were directly conspiring with the ring."

ARENS. "Was that order applicable to all persons?"

KERLEY. "Yes, all persons in the Soviet espionage organization."

ARENS. "What did you say the order was as you understood it or as it came to you?"

KERLEY. "That no arrests of any suspects in the Russian espionage activities in the United States were to be made without the prior approval of the State Department."

Now the reason for the State Department's opposition to arresting any of this spy ring is made rather clear in the next question and answer.

Senator O'CONNOR. "Did you understand that that was to include also American participants?"

KERLEY. "Yes, because if they were arrested that would disclose the whole apparatus, you see."

In other words they could not afford to let the whole ring which extended to the State Department, be shown.

APPENDIX II

This appendix contained the names of the persons charged by Senator Joseph McCarthy on the floor of the Senate on February 20, 1950. This list is confidential and is not being printed in the public record.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, June 16, 1950.

HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This will refer to your letter of May 8, 1950, with regard to the loyalty files of the State Department relative to the so-called 81 individuals identified through numbers by Senator McCarthy in his speech on the Senate floor on February 20, 1950, and identified by name in the subpoena of the Senate subcommittee.

Following are the names of the individuals whose State Department files are being made available to your subcommittee:

(Here are set forth the names of all the individuals whose files were reviewed and who are identical with the individuals identified by Senator McCarthy in his speech on the Senate floor on February 20, 1950.)

The Federal Bureau of Investigation furnished me a record of all loyalty material furnished the State Department in these cases. The State Department files have been checked, and I can assure you that all of the reports and memoranda furnished the State Department are contained in the files.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

There are set out below memoranda concerning data extracted from the State Department loyalty files relative to 108 individuals. These memoranda were prepared in 1947 by investigators for a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations of the Eightieth Congress. These individuals are identified only by numbers.

No. 1

He was born in New York City in 1918. He was employed as an economist and analyst with OSS and the State Department since June 1945. Previous to that he had worked for the Treasury Department and the War Production Board. He is now in research and intelligence.

An undated memorandum in the file, which according to T. L. Hoffman, of C.S., was prepared during the week of October 13, 1947, recommended that this subject be terminated as a security risk. The memorandum states that he was an active member and officer of the American Student Union; that he advocated military opposition to Germany in 1937, and opposed conscription in the United States of America in 1940. He has been closely associated with several subjects of a Russian espionage case, and has two brothers who are Communist Party members.

No. 2

The subject was born in 1903 in Flushing, N. Y. He was employed on June 1, 1942, with OSS as a geographer. In September 1945 he was transferred to the State Department where he is presently in research and intelligence.

The investigative file on this subject has in it information from a Government investigative agency indicating that the subject possesses radical political views, according to neighbors and confidential informants. Three informants reported him a member of several Communist-front organizations and stated he associates openly with Communists. The report in which this information is included is dated July 3, 1942.

A CSA report of April 18, 1946, contains information obtained from another Government agency. The information of that Agency is set out in a report dated April 22, 1942, and indicates that numerous witnesses, including college professors and police officers in California, testified that the subject is a radical and fellow-traveler, if not a Communist. He was very friendly and sympathetic toward Harry Bridges and strongly opposed moves to deport him. He was also a friend of Ralph Friedman, Secretary of the Communist Party in northern California.

A CSA report of November 13, 1946, sets out information obtained by interviewing subject's present and former associates in Washington. Several of his former associates in OSS state he is "left of the New Deal." Another associate stated that subject favors the Chinese Communists over the Kuomintang Regime and favors Russia in most respects. The subject reportedly told another associate that he thought Union members should have the right to strike against the Government. A State Department official described him as being extremely Left and said he seemed to be sympathetic to Russia in the Communist experiment. Another Government official said the subject blamed the capitalists for all ills, and further blamed the State Department for all the trouble with Russia during the war and praised Russia and her foreign policy.

Eleven subsequent investigative reports were prepared between November 13, 1946, and September 22, 1947, with most of the witnesses confirming the above-mentioned statements regarding the subject. As of November 1, 1947, the subject's case had been referred to the State Department Loyalty Board but no action had been taken on it.

No. 3

The applicant came to the United States from Hungary in 1938 and was naturalized in New York City in August 1944. She has been employed since October 1944 as a translator and script writer with OWI and the Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs.

A report of January 3, 1947, states the subject was an active member of the International Workers Order, a Communist-front organization. One former employer said he discharged the subject for being argumentative and inclined toward communism. Another former employer said she is a radical and boasted of being a Communist. A third informant said the subject had told him that communism is a very good thing. A fourth informant said the subject always argues over politics and stated communism was right for this country. A fifth informant said she is oversympathetic to communism. Two references on her application for citizenship were members of the IWO and contributors to Communist periodicals.

Another reference on her State Department application refused to recommend the subject, questioning her loyalty and saying she is inclined toward communism.

A report of April 24, 1947, contains the statement made by the subject's supervisor with the State Department. "I feel sure she is a fellow traveler." This supervisor later, on reinterview, changed his mind saying she is loyal but liberal. (This supervisor was subsequently discharged for security reasons.)

The subject has been a contributor to the Hungarian Communist magazine NOK.

A memorandum in the file dated June 19, 1947, stated that investigation to date had failed to prove or disprove the allegation that the subject is a Communist, but that if a decision is necessary, the recommendation would be unfavorable as to retaining the subject on the rolls.

A report of June 27, 1947, stated that most of the informants who previously gave derogatory information were reinterviewed and they reiterated their statements.

Further investigation was conducted and set out in report of September 17, 1947, but no further substantiating information concerning the subject's Communist activities was obtained.

The file reflects no further action in this matter, but, on October 20, 1947, T. E. Hoffman advised that an unfavorable security recommendation was being prepared.

No. 4

She was Associate Business Economist with OPA from November 1941 to August 1944; with FEA from August 1944 to August 1945; and since that time has been employed as an Economist with the State Department.

Confidential files of several governmental agencies were checked by CSA in August 1946 and disclosed that she had been affiliated with—

1. The American Student Union
2. The National Youth Congress
3. Young Communist League
4. Washington Committee for Democratic Action
5. Washington Book Shop

Several associates of the subject were interviewed and stated she is a liberal but of unquestioned loyalty. On March 11, 1947, she was given clearance for security purposes. Subsequently, she was interviewed by CSA and she admitted having been a member of the above-mentioned organizations, but also stated that she had changed her views and had no contact with them since 1941 or 1942.

A memorandum dated June 18, 1947, from CSA to Mr. Penrifoy suggested that "if sufficient time could not be devoted to a further investigation of the subject, her services should be terminated."

Further investigation has been conducted since June 18, 1947, but no additional evidence has been obtained to change the recommendation and the case is still pending.

No. 5

This is an example of the failure of the Evaluation Section to take action on considerable derogatory information available relative to security, and expenditure of many weeks of additional investigation with no conclusion reached.

The subject was born in New York City in 1900. He was employed by the Foreign Economic Administration from August 1942 to August 1945 and has been employed by the State Department since that time in Research and Intelligence.

An investigative report dated May 4, 1946, reflected eight persons, including six professors at Harvard and University of California, a Naval Officer and a fellow student, stating that the subject has strong Communist sympathies. They stated he frequently expounded these sympathies and is either a Party Member or a fellow traveler.

Examples of comments by associates of the subject who were interviewed are as follows:

A professor at the University of California stated:

"I am acquainted with (subject) as a friend and student * * * I have known him since September of 1937 * * * I would not trust him * * * I could not prove that Harry Bridges was a Communist * * * I would not trust him either. (Subject) was a radical. He was a mediocre student. I teach the course on Russia and that is how I know about these fellows who are Communists. (Subject) told me that I was too hard on the Bolsheviks. He ran with the radicals and there is no question but what he is a radical and I would not hire him. There is something about him that arouses my intuition and that causes me to be afraid of his outside connections * * * I would not recommend him to the Government".

A fellow student of the subject's at the University of California stated, "I have known (subject) since 1929 as a friend and fellow student. I am surprised that he gave me as a reference because he should have known his Communist ideas would have come out. He was definitely a Communist * * * I felt like he was getting some money from the Communist Party and the other fellows did too because they would say that (subject) wasn't preaching communism for his health, and that it was a business with him. He was very sincere and I believe he was really sold on Communism * * * I would not recommend (subject) to the Government because I feel he is a Communist and very sincere in his beliefs."

The subject was discharged from a Navy School during the war for poor grades and for pro-Communist activities. Two former associates of his with FEA criticized him as lacking in ability and being a disagreeable associate.

A memorandum dated May 15, 1946, from CSA to the Office of Controls states, "investigation disclosed evidence of a material nature tending to affect adversely the subject's loyalty to the Government of the United States and its institutions. It reveals that the subject is unmistakably identified with Communist activities.

"The records of the Bureau of Naval Personnel show that he was given a Special Order Discharge on March 27, 1942, 'under honorable conditions', but confidential information obtained from a reliable source reveals that the subject was discharged because it was found he was an ardent student and advocate of Communist doctrines. The investigation indicates that in view of the danger inherent to this situation, the acknowledged qualifications of the subject are insufficient to merit employment in the Department of State."

The file reveals no action taken on the memorandum of May 15, 1946. A report of March 25, 1947, reflecting interviews with State Department associates and neighbors of the subject indicated the subject is quiet in regard to political matters and none of the persons interviewed seemed to know his political sympathies. One person said that on several occasions he has seen letters addressed to the subject from the Soviet Embassy. He also stated that several publications have been observed in the subject's mail which caused him to be suspicious of the subject's political leanings.

An official of Georgetown University advised he had hired the subject to conduct an evening class in Chinese and later learned that the subject was connected with Communist groups on the west coast.

A report of investigation conducted on April 20, 1947, reflected subject took graduate work at the University of California during the years 1937 to 1940, but that no degree was awarded him and he failed in the examination for his PhD. (it is noted here that on his Form 57 he stated he had received a PhD Degree from the University of California). Four members of the faculty at the University confirmed the subject's Communist leanings.

Another report was submitted by the New York Office on May 5, 1947, but failed to confirm the subject's communistic views.

A memorandum dated June 18, 1947 was prepared by CSA to the attention of Mr. Peurifoy. This memorandum summarized the entire case against the subject and recommended that his services be terminated. Another memorandum dated July 21, 1947, was prepared by Wilson of CSA to Boles, also of CSA, and was as follows:

"In Mr. Bullock's absence I am assigning to you the case of (No. 5). This case was evaluated on June 18, 1947, and recommendation was made (subject) be terminated from the Department; however, Mr. Peurifoy did not feel that there was sufficient evidence against (subject) in view of the fact that he had not been shown to commit any overt acts or to affiliate himself with Communist organizations. I believe that full consideration should be given to the testimony of several Catholic Priests in this case. However, it does appear that the case could be developed and that further investigation is in order".

A report of September 4, 1947, by the Washington Office set out results of an interview with the subject. During the interview, the subject stated that he would prefer a Communist regime in China to their present form of government, although his views may be contrary to the State Department's policy. He admitted having subscribed to the Daily Worker in 1940, and stated that he is a member of the American Veterans Committee, Institute of Pacific Relations and World Citizens Movement, Inc.

Four subsequent reports have been submitted: On September 12, 1947, by the Washington Office; on September 30, 1947 by the Philadelphia Office; on September 30, 1947 by New York City Office, and another on October 15, 1947, by the Washington Office.

The report of September 12, 1947, consisted of 20 pages summarizing previous investigations conducted of the subject since 1943.

The report of October 15, 1947, disclosed that the subject's previous position in an Area Division was abolished in August 1947, and he was transferred to the Division of Research replacing an employee with less seniority who was terminated. The report also states that a State Department official who knew the subject in China as well as here, said the subject's work was below par; that he is a mediocre, dull and slow-thinking individual, and that he is the only man in the Government he knows of whom he would speak unfavorably.

Another State Department official said he "considers subject weak as to ability, common sense and public relations."

In spite of the extensive investigation conducted, and the considerable derogatory information obtained, the subject was transferred in August 1947 to another Division when his previous position was abolished and he replaced another employee who was terminated.

No conclusion had been reached in this case, as of October 20, 1947, after a year and a half of investigation.

No. 6

She is employed with the Division of Central Services.

A report of December 31, 1946 reflects that witnesses describe her as being "liberal," "pink," "no more of a security risk than many others he has come into contact with if kept under proper supervision." She has been quoted as saying "Everyone in Russia has equal rights" and that in this country the minority groups were persecuted.

On January 7, 1947, a memorandum summarizing the investigation stated that nothing had been developed tending to affect adversely subject's loyalty. The file reflected that she was a shareholder in "Presentation, Inc.," the organization created by Carl Marzone which was the subject of a separate investigation by the State Department.

A memorandum of August 8, 1947 recited in detail subject's connection with the United Public Workers of America. It indicates that she was at the April 1946 conference of the UPWA at Atlantic City, New Jersey, when the pro-Russian resolution was passed. She, reportedly, favored the resolution and subsequently supported it locally. Reportedly, she also opposed the President's loyalty order in local union meetings.

This case is pending.

No. 7

She is a biographical analyst in the Biographical Information Division.

The files of a Government investigative agency indicate that a person by the same name as subject of 1418 Madison Street, NW., made application for membership in the American Youth for Democracy and the Sweethearts for Service Men organizations and has submitted her membership fees to the American Youth for Democracy Headquarters in Baltimore.

Her husband lived in New York City in 1941. An individual with his name was a Communist Party Election Petition signer. Apparently to date (October 10, 1947) no effort has been made to identify the above election petition signer as the subject's husband though the information has been on hand for several months.

The file reflects that subject did some work for the Political Action Committee in 1944 in Michigan and is active in the UPWA. Her acquaintances feel that she is a liberal Roosevelt Democrat but do not think her a Communist.

She has been under investigation since December 1946. Investigation is presently pending in the Evaluation Section.

No. 8

She was an analyst in OSS from July 1943 to August 1945, and has been employed in the Division of Map Intelligence since August 1945. Investigation by CSA on January 22, 1946, disclosed an old acquaintance of subject as saying that the subject has communistic leanings, and is a friend of (C-1), who the informant believes is a Communist. The subject reportedly told the informant it would be a good idea if we had communism in this country.

Upon interview by a CSA agent, the subject denied being a Communist, but admitted having expressed an interest in communism, stating "I am interested in everything".

On an application for a passport to Brazil in 1941, and on her Form 57, the subject gave as a reference (C-2). This individual has been connected with many Communist-front activities.

On November 21, 1946 a full investigation of the subject was requested of CSA by Mr. Bannerman. A memorandum dated June 18, 1947 from CSA to Mr. Puerifoy listed the evidence against her as stated above, but pointed out that other available information should be checked before making a security recommendation.

An investigative report dated September 26, 1947, set out a reinterview with a previous informant and that person reiterated her statements about the subject having communist leanings, and informant also said the subject regularly read the newspapers PM and the Daily Worker when she lived with the informant in 1944.

Several other persons interviewed reported favorably on the subject.

No. 9

This is an example of the failure of the Evaluation Division to recommend obvious leads for investigation. It is also a case of a questionable security risk. Subject was appointed to a very important position prior to full security investigation.

The subject is also an applicant for a position as Foreign Service career officer, and is presently a Foreign Service reserve officer under the Informational and Cultural Program. He was appointed to this position in September 1947 and was assigned to Milan, Italy, where he is engaged in the educational program. He was a major and, subsequently, lieutenant colonel in the U. S. Army from May 1943 to August 1946, where he was assigned to the educational program in Italy.

Subject's file reflects that on April 13, 1942, he was granted a passport to travel in South America representing the Division of Cultural Relations of the State Department. Assistant Secretary of State (X-1) at that time, raised the question as to the advisability of granting him a passport and finally approved it.

A memorandum dated April 13, 1942, from the Passport Division to Charles M. Thomson, Assistant Chief of the Division of Cultural Relations, stated: "A passport will be issued to (No. 9) today in accordance with the Assistant Secretary's instructions, which read as follows:

"This is the conclusion. It is a flimsy case either way. I don't think the man is politically dangerous—merely a fool.

"I see no reason for not granting the passport. I can think of several for not giving him the job—but that is already done."

"I may add that I consider the synopsis of (No. 9's) activities, as prepared by Mr. Pattee of your office, as belittling (his) association with various radical activities of the past, probably because of a lack of familiarity with the set-up and activities of such organizations."

The basis for doubt regarding the issuance of the passport was a report submitted by another Government agency to the Department concerning the applicant.

Investigation conducted in connection with the application of subject for Foreign Service Officer disclosed the following activities on his part:

* * * Member of Trade Unions Delegation to Soviet Russia in 1927.

(This delegation was repudiated by William Green, President of the A. F. of L.)

* * * A sponsor of the New Theater Guild (Communist-front organization).

* * * A member of the American Civil Liberties Union.

* * * A member of the Supervisory Committee on Progressive Education Association.

* * * Organizer of the Chicago Branch of the North American Committee to Aid the Spanish Democracy.

* * * Member of League of American Writers.

* * * Member, American Society for Cultural Relations in Russia.

All the above organizations have been identified as Communist-fronts or heavily infiltrated with Communists.

The subject has written, and collaborated in writing, with several individuals on books and articles showing Russia in a very favorable light.

He was superintendent of schools in a small city and revolutionized the educational system there. He is reported to have introduced a Russian primer in the school after having visited Russia in 1927. The Daily Worker has mentioned him in a very favorable light on a number of occasions. He signed a petition to the Secretary of Labor in 1935, requesting right of asylum for John Strachey, well-known British radical. The records in the industrial detail, Chicago Police Department, listed him as a Communist in 1930.

A summary memorandum was prepared by CSA on July 9, 1946, and stated in the first paragraph: "Investigation discloses evidence of a material nature tending to affect adversely the subject's reputation, ideologies, and his loyalty to the Government of the United States and its institutions."

A memorandum dated August 6, 1946, from "Counsel—ACOPS" to "Security Officer" regarding the applicant, stated:

"1. The file in this matter has been turned over to me by (A-R) for ACOPS. After reading the file, and after conversation with (No. 9), who was sent by A-R to see me, I reached the conclusion that the CSA recommendation, on the entire record, would not merit submission of the case as a security case. Since CON has not had an opportunity to make its recommendations on this matter, I am sending to you the file and all supplementary material received by me for your consideration and report.

"2. I note that the report of Special Agent Pirro purports to be based almost entirely on the (writings) of Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling. * * * I call your attention to the fact that Mrs. Dilling was indicted for conspiracy involving allegations close to treason, and that she would hardly seem to be an authority, whatever the merits of any particular allegation might otherwise be, as respects the loyalty to the United States of people she attacks. With reference to the CSA language with respect to the teaching of 'hatred of God' I call your attention to the fact that (subject) states that he has been an active Quaker for many years. I believe that the CSA Special Agent should be informed of the foregoing."

It appears that the writer of this memorandum was Mr. Klaus who was Counsel—ACOPS at that time, and the "A-R" referred to in the memorandum appears to have been Assistant Secretary of State Russell. It is noted that the report of Special Agent Pirro, referred to in the memorandum, was a report of 13 pages which had only 2 pages of notes from Mrs. Dillings' writing and in the report Agent Pirro pointed out having verified her statements knowing she did not have "clean hands" herself.

On August 12, 1946, a memorandum from T. E. Hoffman to R. L. Bannerman stated in the first paragraph, "I have re-read the CSA report and have noted the additional material forwarded by Mr. Klaus, and it is my opinion that the available information is not sufficient to regard the subject as a security risk." The above recommendation was confirmed on August 22, 1946, by Mr. R. L. Bannerman to Mr. Klaus by memorandum.

A CSA report of August 22, 1946, related to "a protest of the Roman Catholic Church against the subject's assignment to educational duties with the Allied Military Government in Italy." A high official (X-3) of the National Catholic Welfare Conference said that he was convinced that the applicant was not a suitable person for a position in charge of education in Italy and not a suitable representative of our Government.

Notes of a conference between (X-2), Papal Secretariat of State, Vatican City, and Lieutenant Colonel Gayre of the British Army, indicated the following regarding the applicant and two of his associates:

Gayre indicates that these men are wild theorists who lack the stability and background for the job, and who are constantly opposed to Gayre's moderate program. They are reportedly Leftists who would veer entirely in that direction if given the opportunity.

The informant pointed out that Lieutenant Colonel Gayre was applicant's supervisor in Italy when the latter was with the Army. He also referred to the appointment of Adolfo Omodeo as Rector of Naples University, and one Ferretti as Rector of the University of Palermo. Informant stated that both of these individuals are known Italian Communists and were selected for their positions by the applicant.

The applicant's file reflects that he was given a "good" efficiency rating on April 30, 1947, by an American Consul (X-4) in Italy. In preparing the rating the consul expressed the feeling that he was not overenthusiastic about the subject but made no mention regarding his being considered a security risk; however, an efficiency report of March 27, 1947, submitted by a Foreign Service inspector (X-5) states in part, "The Inspector has seen too little of (the applicant) to judge either his work or his philosophy but would be inclined to consider him decidedly of the liberal school. (The applicant) expressed an interest in remaining in the work of the Department of State once his assignment as a reserve officer terminates. The Inspector was not sufficiently convinced of outstanding ability on the part of (applicant) to spread American influence and culture in Italy, or elsewhere, to warrant a recommendation on his part toward continuing (the applicant) beyond the anticipated period of service as a reserve officer. The Inspector even feels that (applicant) might conceivably get involved unwisely in political matters within this period. He is a pedantic, tedious, conceited, impractical, pompous man who would enjoy the pleasures of the Right, but popularity with the Left." The grade rating that was given by the Inspector was "satisfactory."

The committee investigator noted that: in spite of considerable derogatory information in the file, there is a notation on file that only a spot check is to be made in connection with the subject's application for the position of Foreign Service career officer. This spot check would merely include a check of the FBI and Un-American Activities Committee records. It also was noted that the former Assistant Secretary of State has never been interviewed although the file shows he made the statement in 1942 that he could think of several reasons for not employing the subject. Likewise, there appears to be no intention of interviewing the American Consul in Italy and the Foreign Service inspector, the latter especially, since he has expressed derogatory comments regarding the subject.

No. 10

This is a case of pressure from a high Department official to give clearance to a subject although derogatory information is available.

The subject was appointed in December 1945 as a translator for "not over a year." He had previously been a special attorney with the Justice Department and was in the U. S. Marines for one year during World War II.

A report of another investigative agency, under date of January 9, 1946, advised that the subject has homosexual tendencies and made suicide attempts in 1936 and 1942.

A memorandum dated January 22, 1946, by Mr. Baumberman recommended terminating the subject's services which could be done rather easily because of his appointment being of a temporary nature. He was terminated February 19, 1946, and appealed the termination.

A memorandum dated April 1, 1946, from J. A. Panuch stated that he had interviewed the subject and reviewed various affidavits and letters of reference submitted by this subject and he rescinded the termination action of February 19, 1946. A memorandum from Mr. Panuch, dated May 28, 1946, to Mr. Fred Lyon, of the Office of Controls, referred to an opinion expressed by Mr. Lyon on May 27, 1946, that the subject was an undesirable employee because of moral depravity, and requested substantiation of Lyon's charge in writing with evidence additional to what was already in the file. Mr. Lyon's memorandum of May 31, 1946, to Mr. Panuch pointed out that dismissal of charges against the subject was premature because—

1. No complete CSA investigation had been made to determine the subject's current personal conduct.
2. No interviews were had with two witnesses who had originally reported homosexual tendencies on the part of the subject and later denied their statements in affidavits.
3. The subject is known to have an arrest record in the District of Columbia for disorderly conduct. The facts regarding this arrest had not been checked.

Mr. Lyon pointed out that this is another case where it is necessary to either resolve all doubts in favor of the individual or the Department, and he favored the latter.

A memorandum of June 19, 1947, from the Foreign Activities Correlation Division to CSA stated information had been received from a Government security division to the effect that the subject had been an enlisted man in the Marines and while such had shown undue interest in naval activities and had pro-German sentiments during the war. The memorandum also stated that investigation by another Government agency exposed him as a flagrant homosexual.

A CSA report of September 2, 1947, set out considerable information confirming the subject's homosexual activities and tendencies. It also relates an interview with an attorney who originally reported the subject a homosexual to a Government agency and who subsequently on March 2, 1946, signed an affidavit contradicting his former statement. In connection with the affidavit he informed an investigator that the subject had approached him and begged him to sign a document he had written. He said he refused, but that a short time later Mr. Joseph Panuch, representing himself to be from Assistant Secretary of State Russell's office, called him by telephone on behalf of the subject and said the subject was being ruined by statements that he had made about him. Mr. Panuch reportedly said that everyone else who had made statements against the subject's character had retracted them and the informant was the only one holding out. Mr. Panuch then reportedly asked the informant to make an affidavit rescinding the statements made by him to another Government agency. It is noted that although Panuch said everyone else had rescinded their statements against the subject, the key witness to an incident of perversion by the subject did not sign an affidavit until March 18, 1946, whereas the informant's affidavit was signed March 2, 1946. The CSA investigation developed quite conclusively that the subject had homosexual tendencies.

On September 12, 1947, a form memorandum from CSA to the Personnel Division stated that the subject is a homosexual.

He was still on the Department rolls as of October 29, 1947.

No. 11

There is nothing in the file of this former employee to indicate when he discontinued working for the Department. Mr. Hoffman has advised that he resigned. Previously, the file reflected that he was a close associate of suspected Soviet agents. Most of the derogatory information was developed in late 1946. The index card reflects that this case was closed August 30, 1946, and makes no reference to any interest in the subject subsequent to that date.

This is another illustration of the fact that the index cards do not reflect the status of the cases.

No. 12

This former employee's file is perhaps the largest physically in the files of CSA. Among other things, the file reflects that he furnished material to a known Soviet espionage agent and that he has had consistent contact with a long list of Communists and suspected Soviet agents.

On July 24, 1946, a recommendation for dismissal was made. In September 1946 further information was requested. As of October 15, 1947, there was nothing in the file to indicate whether this individual was with the Department or not, or what the final action was in his case. Inquiry of Mr. Hoffman elicited the information that he did not know what had been done in this case except that he understood the subject was no longer with the Department.

This subject was, in all probability, the greatest security risk the Department has had. It was subsequently determined from the Division of Departmental Personnel that he had resigned December 13, 1946.

No. 13

This employee was one of those dismissed under the McCarren rider. Nevertheless, there is no copy of the dismissal letter in his file. That he had been dismissed only became evident from review of a subsequent hearing afforded him. The file was found in the closed section but the index card, though reflecting a previous closing of the case, did not reflect it was subsequently opened and subsequently closed as a result of dismissal. This is just one of the cases that illustrate the rather lax manner in which the Personnel Security Branch reopens and closes cases without CSA records reflecting accurately what has taken place.

No. 14

The file reflects that this former employee signed Communist Party election petitions on a number of occasions.

On January 13, 1947, she was given a hearing. A memorandum dated March 21, 1947, from Mr. Robinson to the Security Committee said that the decision as to whether or not she was to be dismissed must rest on a policy decision of the Assistant Secretary for Administration as to what should be considered grounds for dismissal.

"That decision is whether substantial evidence of Communistic affiliations, past or present on the part of an employee, without equally substantial refutation or a substantial evidence of a change of heart, is, in and of itself, sufficient to classify the subject as a security risk and to warrant dismissal. I believe that, in the light of all the circumstances, the decision should be in the affirmative at this time."

The memorandum of April 15, 1947, relates that the Security Committee decided that she was not a security risk. The decision was made to terminate her employment on the grounds that she was an undesirable employee.

Mr. Fitch, in a memorandum for the file dated April 23, 1947, stated that Mr. Goodrich advised that she had resigned effective April 25, 1947. This case has been cited because Mr. Robinson's memorandum, quoted above, indicates his philosophy concerning who constitutes a security risk. It would indicate that he is inclined to accept a change of heart as sufficient to nullify positive evidence of a prior definite Communist activity.

No. 15

Investigation in this case has been conducted after sufficient evidence had been obtained to indicate that he is not a suitable employee for the State Department.

This individual was employed by UNRRA prior to August 26, 1947, when he filed his application for a position with the State Department.

A CSA report, dated September 23, 1947, includes an interview with a reference of the applicant's who stated that he would not recommend the applicant because of his morals, criminal record and association with Communists. A check was made by the CSA Investigator at the Rikers Island, N. Y., Penitentiary, and it was verified that the subject had been arrested and convicted in 1928, 1931 and 1939 on charges of nonsupport. The investigation in this case was still continuing in Washington with several leads outstanding as of October 31, 1947.

No. 16

The subject applied for a clerical position in November 1946. A derogatory report was received from the Detroit office of CSA on January 23, 1947, which stated that subject is a psychopathic case, a personnel problem, and has been an unsatisfactory employee in other places where employed.

A report from Detroit on January 28, 1947, reflects that she made attempts at suicide in 1937 and 1946, and that she has been carried as a psychopathic case on the records of the Detroit Department of Public Welfare since 1930; however, additional investigation was conducted at Boston, Mass., in March 1947 and as of October 2, 1947, leads were still pending in Washington, D. C.

A check of the records of the Personnel Division of the State Department revealed that she was appointed on December 26, 1946, to a clerical position. This appointment was made "subject to investigation" but the Personnel Division had received no reports from CSA.

No. 17

This man is a Foreign Service applicant.

A report dated September 19, 1947, from New York shows beyond any doubt that the applicant is a fourthusher, unreliable, and not truthful. Nevertheless, on the same day, additional leads were set out and there is no indication that the investigation will not be terminated until all references of prior employers and schools have been checked.

No. 18

She is an applicant for a position with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange.

A report in the file reflects that she was with Foreign Service from May 11, 1943, to April 13, 1944, and was not a very satisfactory employee. Her record indicates that she jumps from job to job. A report of September 4, 1947, reflects that most of her recent employers have not been satisfied with her work. Her investigation continues.

Mr. Hoffman, when questioned concerning the desirability and necessity of continuing to investigate an individual who obviously is an undesirable employee, stated that the policy was to continue until all the investigation was completed. This is in line with the policy as already set out in this report.

No. 19

He is an applicant for the Office of Foreign Service with the Foreign Service Institute as an instructor. He is, apparently, presently employed as a linguist with the Interior Department. The file reflects that he is a brilliant linguist, but a psychopathic case, and unfit for teaching though possibly quite satisfactory on linguistic research.

One office reference is suspected of having Communist Party connections. A memorandum from another governmental investigating agency dated June 10, 1947, shows subject has a possible Communist Party connection. Reports of June 20 and 23 reflect that he had been a poor instructor. Reports were still coming in as of September 8, 1947. The case was still pending on October 7, 1947.

No. 20

He is an applicant for a position with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange.

In an evaluation report of February 19, 1947, it is indicated that he had been an employment risk. He belonged to numerous "liberal" organizations such as the "American League for Peace and Democracy," and the "National Federation for Constitutional Liberties." His associates say that he is a liberal, not "red" but rather unstable. He, his sister and father all apparently spent time in mental hospitals. A report dated July 7, 1947, shows that his health is uncertain.

As of September 29, 1947, he was still being investigated. In this instance, there appears to be no justification for continuing this investigation.

No. 21

This is an example of expenditure of considerable investigative effort after substantial derogatory information was available.

This individual is an applicant for a position in the Division of Research for Europe. He was born in Posen, Poland, in 1913, and was naturalized in New York City in 1942. He was with OSS from May 1942 to May 1946, and with UNRRA from May 1946 to January 1947.

Information received from another Governmental investigative agency on May 2, 1947, indicates that subject was a contact of E-1, a known Communist, and suspected Espionage Agent. In speaking of going to Germany when he was with OSS, he had told her, "I think the Russians will dominate the situation, they deserve to. The inefficiency of the AMGOT in Italy is terrible."

A highly confidential source revealed that in August 1942, a known Communist who solicited money from Local No. 203 of the United Federal Workers of America for Allied War Relief received a contribution from the subject. A reliable informant reported that he was a member of the Washington Book Shop.

Considerable investigation has been conducted since the above information was furnished on May 2, 1947, and the matter had not been decided for or against the applicant as of October 15, 1947. Two witnesses who worked with him said he has definite Leftist tendencies and associated with Communists while in Italy. Several others stated that he is a Liberal.

It is noted that an Agent of the Washington Office of the CSA, who has handled most of the investigation in this matter, stated that he has spent three weeks to a month on it and still has work to do, and that other Agents have worked a total of about two weeks on the case. All of this investigative effort had been expended after May 2, 1947, when the derogatory information concerning him was received.

No. 22

This is another example of an applicant investigation being conducted after considerable derogatory information was already in the file. He is an applicant for Foreign Service Career Officer, and was employed by the State Department in 1936 and remained to 1940, and was then with the National Defense Advisory Committee for OPA from 1940 to 1947.

On June 23, 1947, the following information was received by CSA from another Governmental investigative agency:

1. Confidential informant reported him as a member of the Communist Party (but this was denied by the subject on interview).
2. His name appeared in the indices of the Washington Chapter of the American Peace Mobilization (he denied being a member during interview).
3. He is reported to have attended the Youth Internationale in Russia in 1934 or 1935. (This has not been confirmed and subject denies it.)
4. An informant in the State Department states he received a number of unfavorable reports on the subject from 1936 to 1940—one to the effect he was intensely interested in everything pertaining to Russia even though not pertinent to his work.

5. He was discharged from the A. F. of L. Federation of Government Employees on charges of Communistic activities.

6. He and his wife were on the membership rolls of the American Peoples' Mobilization.

7. He has been an active member of the American Civil Liberties Union and actively participated in a protest against the discharge of Myra Collins, a colored Government worker accused of Left Wing agitation.

8. He has been associated with the following persons who are active in Communist Front organizations:

(a) (C-3), active in the United Federal Workers of America, and a member of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action and American Peace Mobilization.

(b) (C-4), member of the Washington Society for Democratic Action and the American League for Peace and Democracy.

(c) (C-5), a member of the American League for Peace and Democracy.

(d) (C-6), a left-Wing Socialist.

9. He is said to have been a member of a central group spearheading an attack on J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI.

In spite of the substantial derogatory information above set out, this individual was still being investigated as an applicant as of October 6, 1947.

No. 23

This applicant was an Economic Adviser in Japan for the War Department from November 1945 until the date of the application.

He worked with (E-2) and (E-3) at the Treasury Department. The latter speaks highly of him. Two government investigative agencies list his affiliations with questionable organizations. He was apparently a member of the "American League Against War and Fascism" (later the American League for Peace and Democracy). He was a member of the "American League for Peace and Democracy." In 1936 he was a member of the "United Federal Workers of America" and was still active in 1943.

A confidential informant associated with the subject in Japan said that he had a poor personality and would make a poor Foreign Service officer.

A former supervisor of his in Ankara spoke very unfavorably of him. The file contains an unfavorable memorandum dated July 30, 1947, and unfavorable reports dated August 7, August 22, and September 8.

He apparently belonged to questionable groups in college. His parents are both Russian born. A penciled note on top of the file says "Needs checks only," thus indicating that if the checks revealed no derogatory information he is being given security clearance. If he is not being given security clearance, there appears to be little necessity for continuing the investigation.

No. 24

The file reflects that this Foreign Service applicant while with OSS handled unvouched funds in a very questionable manner. When he left OSS, he was indebted to that organization for approximately $26,000. The legal counsel for CIG is reportedly now attempting to collect this. There is a possibility that this indebtedness was due to a misunderstanding of instructions on the part of the subject.

The subject has worked for (E-3), (E-4), (E-2), (E-5), (E-6), and (E-7), all of whom vouched for his loyalty. Credit records indicate that persons describe him as irresponsible. (E-2) said that he had sent subject to Lisbon for the Treasury Department. (C-7) also vouched for him.

A reference hinted that he would want to check the subject carefully before recommending him. A letter from the applicant, dated April 16, 1947, states that he is a Deputy Chief in the Division of Monetary Research, Treasury Department, at $7,581 per annum.

When in Lisbon subject attended a party given by a suspected Russian undercover agent against the Ambassador's recommendation. Several acquaintances report that he has a gift for antagonizing people.

There is no indication of any action as of October 10, 1947, being taken since the report dated September 24, 1947, which indicates that he may possibly be satisfactory from a loyalty standpoint but otherwise a very undesirable employee. Investigation is apparently pending.

No. 25

Consideration is still being given this applicant, although he is a known Communist Party member, and a recommendation has been made that his brother, who is now employed by the Department, be dismissed for security reasons.

He has filed application for a position as Administrative Officer at $8,179 per annum. Investigation of his case was started on April 9, 1947. Another Governmental investigative agency advised, on April 13, 1947, that a reliable informant said subject, who is employed by the Civil Service Commission, is a member of the underground Communist group in Washington, D. C. This informant further advised that the subject and his wife paid a social call on December 11, 1945, on a functionary of a Soviet Espionage ring in Washington, D. C., and on December 29, 1945, his wife contacted the wife of another Soviet Espionage functionary and identified herself by saying her husband was acquainted with the functionary. The informant also advised that a brother of the subject was a member of, and active in, the Jackson Heights, Long Island, Branch of the Communist Party in 1944. Further information was obtained to the effect that the subject himself has been a member of the Communist Party.

Subsequent investigation was conducted and reports were submitted on May 14, 19, and June 27, 1947, without further evidence being developed. This case is presently in a pending, inactive status awaiting action concerning his brother.

No. 26

This is a pending investigation of an applicant for the position of Commodity Specialist in the State Department. He was with UNRRA from April 1, 1944, to October 15, 1946, handling procurement of commodities.

A Government investigative agency has reported that it has received information from a highly confidential source that the subject has been in contact with several subjects of a Russian Espionage case. Although this investigation is still pending, the Personnel Department advised upon inquiry by the Staff that it has no action pending regarding employment of the subject, and the Office of Foreign Personnel likewise advised that it was not considered employing subject.

No. 27

This applicant worked for the Foreign Economic Administration for three months in 1945, and was with the War Department from July 1944 until June 1946. Investigation at these two agencies resulted in unfavorable recommendations of the applicant; however, several leads were outstanding as of September 29, 1947, although upon inquiry the Personnel Department advised that its records failed to disclose that this applicant is being considered for a position. The Foreign Personnel Department had no record of the applicant.

No. 28

He is a Production Supervisor of Motion Pictures for OIE in New York City. Request for investigation was made on August 8, 1946, and CSA sent a memorandum to New York City on August 13, 1946, stating that a man by the same name from 1746 East 13th Street, Kings, New York City, signed a Communist Petition in the State of New York in 1942. There were no reports submitted as of October 2, 1947.

No. 29

This employee has been with the Government since July 1942. The Un-American Activities Committee records show that a person with the same name as the subject residing in New York City, signed a Communist Party Election Petition in New York in 1940. A memorandum furnishing this information is dated October 28, 1946. Nevertheless, to date (September 29, 1947), no effort to check out this information has been made.

No. 30

This employee is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange. A memorandum of December 20, 1946, shows that the House Un-American Activities Committee records reveal that an individual of the same name as the subject residing in New York City was a signer of a Communist Party Election Petition. As of September 29, 1947, nothing had been done to determine if the signer of the Election Petition and the Departmental employee were identical.

No. 31

He is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City. On November 1, 1946, New York advised that a man of the same name as subject of 743 Alabama Avenue, Kings, New York City, signed a Communist Party Election Petition in 1942. However, to date (September 29, 1947) no effort had been made to identify the signer of the Election Petition although it would be a relatively simple matter to determine if the subject and the signer were identical.

No. 32

She is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City. She was born in Russia in 1896; became a naturalized United States citizen in 1938. From July 1934 to April 1940 and from February 1941 to May 1941, she worked for the Amtorg Trading Corporation. From June 1941 to August 1941 she worked for the National Maritime Union. She listed an Amtorg employee as a reference. The War Department records are the only ones that have been checked to date. She was with OWI from February 1945 to February 1946 and since that time has been with the State Department.

No. 33

She is a good example of a subject about whom little is known in spite of what is construed as a complete investigation. In this instance, the applicant furnished reference and recited her school history. Though the references were interviewed and the high-school attendance verified, no effort was made to interview her school associates or her neighbors. Under the circumstances, it could not be anticipated that anything unfavorable would likely be developed.

In this connection, further reference is made to the case of No. 34. In his case, no suspicion was attached to him as a result of his investigation. The suspicion arose only because of his activities while employed at the State Department. His investigation could hardly have developed such information inasmuch as no one other than his references was interviewed concerning his character or loyalty.

No. 34

He is a messenger in the Division of Central Services detailed to the Division of Protective Services.

In a memorandum dated June 30, 1947, the Division of Protective Services' Chief called attention to the fact that the subject evidenced an unusual interest in the mail. The following appeared in the memorandum:

"In a recent discussion with one of the members of the Division, he is supposed to have remarked that the two least Democratic countries in the world are the United States and Great Britain and that he would like to go to Russia."

He was cleared originally for employment on June 2, 1946, as a result of an investigation which consisted of the following:

"His military certificate of discharge was reviewed, the Personnel Office was consulted concerning his previous record with the State Department, the records of the Registrar's Office at Howard University were examined, three references were interviewed, the customary name checks were made with the Police, FBI, credit, Passport Division, and Un-American Activities Committee."

In this connection it will be noted that aside from the three references, no one was questioned during the course of his investigation concerning his actions, attitudes and beliefs.

His investigation is pending.

No. 35

This applicant graduated from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1940 where she majored in Bible study. She has had a long list of employers. Everyone contacted to date has reported favorably concerning the applicant. Nevertheless, a very extensive investigation is being conducted to find all her previous employers though in a couple of instances she was employed there many years ago and for a very brief period. This is an example of where an additional amount of investigator's time is being consumed in interviewing individuals who, in all probability, will be unable to furnish much pertinent information and therefore there is nothing to indicate that such interviews are desirable or necessary.

No. 36

In this case a supplementary lead was set out to determine when this applicant left the Navy though examination of his application shows that the year 1947 was inadvertently given instead of 1946 because he was employed from 1946 on. This would tend to illustrate the point that so much investigative attention is directed toward every minute of previous employment that very little of the limited agent time is left for more searching inquiry into the applicant's past associations, etc.

No. 37

This employee is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange. In this case though nothing was developed to cast suspicion on the subject a needlessly exhaustive investigation was made. This was done though there are numerous important uncovered leads outstanding in other cases. This is an example of where closer supervision would result in a better utilization of available man power.

No. 38

This case clearly shows the desirability of interviewing applicants prior to extensive investigation. This person had filed application for a clerical position in the State Department.

Investigation of her background was conducted on May 21, June 3, 4, 5, and 16, 1947, at Jefferson City, Canton, Shelbyville, Chillicothe, and St. Louis—all in Missouri. Finally, on June 16, a personal interview of applicant was conducted by the CSA representative in St. Louis and he gave an unfavorable recommendation of the applicant on the basis of the interview. Nevertheless, he stated after reporting on the interview that he would submit a supplemental report after checking one more employment record.

The case was still pending as of September 25, 1947. On November 6, 1947, the Personnel Division advised that this applicant is not being considered for a position.

No. 39

The report of interviewing agent dated September 18, 1947, was unfavorable. The report of August 12, 1947, had been unfavorable. The file reflects that the applicant is uncertain as to his prior history; nevertheless, investigation of this case was continuing as of September 29, 1947.

No. 40

This employee is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City.

His application is very sketchy. There has been no investigation. (C-8) is a reference. Though he is 43 years of age, his file reflects no history prior to June 1941.

Case is awaiting a report from the New York Office.

No. 41

This employee is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City where he has been since September 25, 1942.

His case is typical of that of many of OIE employees in New York.

Though 47 years of age, there is no data in his file as to his whereabouts prior to October 1941. As a result, nothing as to his past activity has been checked, nor can it very readily be checked until he is interviewed.

No. 42

She is a typist with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City and has worked on a part-time basis since April 22, 1947.

She has been in the United States since 1930. She is not a citizen and has applied for her first papers.

There are gaps in her employment record but she indicates that she was with the Russian Embassy in Turkey from 1920 to 1923. Since 1944 she has been with the Russian Children's Welfare Society.

No. 43

This is a case of failure to closely follow and supervise an important security case.

The subject is employed in a responsible position in the Broadcasting Division, World-Wide News Unit, OIE, New York City. An investigation was requested of the New York Office of CSA on August 8, 1946. A 13-page report was submitted by the New York Office on December 4, 1946. A summary of the investigation was prepared by CSA on December 10, 1946, which is as follows:

"Investigation discloses evidence of a material nature tending to affect adversely subject's loyalty to the Government of the United States and its institutions.

"It revealed that when subject was employed as a reporter for a newspaper from 1936 to 1939, he held an office in the American Newspaper Guild. Subject was very liberal in his political thinking and associated himself at times with the Left-Wing element of this organization.

"Investigation further revealed that when the subject was employed as a rewrite man for a newspaper, from 1930 to 1936, he was reported to have been Vice President of the Newark Chapter of the American Newspaper Guild during and after his employment by this paper. He was further reported to have been one of the leaders of the strike of the editorial staff employed by this paper which occurred in March 1934, and lasted until April 1935. According to one informant, however, subject could not be called an agitator in this strike, as the consensus was that it had been thoroughly justified. The informant further stated, though, that the subject definitely identified himself with the Left group and because of his office in the Guild, his Leftist or Communist Party Line policy dominated the affairs of the Guild. This informant hesitated to definitely state whether or not the subject was communistic in his political thinking, but it was his opinion that he was exceedingly liberal, pro-Labor and 'slightly pink.'

"Investigation further revealed, according to an informant who was Managing Editor of a newspaper on which the subject was employed, that the subject is communistic. This informant commented that he had often engaged the subject in conversation along Communist lines and that he was very outspoken and fanatical on the subject. Subject is very pro-Labor, anti-Capitalistic, and definitely followed the Communist Party line. Informant also stated that in the latter days of subject's employment on the newspaper, he had found him very unreliable on reporting news coverage of any industrial, labor, or political situation. Subject was reported to have colored his reports with communistic theory, and did not give complete and unbiased coverage to such stories.

"Investigation also disclosed, according to another informant who knew subject very well, that subject and his brother are definitely communistic. In 1937 subject was reported to have been the principle organizer and strike leader of a strike amongst the editorial staff of a newspaper of which informant was Associate Publisher. While this strike affected only eight people, during the first week of the strike, subject organized 50 to 75 people to picket the office. During the strike Mr. Milton Kaufman, of the New York Chapter of the American Newspaper Guild, was in conference on several occasions with the subject. Subject appeared to be taking orders from Mr. Kaufman who is reported to be a well-known Communist.

"Investigation would seem to indicate that serious consideration should be given the determination whether subject should be retained in the Department of State."

A review of the report of December 4, 1946, disclosed, in addition to what is in the summary, that another investigative agency advised that a reliable informant said in November 1944, that a well-known Communist in Newark, N. J., advised him that the subject was a Communist Party member.

On January 23, 1947, R. L. Bannerman requested further investigation to be conducted by CSA. There are, however, no subsequent reports in the file since the report of December 4, 1946, although this could certainly be classified as an important security case.

No. 44

This is a case of appointment to an important position from the security standpoint without prior security clearance. The subject was born in 1901 in Germany. His Form #57 indicates he obtained a B. S. Degree from the University of Detroit in 1931. He was employed by the Soviet Purchasing Commission and its subsidiary Autostroy from 1932 to July 1945. At the time of application in September 1946, he was employed by the Department of Commerce.

On interview in June 1947 by a CSA Investigator, Victor Kravchenko stated that the applicant had to be a Communist Party member, or a strong sympathizer in order to hold a position with the Soviet Purchasing Commission as long as he did, or in fact, for any appreciable length of time.

There was no indication in the file that security clearance had been given in this case; however, contact with the Personnel Division disclosed that he was appointed on January 2, 1947, for a position as Economic Analyst in Research and Intelligence.

No. 45

This individual has been a Correspondence Research Clerk in the Division of Public Liaison since March 1947. She was formerly with the Office of Foreign Liquidation Committee and with the War Department.

There are no indications in the file that any investigation has been conducted regarding her background; however, information was received on October 9, 1947, from a former supervisor in the War Department to the effect that she is a Communist.

The file was reopened on the basis of this information, but no report was submitted as of October 31, 1947.

No. 46

This is another example of employment of a person to a responsible position without full information.

The subject was born in 1910 at Cleveland, Ohio. He was with the LaFollette Civil Rights Committee from June 1936 to June 1940, and subsequently with OPA, the Board of Economic Warfare, RFC, OSS, and was appointed to the Department as an Assistant Chief in the Division of Occupied Areas at $8,478.75 per annum. Investigation of the subject was conducted by CSA intermittently from December 1946 to August 1947, and disclosed that most of his close associates and friends have records as fellow travelers or Communists, and he is classified by most persons interviewed as a Leftist. No definite evidence of Communist activities on his part was obtained, but he admitted to a Government Investigator in 1942, having contributed money to the American League for Peace and Democracy.

There is no record in the file that he was given security clearance prior to his employment.

This case was in the hands of the Evaluation Section as of October 31, 1947, and no report had been submitted subsequent to August 13, 1947. There is a memorandum in the file, dated January 3, 1947, by Bannerman, which stated that Leo Garney called on December 30, 1946, inquiring as to whether the Security Office had disapproved the subject for appointment. The memorandum indicates Garney as saying that Pannch had disapproved him. There is no further explanation as to these statements of disapproval of the subject, but it is noted that he was appointed.

No. 47

The subject came to the United States from Germany in 1940 and was naturalized in Alabama in 1943. He was in the United States only from August 1943 to January 1946, after which he was a Civilian employee of the War Department in Germany. He was appointed to the State Department in November 1946 on the basis of an advance security clearance.

On January 7, 1947 a Government investigative agency informed that it has no file on the subject, but has information that his brother and sister may be possible agents of the Comintern and that they are active in Communist activities.

Through investigation by CSA, it was determined that the subject was an instructor for one year at Olivet College and was a close friend of a Professor there who was known for his pro-Communist views. This College is known as being very liberal.

A memorandum, dated February 6, 1947, prepared by CSA, stated "investigation discloses evidence of a material nature, tending to affect adversely the subject's loyalty to the Government of the United States and its Institutions."

Another investigative report was submitted on April 8, 1947, but no subsequent action was taken until the subject submitted his resignation on May 26, 1947.

No. 48

This is another case of appointment to an important position from the security standpoint without prior investigation.

This individual applied for a position with the Department on June 4, 1947; was immediately appointed and assigned to Warsaw, Poland, as a Secretary to the Ambassador. She left the United States for Warsaw on June 11, 1947.

Investigation disclosed that the subject, who is an American citizen, served in the Polish Women's Army from 1941 to 1946. Interviews with her references were excellent as to loyalty and character except for one who felt that the applicant's loyalty to Poland was equal to that of her loyalty to the United States.

Neighborhood investigation disclosed that the applicant was a member of a heavy drinking group with loose morals. She appears to have a reputation in her neighborhood as being a heavy drinker and promiscuous. The investigation is continuing.

No. 49

The subject is a Research Analyst in the Division of Research for the Far East. In December 1942 he was transferred from a clerical position in the Post Office Department at New York City to the Board of Economic Warfare, on request of the latter agency. He was made an Intelligence Clerk with that agency. On June 7, 1945 he was recommended by E-21, who is a suspect in a Soviet Espionage case as a candidate for Administrative Intern Training. Nevertheless, no investigation has been conducted of the subject in this case although he appears closely tied in with the Espionage suspect.

* * * * *

The following individuals, numbers 50-65, inclusive, comprise some of the more important security cases in the Department who are not grouped under specific categories or specifically referred to in the section of the report on CSA.

No. 50

He was, until July 25, 1947, with an important policy board.

A memorandum of August 1, 1947 requested clearance as he was to go to Paris on a conference. A note dated September 15, 1947, said "Cleared for UNESCO Placement." The subject was described in reports by various witnesses as "interested in Communism as an experiment but his political philosophy is in keeping with liberal new-deal social reform under Democratic processes of Government"; "he is a very ardent New Dealer"; "he is a live liberal"; but an informant who also lived at the International House at one time said "He was one of those accused of being a Red here but the people who do get up and talk Communism are refuted."

The file reflects that he is a friend of (C-9) whose father is suspected by many as being a Communist. One of his associates is (C-10).

A penciled note addressed to "David" and signed "M" dated January 28, 1947, inquires if subject is having another mental breakdown (File reveals he did at one time) and says "Place before Committee as security hazard—possible break and embarrassment if Congress gets on this."

No. 51

He is employed in the Office of an Assistant Secretary.

Nothing derogatory was developed by his investigation. A memorandum of August 2, 1946, by Mr. Bannerman indicated that subject is friendly with (E-8) and, by surveillance, had been placed in contact with a member of an espionage group. He was approved for appointment September 25, 1946.

A memorandum of December 13, 1946, indicates that subject had General Hildring intervene with Assistant Secretary Russell on behalf of (E-8) and (E-9). (E-8) is very closely tied up with Soviet espionage agents and (E-9) had a very bad record of Communist Party connections.

In late 1946 or early 1947 (E-8) went with the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees and his appointment investigation was discontinued.

(E-9), whose file reflects that he was without any doubt an active Communist, was employed by FEA in 1942. From there he was transferred to the Auxiliary Foreign Service. While with the Auxiliary Foreign Service, he became an applicant for a position in the State Department in February 1946.

In a memorandum to Mr. Russell, dated November 6, 1946, General Hildring said that he needed (E-9) badly in a peace expedition. He was transferred to the Foreign Service November 12, 1946.

A memorandum dated November 25, 1946, indicated this individual had been ordered removed on November 13, 1946, and to be out of the Department no later than November 15, 1946. He was observed working as late as November 20, 1946, and had access to classified material as late as November 22, 1946. A memorandum of November 27, 1946, pointed out that No. 51 was pushing this individual's appointment and possibly he and this individual were both associates of (E-10), an alleged Russian espionage agent.

No. 52

He was formerly a ranking official and presently occupies a high diplomatic post.

A memorandum dated April 24, 1947 from another Government investigative agency says "Nothing in addition to information previously furnished." The other information referred to is not in the file. Mr. Hoffman is of the opinion that it is being held somewhere by one of the higher officials of the Department. He was unable to locate it after a search of several days.

A raincoat, believed to be the subject's, was found on September 28, 1946, by guards in the men's room of the State Department Building. In the pockets were papers which were believed to be those of a Russian language student. The subject does not know Russian and is not studying Russian and there is apparently no explanation for the papers found in his coat pocket. A State Department investigator wrote the following memorandum pertaining to the subject on October 25, 1947:

"In connection with my investigation into affairs of the Institute of Pacific Relations, I am in receipt of information which appears to be most incriminating against a State Department personality. My informant stated that (X-6, a special emissary) for Franklin D. Roosevelt, has divulged the following story and that, furthermore, information relating to this incident is in possession of (U. S. Senator X-7).

"In April 1945 (X-6) told my informant he was in London and was to depart shortly for Tehran. A few minutes before his plane left the airport, 50 miles from London (X-8, a high official in OSS) arrived at the airport seeking him. (The OSS official) told (the President's representative) that a telegram, which had been prepared by President Roosevelt to send to Chungking, China, had been 'picked up at Moscow'; that an investigation had concluded the possibility that the leak of information could have occurred in Washington, because the information in the telegram reached Moscow before the actual telegram left Washington. (The OSS official) stated that (a high official of the State Department, No. 52) had been observed contacting a man in Washington, and that this man, after leaving (the Department official) had been followed to the Soviet Embassy. (The OSS official) was clearly disturbed by this occurrence and warned (the emissary) against divulging information of a secret nature which might reach (this Department official—No. 52)."

This case is in a pending status.

No. 53

He is a ranking official in the Office of Financial and Development Policy. He was appointed August 12, 1946.

On September 30, 1946, a Government investigative agency reported that subject was scheduled as a speaker before the Maryland Citizens Council in Baltimore on a given date. Many members of this group were members of the Communist Party and others were individuals who had followed the Communist Party line.

He had been with the Treasury Department and very closely associated with (E-2), (E-3) and (E-7). He was, reportedly, particularly close and harmonious with the first mentioned individual who was a reference on his application.

Subject, reportedly, recited the fact that several people in his office were recently dismissed by the Department and he said that the procedure in ousting the individuals was rather vicious.

He has requested the appointment of (No. 100), a classmate at Harvard, who is also presently being investigated by the State Department. That classmate appears to be closely associated with the (E-2) crowd.

The subject, in collaboration with two others, wrote a book for the National Planning Association. One coauthor, a former editor of the New Masses, has a very questionable background. A review of the book by Foreign Activities Correlation concluded "Aside from this sympathy through half-truths, there is no evidence, after a brief perusal of the book, of anything in it inimical to the United States."

This investigation is pending.

No. 54

He holds a high position in the Department.

A memorandum dated March 22, 1946, by Mr. Bannerman to Mr. Russell (at that time Assistant Secretary for Administration) summarized the investigation of this individual to that date and pointed out that he had been affiliated with the magazine Amerasia from May 1937 to November 1941. This magazine consistently followed the Communist Party line. It was under the direction of, and its articles and activities controlled by, Philip Jaffe and Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Field has been outstanding in Communist activities and has been head of the American Peace Mobilization. He has been a contributing columnist for the Daily Worker.

Jaffe has been active with Communist-front organizations and lectured at the Jefferson School of Social Activities. He was also treasurer for the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship. When affiliated with Amerasia, subject worked closely with these individuals.

Not mentioned in the memorandum, cited above but previously developed was the fact that the subject was closely related with the Institute of Pacific Relations which has been composed of both loyal and questionable individuals. The recommendation made in the memorandum of March 22, 1946, follows:

"On behalf of the above information, it is recommended that action be instituted to terminate subject's services with the State Department. It is suggested, to achieve this purpose, that an appropriate officer of the Department should inform (subject) that his continued presence in the Department is embarrassing to the Department and that he be given an opportunity to resign. If (subject) should not resign voluntarily, action should be instituted under Civil Service Rule XII to terminate his services with the Department."

T. E. Hoffman in a memorandum dated June 18, 1947, summarizing the case, included information subsequently developed that subject requested a Communist sympathizer (C-11) to accept a position with the Board of Economic Warfare.

Reportedly, subject has been visited on several occasions by (C-12), an alien allegedly sympathetic to the Communist cause. Subject has also since recommended two former employees of the Amerasia Editorial Board to positions with the State Department. This memorandum concludes with the following two sentences:

"It is not believed by this office that the information at hand raises a reasonable doubt as to (subject's) loyalty to the United States and, accordingly, security clearance is recommended. However, this office intends at a later date, when the personnel is available, to review the issues of Amerasia Magazine from 1937 to 1941 and to determine if the contents of the articles are such as to have a bearing on the security status of subject."

NOTE.—In this connection, in October 1947, Hoffman advised that he has time to date to accomplish this review.

A report dated August 18, 1947, recorded an interview with a former member of the Editorial Board of Amerasia, believed to be very reliable, who pointed out the radical viewpoints of most of the members of this Board. He classified subject as "far to the left—awfully close to a fellow traveler" and later modified this by referring to him as "radical liberal." The file reflects that an individual by subject's name, located in the National Press Building (Note: Subject was located there in 1941), was a subscriber to the Daily Worker and also a member of the Capital City Forum.

(C-13), an alleged Communist Party member, has twice worked for subject. One of subject's associates, when interviewed, said that he "went through the usual left-wing stage, as did most of the young people identified with the Association during their twenties and thirties."

There is no indication that further investigation is contemplated in this case.

No. 55

This individual was employed in March 1944 as Division Assistant in the Division of Internal Security. She had been employed for a number of years by the American Association of University Women in connection with International Education. In July 1946 she was assigned to a position as a representative to UNESCO at $8,778. Her previous highest salary with the American Association of University Women was $4,000 per annum.

This case was assigned for investigation by CSA in November 1943. Interviews with references and a check of school records resulted in nothing derogatory. The case was reopened for security investigation on April 28, 1947, on oral information received by CSA concerning her husband reportedly being a Communist. He is employed in a responsible position with the Navy Bureau of Ordnance.

A CSA report on August 15, 1947, indicated as a result of contact with seven associates and former supervisors of subject that she reportedly was a Liberal. Her husband, according to the informants, has a highly confidential position with the Navy Department and was possibly present at the Bikini Atom Bomb Test.

The House Un-American Activities Committee advised on August 18, 1947, X-9, an admitted former Communist Party member, was formerly associated with the subject in Communist Party activities in Washington, D. C. Interview with this informant by the CSA Agent indicated that the subject's husband had admitted to him in 1929 or 1930 that he was a member of the Communist Party in Baltimore, Maryland. The informant also advised that the subject had associated with a group of known Communists. The informant said he had not seen the subject for over ten years.

On July 16, 1947, it was ascertained that in 1941 a Senate Investigating Committee had stated the subject and her husband were members of the Communist Party. On September 15, 1947, a Government investigative agency advised that early in 1941 a reliable informant reported the subject as a Communist. Further, that the subject had been recently contacting a subject of a Soviet Espionage case.

This investigation is in a pending status.

No. 56

The subject was born in 1909 in London, England. He came to the United States in 1934 and taught at Amherst College from September 1934 to June 1936 at $2,500 per annum. He also taught at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, New York, from September 1936 to June 1942 at $3,000 per annum. Since June 1942 he has been employed by the U. S. Government—first, by the Board of Economic Warfare, then by the Foreign Economic Administration, and subsequently by the War Department. He is now a Special Assistant to an Assistant Secretary of State at $8,750 per annum.

Investigation disclosed that he was a student of Harold Laski, from 1927 to 1931, and he was in his employ as a research assistant from 1931 to 1933. He was naturalized in the United States in 1944. Subject was highly recommended by several witnesses although several stated he is a Socialist and anti-Fascist.

A former Department employee, E-9, about whom derogatory information has been obtained by CSA, recommended the subject very highly and the subject in turn had recommended E-9 highly.

The subject wrote a book which the CSA investigator reviewed and reports is anti-Capitalistic as well as anti-Fascist. In 1937 the subject contributed a book review to the publication "Science and Society" which on its face says "A Marxian Quarterly."

A memorandum of February 25, 1947, points out, in addition to the above, that the subject is a friend of (E-11), a suspect in a Russian Espionage case. Further investigation was requested in this memorandum.

A memorandum dated June 16, 1947, from CSA to Mr. Puerifoy, summarizes the above information, pointing out in addition that the subject's sister was reported a Communist Party member in 1944, and an individual believed to be a relative was a Communist Party member in England. It has not been definitely established whether that individual is a relative of the subject.

Although this is a pending case, there has been nothing in file since June 16, 1947.

No. 57

He is presently employed in the Office of Far Eastern Affairs. Derogatory information concerning this individual, which appears in his file, is confined to reference to a speech he made in New York City in 1946 at a meeting sponsored by the Japanese-American Committee for Democracy. It is fairly well established that the meeting was a Communist-controlled and sponsored gathering. On the program with him was Andrew Roth and R. W. Stephan Fritchman. The first mentioned of these two individuals was remembered as having been accused of turning over Government documents to outside sources and was determined to be a close associate of such individuals as Philip Jaffe. The latter named individual has taken a prominent part in numerous Communist front organizations.

Subject was also a reference for (C-14) who has been described as a "pink." C-14 also is known as a contact of Philip Jaffe.

Case closed August 12, 1947.

No. 58

The file indicates that he is presently assigned to UNESCO.

Information received October 22, 1946, from several sources, indicated that subject associated and was in sympathy with various left-wing elements. Another informant stated that he is a friend of C-15 who was removed from the Department on the basis of his long record of Communist activities. An informant stated that the subject and No. 54 were trying to secure a position for C-15 in the Cultural Relations Division of the Department even though his record as a Communist was well known.

NOTE.—No. 54 and subject were both in Cultural Relations at the time.

The informant also said that subject was trying to place C-16, an alleged London Communist, in that Division. Several informants pointed out that the subject had, on several occasions, appeared on programs with pro-Soviet individuals.

An article in the Daily Worker, 1946, indicates that he addressed a meeting concerning films for UNESCO along with Thomas J. Brandon of the Film Council of America, a well-known Communist propagandist.

A letter from a Government investigative agency of June 20, 1946, indicates the subject, when still with Cultural Relations, prevented the American Federation of Labor representative from being included on a list of educators for Japan. The informant in this matter indicated the belief that the A. F. of L. representative's name was omitted deliberately.

This investigation is pending.

No. 59

He is with the Division of Occupied Areas.

His wife is with the Division of Research and Intelligence. The file reflects that the subjects are regarded as liberals and possessors of leftist views but contains very little derogatory information.

He has an application on file for the Foreign Service. A memorandum dated December 3, 1946, pertaining to the subjects contains the following last two paragraphs:

"The Security Office has carefully reviewed the entire files on the subject cases. On the basis of present available information, the Security Office is of the opinion that there is insufficient information to warrant a recommendation for termination action.

"However, in view of the fact that both (subjects) are known to be close associates of individuals linked with Soviet espionage activities, this office will continue to keep their cases under active consideration."

Then, on February 11, 1947, Mr. Hoffman prepared the following memorandum concerning the female subject:

"The subject was approved for top-secret material on this date, inasmuch as her case had been carefully considered by the Security Office, and it had been decided that there was insufficient information to warrant termination of her services."

Mr. Hoffman, when questioned concerning this clearance, stated:

"If there is not enough to dismiss them, then they cannot be denied access to top-secret material."

It would appear to logically follow from this that anyone in the State Department who has not been dismissed should be given access to top-secret material, and that the maintenance of a list of employees having access to top-secret material is not of too much importance.

No. 60

This person has been employed as an Executive Secretary with the State Department since July 1945. Prior to that, she had been employed by the Political Action Committee, Foreign Economic Administration, National Labor Relations Board, and the Treasury Department. For some time, she was associated with C-17, a well-known Left-Wing Social Worker. She is also a friend of two female employees of the State Department who are also under investigation for Left-Wing associations.

Another Government investigative agency informed in February 1947 that the subject has been in contact with E-10, a Soviet Espionage subject.

This investigation is in a pending status.

No. 61

This individual has been with the State Department since August 4, 1943, and is now with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange.

Interest in the subject developed from remarks of Congressman N-10, appearing in the Congressional Record, listing Communists employed by the State Department.

On May 3, 1944, she was reported as being very close to C-18, a Political Action Committee official. On April 28, 1945, she was reported as having rented an apartment to the brother of No. 12, a Russian espionage suspect, during her absence. On September 5, 1946, she was interviewed concerning her interest in having this espionage suspect employed by the State Department.

On December 6, 1946, she furnished a 42-page statement (actually an autobiography with 5 pages of references included) in which she disclaimed any interest in Communism. She explained her interest in Russia as being academic. The material developed centers principally on the subject's contacts with suspected Soviet espionage suspects, with Communists, and visiting Russian delegates during the San Francisco Conference, together with the fact that she has allegedly criticized the Secretary of State and favored the Soviet in reports.

The subject agreed that she was responsible for the State Department having employed No. 12, but stated that it was because of his ability only that she had recommended him. State Department officials are presently (October 1947) being interviewed concerning their knowledge of her ideology and beliefs. A number indicate suspicion of her but have little specific information other than her criticism of Secretary Byrnes and her unnecessary close association with the visiting Russian delegates. Some of the individuals interviewed expressed the belief that there was nothing wrong with her thinking but that she was merely too vigorous in her beliefs.

Investigation is pending.

No. 62

He is a Regional Specialist, P-6, in OIE. He was, allegedly, a former correspondent for a publication of short existence which had been created by No. 12 and E-12, alleged Soviet espionage agents. He and his wife are close associates of E-13 and E-14, who also are alleged espionage agents. He has continued to be a close associate of No. 12 and, reportedly, rode to and from work with No. 12 when that person was still employed with the State Department.

Investigation is pending.

No. 63

He is presently assigned to the Office of American Republic Affairs. He entered the Foreign Service in 1939.

A memorandum of August 19, 1946, indicated he worked with the Editorial Board of the American Foreign Service Journal during 1938 and 1939.

A memorandum of the same date indicates that another Governmental agency had received information that he was a recognized section leader of the Communist underground. A subsequent check with this Agency (September 30, 1947) developed that in 1939, when he was with the Foreign Service Journal, he had a small Communist Party unit meeting in his home. The source of this information said that he was a leader of this Communist underground unit.

His investigation is pending.

No. 64

He is presently in the Division of International Labor, Health and Social Affairs. He was transferred to the State Department from OSS.

A report by another Government investigating agency made in 1941 while the subject was with the Bureau of Labor Standards, Department of Labor, reflected that as of January 21, 1941, he was on the active indices of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action and as of February 17, 1941, on the active indices of the American Peoples Mobilization. He was listed in the "Call for National Negro Congress" pamphlet distributed in Chicago in 1936. When interviewed in 1941, the subject denied connection with the first two organizations but verified that his name had been used as a sponsor for the National Negro Congress with his consent though he was a trifle vague as to the circumstances in which his name was given.

The OSS investigation indicated the subject was on the liberal side. The records of the un-American Activities Committee indicate he was a member of the Marion Anderson Citizens Committee. No recent material from the Government Agency which investigated him in 1941 appears in the file.

A Memorandum of October 10, 1947, by Mr. Hoffman states that an informant said that subject was urging the Visa Division to issue a nonimmigration visa to a French Communist leader. This labor leader intended to come to the United States to attend a labor union's conference. The informant did not know if subject's interest was personal or if he was acting on behalf of his division chief.

No. 65

She is employed in the Division of International Exchange of Persons.

A previous employer said that she was "dishonest with time," untruthful, untrustworthy, and also "wrapped up in Communism"; that she finally had to let her go under unfavorable circumstances, and that she later married a man who was, reportedly, a Communist.

A summary memorandum of December 3, 1946, advised that the risk involved in employing subject required careful consideration. Her application was dated August 15, 1946, and a report with derogatory information was dated November 6, 1946. It should be noted at this point that subject was employed regardless of the above derogatory information.

A Memorandum of April 3, 1947, bears a penciled note which says "she is a friend of No. 11 of State Department. She and husband are contacts of a subject in the (—) case." The case referred to is a current important espionage case. Further contact with another Government agency failed to develop exactly how close the subject was with the subjects of the above espionage case.

A report of June 27, 1947, reflects that the former employer quoted above was not as certain as he had previously indicated about the subject's Communist connections, though her remarks concerning the subject's associations and acquaintances were still derogatory.

This case is pending.

The following individuals, listed as Numbers 66-77, inclusive, are employed in divisions under the Special Assistant for Research and Intelligence. In addition, Numbers 1, 2, 5, 7, 8, and 44, who were referred to in the section of the report on CSA, are employed in Research and Intelligence.

No. 66

The subject was employed as an Analyst by OSS from June 1944 to October 1945, when he was transferred to the State Department. Since his transfer he has been assigned to Research and Intelligence.

He was born in Russia and naturalized in San Francisco in 1929. An investigation conducted in 1946 by CSA consisted of checks of employment and school records, and interviews with three former supervisors on non-Government jobs. Two of these supervisors recommended subject unfavorably. Three references, with Russian names, all in Government employment, recommended him favorably. On the basis of that investigation he was given security clearance. Subject subsequently became the subject of a security investigation as a result of his roommate, one of his references, having in his possession a State Department report which he had no authority to possess. This information was furnished the State Department by a Navy Department Official who had seen that individual with the State Department official confidential report in his possession.

Investigation was instituted on the basis of this information.

No. 67

The above subject was employed by OSS from July 1942 to November 1943, and in the U. S. Navy from November 1943 to March 1946. In 1946 he was employed as a P-7 Consultant with the State Department in the Division of Research. An investigation, including only checks with reference, employers, and schools, was conducted in April 1946 and revealed no derogatory information as to loyalty. He was cleared on May 16, 1946, as to "character, ability, dependability, general reputation, and loyalty." One reference, a Navy Captain, said "he was hard to handle, and the reason he was sent to Siberia was to get him out of Washington where he persisted in going over the heads of his immediate superiors to get assignments of his choice." This statement was concurred in by a Navy Lt. Commander.

In June 7, 1946, a Government investigative agency advised that the subject is a known contact of E-15, a subject in a Russian Espionage case. The subject has played bridge and exchanged language lessons with persons in the Soviet Embassy, Washington, D. C. He is also a known contact of Jessica Smith of Soviet Russia Today.

This investigative agency further reported on June 7, 1946, that E-16, a known Soviet Espionage Agent, was arrested with his wife in Finland in 1933 and while in custody E-16's wife requested the American Consul to forward on her behalf a request for funds from the subject in Michigan. Further, on March 15, 1934, subject wrote Congressman X-11, requesting his assistance in the case of Arvid Jacobson.

There is no indication in the file that any investigation was conducted on this subject by CSA on the basis of the above information furnished by another Government Agency; however, on September 11, 1947, the subject was granted "top secret" clearance on the basis of a memorandum written by Moyer of CSA to Hoffman of CSA. This memorandum states "the derogatory information in this case, from the standpoint of security, consists of the following:

"(1) Report from Physical Security Section relating to the loss and recovery of official classified papers in February 1947.

"(2) In 1934, subject addressed letter to Congressman in behalf of an acquaintance of known Communist sympathies being held in Finland on espionage charges.

"(3) Information received from _____ in June 1946 as follows:

"(a) (Subject) known contact of (E-15).

"(b) (Subject) known contact of Jessica Smith of Soviet Russia Today.

"(c) In the summer of 1945 (subject) was transferred from OSS to a new assignment with ONI, which assignment would take him to Siberia, Russia. (Subject) indicated that his assignment, presumably with ONI, had included liaison with, and training of, Soviet Marines stationed at a Russian Port. (Subject) also advised that at one time he played bridge and exchanged language lessons with persons in the Soviet Embassy in Washington, D. C.

"In my opinion, the information related above is not sufficient to withhold top secret clearance. With reference to point (1), there appears to have been certain mitigating circumstances, and there is no indication that any disciplinary action was taken, with reference to point (2), the political and economic situation was somewhat different, and there is no indication that (subject) was in sympathy with the acquaintances' political philosophy. Moreover, we do not know the outcome of the incident. With reference to points 3 (A), (B), (C), the words 'known contact' mean nothing, especially since the subject was apparently connected with Russian affairs in ONI and would naturally seek out persons who possessed a knowledge of the language, etc. While the CSA file did indicate an interest in Russia on the part of the subject, there is no evidence of Communist sympathy. Likewise, there is no indication of subversive activity or affiliation with any Communist groups or fronts. The subject is highly recommended. In conclusion, the subject has been given security clearance to a responsible position, the satisfactory performance of his duties necessitating access to top secret material. To be consistent, in the absence of additional highly derogatory information, I feel that top secret clearance should be given. Even in cases where highly unfavorable information is developed, I think the remedy would be to withhold security clearance in the first place, or if subsequently developed, adequate for dismissal."

It is to be noted that the above security clearance was given without any further investigation, which would appear advisable on the basis of information of a serious nature furnished by another Government investigative agency. It is especially so in view of the fact that the original clearance in this case was based on an investigation of a rather sketchy nature including interviews with references, employers and check of school records.

No. 68

She was a research analyst with OSS from July 1944 to September 1945, when she was transferred to the State Department, where she is in the Division of Research. She has been active in Local #3 of the United Public Workers of America in the State Department, and until 1946, was a member of the Washington Book Shop. For many years she has been a close friend of B-10, a subject in a Russian Espionage case, and they both reside in the same apartment building.

Several informants interviewed by CSA commented favorably as to her loyalty to the United States and she was given security clearance on April 14, 1947, and again on June 18, 1947. On July 11, 1947 a Governmental investigative agency advised that it had received information from a highly confidential source of information, whose reliability is unquestioned, that the subject has been converted to communism by E-10.

The case was reopened on the basis of this information, but there were no further reports in the file as of October 1, 1947.

No. 69

He is a special assistant in Research and Intelligence.

He was with OSS from February 1943 until he entered on duty in the Department in October 1945. He was born and educated in Germany; he came from England in 1936, endorsed by Harold J. Laski. He was naturalized May 28, 1943.

From April 1936 to February 1943, he was with the Institute of Social Research, described as a Communist organization despite its camouflaging and carrying on in a clandestine manner.

During a meeting of the German-Austrian Secretariat, held in 1946, the prominent trade union offices in Germany were discussed and subject expressed the belief that it would be dangerous for an AF of L representative to go to Germany. He believed that in the United States Zone anti-Communist propaganda in the unions was unnecessary. He expressed the belief that if the AF of L man were admitted, then the World Federated Trade Union should also be admitted. The latter is the organization that has had active Russian participation and is suspected of being Communist-dominated.

A letter from a Government investigative agency dated June 18, 1946, is somewhat indefinite as to the status of the Institute of Social Research. It is apparently an organization of German-Jewish refugees. During the war, it was associated with the Russian Economic Institute whose aim was to increase the understanding of contemporary Russia.

This case is pending.

No. 70

She was employed by OSS in the Division of Research from June 1942 to September 1945, at which time she was transferred to the State Department where she is a branch Chief in Research and Intelligence.

A CSA investigation was satisfactory, from a security standpoint, except for one former supervisor who gave his opinion that she was a Communist. He said, however, that he had no tangible reason for this statement.

She was dismissed as an instructor at Hunter College in 1937 for unsatisfactory services. For some time she has resided with No. 14, a former State Department employee, whose resignation was requested because of Communist activities; however, the subject was cleared for top secret material on February 11, 1947, and the case is in a closed status.

No. 71

He is presently employed in the Division of Research for Europe.

The latest typed material appearing in his file is dated December 19, 1944. Prior to this he was investigated and nothing derogatory was developed. A card dated May 19, 1947, indicates he tried to get a job in the State Department for a former roommate of Shura Lewis. Shura Lewis is the individual who recently received so much newspaper publicity as a result of her supposedly Communist talks given before local high-school students, and who has been actively investigated by another Government agency. The case was assigned to the Special Unit on June 11, 1947. As of October 1947, the only material in the file was in the form of penciled notes.

Investigation is pending.

No. 72

This employee is presently in the Acquisition and Distribution Division under the Special Assistant for Research and Intelligence.

Subject's file reflects no derogatory information; however, it is noted that subject has been active with the UPWA and that one of her references, C-19, has been affiliated with Communist-Front organizations.

A pencilled note of September 11, 1946, says that a Government investigative agency is working on the case and that subject is connected with the above-mentioned reference in some way. This agency has suggested that there is a strong possibility of a close tie up between this individual and the aforementioned reference. A memorandum of October 30, 1946, indicated advance security clearance was given and "additional investigation" is being made. There is nothing subsequent to this in the file; the papers are in the closed section of the files, the index card reflects that the case was closed October 18, 1946.

No. 73

He has been with the State Department since November 16, 1927, and is presently with the Acquisition and Distribution Division under the Special Assistant for Research and Intelligence.

An investigation in 1940 developed no derogatory information concerning this subject. An undated but apparently recent memorandum from J. H. Finlator, a special agent, to Mr. Fitch follows: "Two employees of the Department who recently admitted to me that they are homosexuals told me that they believe the following persons of the Department also to be homosexual: (H-1), (H-2), and (H-3). One of these informants admitted having relations with (H-5) of D. C. and stated that (subject) has the reputation among homosexuals as being homosexual.

"A third informant advised me that (H-4) goes to homosexual parties, associates with homosexuals and is 'undoubtedly homosexual'."

Subject's case was opened September 12, 1947, and assigned to Agent Finlator. All of the above-mentioned individuals are presently employed by the State Department and investigations have been opened on all of them. H-1, H-2, and H-3 are in the Division of Communications and Records. H-4 is in the Division of Protective Services.

Concerning the above file, it should be mentioned at this point that a review of the file reflects Agent Finlator has had numerous cases of this type assigned to him and apparently has handled a number very successfully inasmuch as he has, on several occasions, secured the questionable members' resignations.

According to persons interviewed in CSA, Finlator has been very successful in obtaining admissions from this type of individual. In this connection, it might further be mentioned that homosexuals are regarded as security risks inasmuch as they are obviously easy blackmail victims. It is understood that having them classified as security risks was largely brought about by the insistence of Mr. Fitch as Mr. Robinson, reportedly, originally expressed the belief that though they were undesirable employees, they could not actually be considered security risks.

No. 74

He is a biographic analyst in the Biographic Information Division.

He was an alien until December 10, 1946. The subject received notice of termination because he was not a citizen.

B. M. Poole of the Biographic Information Division requested that the Department Security Committee reconsider their decision that his services be terminated because he was due to be naturalized in August 1946. On July 31, 1946, the Security Committee again disapproved the subject's employment and said that he had no unusual qualifications. This employee was transferred from OSS and nothing is known of his activities prior to 1941 that can be checked.

On August 27, 1946, Mr. Hoffman said in a note to Mr. Bannerman that Arch Jean, Chief of the Division of Departmental Personnel, stated that SA-E had submitted justification to DP for continued employment of subject and that the case was being cleared subject to a July SA-E report. Mr. Hoffman on May 9, 1947, stated that an additional clearance for top secret matter was being given, pending investigation. There is no indication of any investigation or that any leads had been set out though the case is in a pending status.

No. 75

He is presently employed by the State Department as a Research Analyst assigned to Research and Intelligence.

His background investigation developed nothing of a derogatory nature. He was with Army Intelligence from 1944 to June 1946. On April 7, 1947, he was given a security clearance.

He has been a very close associate of E-17, former War Department Employee who was dropped for security reasons and who is believed to have passed information and material to Soviet agents. One of his associates at the War Department, with whom he has since been in contact, is C-20, who is active with "liberal" groups. He has also been a close associate of C-21 who is said to be a Communist sympathizer. He is also a close associate of C-22, an individual of alleged radical beliefs.

This case is pending.

No. 76

This individual is presently employed in Research and Intelligence.

A report of another Government agency indicated that in 1943, when subject was with the National Resources Planning Board, he allegedly cursed a war veteran and the United States Government.

Informants were quoted as saying he and his wife maintained a Communist and un-American attitude. It was claimed that his wife admitted being a member of the Communist Party at the University of Wisconsin. He reportedly subscribed to In Fact and Soviet Russia Today. He is a close friend of E-15 and others in a major espionage case.

A note in the file indicates that as of February 25, 1947, Agent J. H. Finlator was working on the case. Another penciled note stated that the case should not be worked on until the FBI had given clearance as it might upset their investigation. This case has been open since early 1945. On September 25, 1945, Robert Bannerman, at that time Security Officer, said there was not enough evidence and they would have to let him slide through.

No. 77

He was born in 1916. He was with OSS from January 1942 to December 1945, when he was transferred to the State Department where he is presently a Chief in Research and Intelligence. An investigation of his background was conducted by CSA in April 1946. This investigation consisted of interviews with references and a check of college records.

Subject was given advance security clearance on May 8, 1946. In the file on the subject is a copy of a memorandum dated August 30, 1946, to Assistant Chief of Air Staff-2, from X-12, Colonel, AC, Acting Chief Air Intelligence Division. This memorandum states the following:

"1. During the latter half of August 1946 Major (X-13), A. C., undergoing final briefings prior to his departure to assume a position as an Air Attaché at Rome, Italy, was directed to the U. S. State Department for orientation.

"2. At State (subject) undertook, for better than an hour, to belabor Major (X-13) for his unbalance toward Capitalism and to excuse it on the basis that the Capitalistic Press of the United States was undoubtedly the source of (the Major's) bias. Further (subject) proceeded to 'sell' the advantages Communism would bring to the United States and to Italy were it the system prevalent.

"3. (Subject) may have been slyly trying Major (X-13) and experimenting with the mentality of a typical Army Air Officer * * * if, he (X-13), got the impression that State wanted the United States Air Attaché to favor Communism over the established U. S. Government, then (subject) is wrong. If (subject) is wrong, then he should not be advising Air Force Attachés going into the field."

In a memorandum dated September 9, 1946, from Bannerman to Klaus, it is pointed out that subject strongly supported the appointment of C-23, a strong pro-Communist, to an OIC Post in Belgrade.

A memorandum dated September 20, 1946, from Bannerman to Klaus, refers to an interview had with subject regarding the briefing incident mentioned in the memorandum of Colonel X-12. It was pointed out in the memorandum of Bannerman's that this should have been routine briefing of about fifteen minutes' duration but actually lasted 1½ hours. It developed that Major X-13 is a strong advocate of Capitalism as it exists in the United States. After his opinions were solicited by subject, the latter then proceeded to conduct the interview in the manner of a professor trying to show an errant student the fallacy of his political thinking, and pointing out that he (the subject) believes the most effective form of Government is one closely approaching state socialism. Subject admitted that it was quite possible the Major could have misinterpreted his remarks as a preference for Communism or Socialism on his part.

There is no indication in the file that any type of action was taken on the basis of Mr. Bannerman's memorandum of September 20, 1946.

On October 20, 1947, a CSA investigator in Philadelphia, advised that the previous evening he attended a meeting sponsored by the Sunday Night Forum (a liberal organization) at which the speaker was J. Raymond Walsh (a well-known liberal). He spoke on "The Witch Hunt in Washington," and during his talk stated that a close personal friend of his came to New York City recently and had a talk with him about the purge in the State Department. This friend told him he was going to resign from the OSS Section of the State Department that week because of the prying of the investigators. On the basis of this information, the case was reopened for investigation inasmuch as the speaker identified his friend as the subject.

Individuals listed as Numbers 78-89 inclusive are employees of the Office of Information and Educational Exchange. Number 90 is an apparently qualified person for the position on the Russian desk who was rejected although the investigation was favorable. He is listed because the statement has been made that the foreign language positions are extremely difficult to fill and, consequently, some questionable security risks, as well as aliens, have been retained by OIE. In addition to Numbers 78-89, Numbers 3 and 43, who were referred to in the section of the report on CSA, are employees of OIE.

No. 78

Subject is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City in a highly responsible position.

Subject's Form 57 includes as references No. 79 and C-24.

The file indicates subject is the center of a Communist or extremely liberal group which has control of the type of material being broadcast. Numerous fellow employees cited examples of subtle news distortion and attitudes pointing out divergencies of broadcast from the State Department policy.

Material in the file indicates C-24, of the Radio Program Branch, sided with subject when X-14 called his attention to a broadcast very critical of the Pope.

A memorandum of June 18, 1947, from Fitch to Penrifoy, initiated by Goodrich, shows that action will be held in abeyance pending findings by OIE's own investigating Committee. CSA has no knowledge concerning whether or not OIE has accomplished anything in its investigation. (A lengthy report, dated February 17, 1947, by one of the New York Agents of CSA, is being set forth as an appendix in some detail because it gives a good picture of the general personnel situation in the International Broadcasting Division as well as the subject's activities. Inasmuch as most of the information in this report was given in the strictest confidence by loyal employees of OIE, it is strongly recommended that it not be made a matter of public record. However, there is set out below from a CSA memorandum of June 18, 1947 a summary of the information developed by investigation. It is suggested the Committee may wish to use it rather than the appendix in recorded hearings.)

The subject is presently employed as a Policy Information Specialist, CAF-13, in the Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs, State Department, New York City. Subject is responsible for the control of script and news material which is used in the broadcasts of the Voice of America programs and is in charge of the Policy Control Desk which acts as a clearing house or monitoring desk for all scripts which are used on the broadcasts to Europe.

1. From the standpoint of the investigation the Special Agent handling the investigation in New York was aware of the difficulties which would be experienced in contacting persons in the HD Office in New York who would be presumed to give reliable information concerning the subject. However, the Special Agent was able to locate and interrogate numerous witnesses who stated in substance that the subject has (gathered together in this office) a mixture of 'fellow travelers,' pseudo-liberals and outright Communists. These witnesses stated that this group is a closely knit set the members of which protect each other and continuously assail anyone who dares to disagree with their way of thinking. It is alleged that the subject is the spearhead and dominant leader of this group and will quickly come to the defense of these persons when anyone makes any attempt to criticize them personally or the work which they do. It is also stated by these informants that it has been obvious that the script which is cleared through the Policy Control Desk which is under the supervision of the subject, has, from time to time, been altered or changed in a very subtle way and that it has been noticed that the alteration is invariably favorable to the Soviet Union or to the Communist Party line in the United States. One witness stated that there is a multitude of small clues which point to this group as a bunch of pseudo-liberals whose work is damaging and who almost terrorize the rest of the personnel in the Division and stated that it is unhealthy to oppose this group and that they conduct themselves in a most clever and insidious way and that it is very difficult to get anything on them.

"Two of our witnesses pointed out that as a result of poorly screened material for the broadcasts these news stories at times had been at cross purposes with the State Department's policy and they at times have even hindered the execution of the foreign policy of the State Department. The informant referred to a story concerning the State Department's policy regarding some bases in the Arctic and stated that a release of this news prematurely by the IBD Division had tipped off the rest of the world regarding this information.

Another witness stated that the subject and (associates) are dominating almost the entire personnel of the IBD because the Daily Guidance Bulletins and the MRD's emanate from (subject) (who) is the person who interprets and enforces these directives. He also stated that (subject) has very powerful connections in Washington and is constantly backed up in * * * decisions whether it regards the protection of (subject's) personnel scheduled for dismissal for inefficiency or infractions of rules or whether it involves anyone who dares to question (subject's) instructions.

"2. The script referred to herein which contains evidence of tampering or alteration has been made available to CSA for analysis and upon completion of this investigation the report of investigation will include a summary of the findings regarding this material.

"3. Without exception the witnesses contacted in the investigation to date have been highly critical of the subject and indicate that (the subject) is not suitable for the position which (subject) holds both from the standpoint of administrative ability as well as loyalty to the United States and have been very outspoken in their criticism of (subject's) administration of the Policy Control Desk of IBD in New York."

"4. Due to the fact that another investigative committee within the Department is presently making inquiries concerning the operation of the IBD Division and the use of script and other material used on the Voice of America programs it is believed advisable to coordinate the evidence of this committee with the current investigation and therefore in view of the necessity for additional investigation of this case it is believed inadvisable to make a recommendation concerning the subject at this state of the investigation."

No. 79

He has a ranking position in OIE.

The memorandum concerning the activities of the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City, which was reported as it appears in another file, puts this individual in a poor light but there is nothing in his file concerning this information. In fact, there is nothing in the file of a derogatory nature. During the course of his investigation, one witness commented that he was "somewhat left of center".

He was given security clearance June 16, 1947.

No. 86

He is a Music Director in OIE.

A report furnished by another investigative agency on June 5, 1945, reflected that he changed his name in June 1939. His file reflects that he received a draft classification of 4-F because of psychoneurosis.

His mother, with whom he lives, attended a number of Communist front organization meetings. Witnesses reported that the subject and his mother provided a coffee kitchen for protesters. This refers to a group of tenants who are accused of being a Communist inspired protest group.

Subject's municipal service file indicated that he was employed from December 1938 to March 1939 by the State, County and Municipal Workers of America. This organization has been accused by X-15 and others as being a Communist-dominated organization. His connection with this group was out listed on his Form 57. Upon interview, subject denied that he had been employed by this organization and explained that he had taken a course of study from that organization in training for work as a social investigator. It was his understanding that it was the only course of its type in New York. In 1938 he studied music in the New School for Social Research under Hans Eisler, the individual who has received considerable recent publicity due to his appearance before the House un-American Activities Committee. There is no indication from the file that his association with Eisler stemmed out of anything other than a mutual interest in music. Concerning his being classified 4-F, his mother was quoted as saying that they did see to it that they kept him out of the Army.

When applying for a position as playground director he said on November 25, 1939, " * * * When conducting the choruses of the State, County, and Municipal Workers of America". He subsequently denied that this was a correct statement of his activities with the singing group with which he was connected.

An individual bearing his name at a certain address in New York City, listed with the Department of Information and Records, New York City, requested on June 29, 1939 that his address be changed to Apartment I. A-3 in care of Seabrook. This card was not signed but was printed. On August 29, 1939 an individual with the same name as the subject's and the last-mentioned address, signed a Communist Party Election Petition. The investigating agent, however, after comparing printing and handwriting, is of the opinion that it was an individual other than the subject who resided at that address at the time and had signed the Petition. Concerning the change of address card, the Agent stated "the conclusion was drawn that an error had been committed either through the negligence of the clerk in the Municipal Civil Service Commission or through the deliberate attempt (by the individual bearing the same name and address) to benefit by the applicant's identification.

On April 10, 1947, complete security clearance was given the subject.

NOTE.—Concerning the above case, the Investigative Staff is of the opinion that it is fairly well established that the subject was not the signer of the Communist Party Election Petition. However, it is noted that the subject's forthrightness and honesty, at least, are somewhat subject to question as a result of the contradictions apparent from his execution of forms in subsequent interviews.

No. 81

The subject was employed by OWI as a news editor in March 1942 and was transferred to the State Department when that agency was taken over by the Department. Investigation disclosed that in December 1944, when C-25, a known Communist of the OWI Office in London was discharged after a Hatch Act investigation, the subject was vigorous in opposing this action. In June 1946, while attending a meeting of the National Committee to Win the Peace, which was attended by a number of well-known Communists and sympathizers, he was arrested for disorderly conduct.

CSA also advised that they had information from another Governmental investigative agency that a highly confidential source reported that on the morning following the subject's arrest, two members of the Soviet Underground discussed ways and means of assisting subject to get out of the predicament or to hush up the matter. The informant indicated that the circumstances leading up to this information clearly indicates that subject is of importance and stands high in Communist circles.

The above information was set out in a memorandum dated June 17, 1946, and a full investigation of the subject was requested. There was no indication that he had been given a full investigation before. Subsequent investigation disclosed that two former associates of the subject with the Newark Evening News stated in June 1947 that the subject was a very aggressive leader of the Local of the American Newspaper Guild and they stated that they would not rehire the subject nor recommend him for a Government position.

This case is still pending and no decision has been reached.

The subject was given a hearing on July 16, 1947, at which he denied any Communist or pro-Communist activities, and no admissions of a derogatory nature were obtained from him.

No. 82

She is employed with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City.

Her file reflects that she was born January 20, 1919 in Sofia, Bulgaria.

A memorandum of September 2, 1947 recites that an informant, a very intelligent reputable person, had advised that the subject married a United States soldier stationed in Bulgaria, who was uneducated and of no background though she has money, furs, and jewelry. Upon her arrival in this country according to informant, she immediately began trying to associate herself with the State Department. She allegedly has a brother in England who is a radio announcer with definite Communist Party leanings.

This investigation is pending.

No. 83

He is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City.

He signed a Communist Party Election Petition, as did his parents, on August 3, 1939. When voting in 1938, 1939, 1940 and 1941, he did not indicate a Democrat or Republican Party affiliation as is customary in that state. In this connection it was pointed out in the file that the Communist Party had not been on the ballot in New York since 1936. When questioned concerning his signing the election petition, he said he did not recall signing the petition but when confronted with the fact that he had, he said that it must have been at the request of a friend.

On November 4, 1941, the Civil Service Commission recommended his removal from the Government. This was never acted upon and on November 30, 1942, he was advised the Commission had reversed its decision. The file reflects no other derogatory information.

The form giving security clearance, on October 8, 1947, was checked "Results of investigation are completely favorable to subject."

No. 84

This individual is employed with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange in New York City.

She has been with the Government since September 1944. Her parents are Russian born. Investigation developed no derogatory information concerning subject, however, only her college attendance and previous employers were checked.

Her sister, according to the file, is a known Communist.

No. 85

This is an illustration of lack of follow-up even though subject appears to be possible security risk.

The subject has been employed by the Department with OIE in New York City since December 1945. Information was received by the Department from confidential sources indicating that he may be affiliated with Communist front groups, and that he may have Communist sympathies.

On April 16, 1947, the New York Office of CSA was requested to investigate the matter and they were provided with a report of another Government agency. No report had been received from New York since September 25, 1947, and there was no indication in the file that the matter had been followed up with New York.

No. 86

She is with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange as a consultant in New York City.

A Government investigative agency memorandum of May 1, 1947, stated that a confidential source advised that her reputation was lurid, that she was a leading light in the America First Movement, was a Nazi sympathizer and active in a Falange Movement.

No. 87

This individual has been employed by the Office of Information and Educational Exchange since February 1943 on a "when actually employed" basis.

The file reflects that he purportedly came from Italy in late 1942 and entered the United States illegally. He is Bulgarian. He lived for six months with C-26, editor of a supposedly Communist controlled Bulgarian language newspaper. He is a close associate of known Communists.

Subject attended the Military Intelligence Training Course at Camp Ritchie, Maryland, and Indiana University.

Another Government agency reported that the subject was reluctant to bear arms against the enemy and that he faked his inability to understand and speak English, etc., indicating he was a poor soldier. The wife of a reference said she felt the subject "is a bit 'Leftist.'"

He was issued a Certificate of Naturalization October 8, 1945. In his petition for naturalization he stated that he entered the United States in New York City, May 6, 1941.

The case is presently pending.

No. 88

The file reflects subject is an employee of the Information and Educational Exchange in New York City. He was born in Hungary. He offered to donate $1,000 to Helen Bryan of the Joint-Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee. She is the same individual and the Committee is the same organization that were brought before the House Un-American Activities Committee. Though subject is a medical doctor, he worked in a variety of war plants before going with OWI. His record in this country starts in November 1938. His investigation is pending.

No. 89

This Foreign Service applicant has been with the Office of Information and Educational Exchange.

The file reflects that his girl friend, E-18, was known as a "campus radical" at Syracuse University. Close social friends of subject and his girl friend are, and have been for some time, E-13, C-27 and C-28, all of whom have Communist connections.

A report of October 29, 1946 indicates subject has a poor personality and is "very slow," as well as being a close associate with the above individuals.

His investigation is pending.

No. 90

This is an instance where an apparently good security risk was passed up although he was highly recommended for an OIE position.

The subject was born at Kiev, Russia, in 1877. He was investigated in the fall of 1946 for a position on the Russian desk of the OIE. Investigation disclosed that he was a refugee from the Red Revolution in Russia and that he was naturalized in New York City in 1927. He is reportedly an expert on Russian affairs, having studied them for a period of many years. He was employed by OSS as a consultant from February 1942 to December 1942 and then requested to resign.

The subject stated that he was forced to resign because of Communist pressure, and that C-29 of the Jewish Telegraph Agency and Vladimir Stepanovskiy, an NKVD Agent in the United States, had openly stated that he was too anti-Soviet to be employed by OSS.

The subject's immediate supervisor with OSS reportedly told him he was forced to terminate the subject's services due to circumstances beyond his control. One of the subject's references and a high State Department official confirmed the subject's statement concerning his dismissal from OSS. The subject was very highly recommended by several witnesses as an able man and as a democratic American who supported Democracy for Russia and opposed Communism. There is no indication in the file that the subject was employed.

Contact was had with Mr. Ryan, of the Division of Personnel, and he advised that according to his file the subject apparently "did not have qualifications for the job."

Individual listed as Nos. 91-95, inclusive, are in the Foreign Service. Nos. 9 and 48, who were referred to in the CSA section of the report, are also in the Foreign Service.

No. 91

He was born in 1913. He practiced law from September 1936 to September 1942. He was with the Board of Economic Warfare from September 1942 to November 1943 and has been with the State Department as a Senior Economic Analyst in the Foreign Service from November 1943 to the present time. In addition, he is an applicant for the position of Foreign Service career officer. Prior to 1947, no previous full investigation had been conducted of his background.

Investigation from February 1947 to June 1947 disclosed that he has always associated with known Leftists and was highly recommended by C-30, C-31, C-32 and C-33, all known fellow travelers. In California, his closest associates for several years were C-34 and C-35, also active fellow travelers.

A former law associate of the subject refused to recommend him for Federal employment. The informant said subject's public relations are bad, he is lacking in polish, does not meet people well, and is so far to the Left that he would advocate any Liberal cause.

The file discloses a request of December 12, 1946, by a Department official, for a Foreign Service inspector to investigate an alleged irregularity on the part of the subject in his sale of a personal automobile at a fantastic black-market price in Spain, and the subsequent purchase of another automobile at the official price on the statement that it was to be used for official purposes. This car is apparently not being used on official business. There was no report in the file on the requested investigation.

In a letter of January 30, 1947, Foreign Service Inspector X-5 mentioned that he had previously submitted an efficiency rating of "unsatisfactory" on the subject, advising that he was "convinced (subject) was a rough type of lawyer who might look upon his own personal benefit in trustee operations and should not be continued in the Foreign Service."

A Superior Court judge in California, who knows subject well, said subject is a Leftist, and his associates were always of the same type. He said further that he would not have the subject in any responsible Government position if he had anything to say about it.

Another California judge said the subject associated with fellow travelers and he would definitely not recommend him.

There have been no reports in the files since June 6, 1947, but the case is still pending.

No. 92

This individual was employed at an American Mission in the Far East during 1947. He is a United States citizen of foreign-born parents.

Information was obtained by a Consul General that the subject may be furnishing information to a Russian Agent, and two sources of information reported that the subject has represented himself as an American Intelligence Agent. At the Mission where he was employed he had access to confidential information.

On the Consul General's recommendation, he was relieved of his assignment where he was a security risk, but he is still in the Department.

No. 93

This person was employed as a file clerk by the American Embassy in Paris, France, in December 1946. She went to Paris in November 1946 with her husband who was studying there. Both the subject and her husband are known contacts of two suspects in an investigation of Soviet espionage activities in the United States.

Another Government investigative agency advised that the subject's husband has transmitted back to the United States Communist literature of party fronts in France and in a communication he listed principal functionaries of the Communist Party in France.

Investigation conducted by CSA in March 1947 developed no derogatory information concerning the subject. A memorandum in the file dated July 16, 1947, stated that the subject recently sent a copy of a Communist publication to one of the Soviet espionage suspects who had previously given the subject names of well-known Communists she could contact in France.

On July 30, 1947, CSA requested the Embassy in Paris to investigate the subject's activities there.

No. 94

This is a case of clearance on insufficient investigation and failure to reopen the case for investigation although derogatory information was received.

The subject was employed as a news analyst with the American Embassy in Moscow in 1946. CSA had conducted an investigation in November 1945 which included contacts with references, two former teachers and two former supervisors in the Army. Nothing derogatory was obtained from the persons contacted. Information was received from a Government investigative agency on April 26, 1946, that the subject had informed the son of a known Communist Party member in Philadelphia that "all American Newspapers said horrible things about the Russians and that if one reads the Russian newspapers, he learns that these things are not true." At that time the subject is reported to have said he felt that he now has a wonderful opportunity in being able to analyze the Russian news.

No action was taken on the basis of the above information, and on July 17, 1947, Congressman X-16 told Assistant Secretary of State Peurifoy that subject and his wife, both very procommunistic, are employed in our Embassy in Moscow and should be removed.

The case was re-opened on the basis of the information received from the Congressman, but there was nothing further in the file as of October 13, 1947, other than check of the records of the Un-American Activities Committee.

No. 95

He is employed by the Consulate General at Casablanca.

The investigation was initiated for the purpose of clearing him to perform cryptographic duties. The file reflects that he is a heavy drinker, evasive and possibly engaged in questionable financial transactions concerning foreign exchange. A foreign service inspector rates him as "unsatisfactory."

The College he allegedly attended has no record of his claimed two years' attendance.

There is no indication that any action is being taken to dismiss this employee and no indication at the time the file was reviewed, as to whether or not he would be cleared for performing cryptographic duties.

Individuals listed as Nos. 96, 97, and 98 are examples of persons employed for responsible positions even though substantial derogatory information was available prior to appointment.

No. 96

This is a case of apparent pressure from a high official in the Department to employ the applicant in spite of derogatory information.

The applicant was born in 1909; he was appointed late in 1946 and was assigned to the Office of Assistant Secretary Hilldring at $8179.80 per annum. He was in the United States Army from December 1942 to May 1946 and rose from the rank of private to captain. He was employed as a civilian in the War Department after May 8, 1946, at a salary of $6230 per annum and subsequently raised to $7102. The maximum salary he ever received prior to going into the Army was $57 per week with a newspaper.

Advance security clearance was given him on October 29, 1946, and on November 5, 1946, the following memorandum from the Office of Controls to the Personnel Division was prepared:

"Reference is made to the case of (subject), born——1909, applicant for the position Advisor, Standard of Living Policy, with the Department. Further reference is made to CON's Memorandum of October 29, 1946, and the remarks transmitted therewith, giving advance security clearance on (subject).

"(Subject) was confronted with the discrepancies, as outlined in the above-mentioned remarks, by CSA. In reply to various questions with regard to discrepancies in his education (subject) stated that the records revealed by CSA were correct. He further stated that he did not have his records available hence the discrepancies. (Subject) stated that he was not disqualified from——University for poor scholarship. He stated that he was maintaining a "B" average and the reason for his leaving was due to a misunderstanding with regard to prelegal requirements. The CSA investigation disclosed that (subject) was disqualified from this law school in May, 1934, for poor scholarship.

"With reference to (subject's) employment by the —— News Company and his statements that he made from $100.00 to $350.00 per month, (subject) stated that his salary was $57.50 per week plus $8.00 per week for car expenses. He further stated that in spite of his official titles with that company he did as a matter of fact, 'work in connection with the publication and editing.' The CSA investigation reflected no information to substantiate the afore-mentioned claim.

"(Subject) was asked to explain the discrepancies with regard to his claim that he received from $60.00 to $150.00 per month for employment in the law office of ——. The CSA investigation had revealed that his salary was $50.00 per month. (Subject) stated that it was true that he was employed on a part-time basis and that his salary may have only been the amount as shown by the investigation, however, he believed that the average was much higher. He further stated, 'He was not an Attorney at this time but a law student.'

"(Subject) claimed on Form 57 that he was engaged and associated in the private practice of law from 1936 to 1942, however, the CSA investigation failed to substantiate these claims and further revealed that (subject) was not admitted to practice law in the State of California until January 1944. (Subject) was confronted with this discrepancy and asked for an explanation. In reply he stated, 'I am very sorry but the above statement was a mistake with reference to the years 1936-1942.' * * * 'In no way did I mean to convey the impression in my application that I was practicing law during this period.'

"It is apparent, from the facts as set forth above, that (subject) attempted to build up his past experience and earning power at the time he executed Form 57 for employment with this Department. In practically all employments and experiences listed, (subject) made statements that varied from the facts as borne out by CSA investigation.

"On the basis of the investigation conducted by CSA and in view of the statements made by (subject) when confronted with discrepancies as revealed by the investigation, it would appear that the position to which subject has been appointed is not commensurate with his background, experience, earning capacity, etc. It would appear that (subject's) application should be given careful consideration before he is employed by the Department."

On November 29, 1946, Robert J. Ryan of the Personnel Division submitted a memorandum to the Office of Controls stating "The investigative file on (the subject) forwarded with your memorandum to DP of November 5, is returned herewith, the comments of Mr. Humelsine attached."

The attached item is a three-inch by five-inch slip of white paper with the notation "To, DP (Mr. McCoy) I can't see that the attached info altered the case enough to reopen. CHH"

Attached also, is a memorandum from Bannerman to Morse Allen "For the file—If Humelsine is so little concerned with the quality of Department personnel there is little we can do. I believe he is more interested in the politics of the situation. RLB 12/2/46."

No. 97

The subject has been employed in various Government agencies since 1937. His last position prior to joining the State Department in 1946 was with OPA as regional executive officer. He is presently an Assistant Director under the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs.

An investigative report, dated May 3, 1946, listed one reference as giving derogatory information concerning his personality and ability.

A report of May 11, 1946, lists an associate of the subject with OPA as refusing to recommend him because of his domineering personality and having some question as to his integrity.

A report of June 15, 1946, sets out that another associate of subject, with OPA, has given very derogatory information relative to his personality, and this associate also stated that the subject was a poor administrator. Two other associates confirmed the statement as to the subject's disagreeable personality and his being a poor administrator. Still another associate said the subject promised him he would get the informant a promotion in OPA if the informant helped obtain a commission in the Armed Services for the subject through the informant's relatives who had high positions in the Armed Forces. This informant also stated the subject had made improper advances to girls in the OPA Office.

A memorandum dated June 26, 1946, from CSA to the Office of Controls stated "investigation discloses no evidence of a material nature tending to affect the subject's character, ability, dependability, general reputation and loyalty to the Government of the United States and its institutions, and would seem to indicate that the person merits consideration for employment in the Department of State."

On the basis of the above memorandum, the subject was employed by the State Department.

A memorandum dated November 8, 1946, from the Office of Controls to the Personnel Division summarized the derogatory information concerning the subject and recommended careful consideration be given to retaining him. No action appears to have been taken on the basis of that memorandum.

Another memorandum, dated April 18, 1947, from CSA to the Personnel Division, stated "investigation reveals unfavorable information relating to the character or suitability of the subject," and this memorandum completed the file on the subject.

The subject is still employed by the Department.

This is a good example of an instance where substantial derogatory information was available to reject the applicant, but the derogatory information is of such a nature that there will be difficulty in getting rid of the employee on the basis of that information.

No. 98

This man is a Foreign Service applicant.

A former employer said, "He entertained quite advanced or even radical tendencies and beliefs politically." A reference was noncommittal as to his loyalty. An informant (reference) said that he was, while with UNRRA, a supporter of the Communists in Greece. There is a strong indication that he sent greetings to the Daily Worker on May 4, 1934. Two reliable sources vouched for his political radicalism in the 1930's. A report dated April 10, 1947 indicates he is definitely a leftist. The subject closely associated with at one time, and used as a character witness, an individual with doubtful business ethics and an associate of Communists.

A note of June 6, 1947, indicates the subject was appointed statistician, Grade CAF-11, resubmission with termination in Grade CAF-11 at $5,750 per annum on August 29, 1946.

The file contained the following: "To be investigated when volume of work permits." This case is still pending. The natural question in this case is why he was employed by the Greece Mission in June, July, and August in view of the above facts.

Individuals listed as Nos. 99-102, inclusive, are examples of applicants who are still being investigated although substantial derogatory information is available.

No. 99

This applicant is presently associated with the Americans for Democratic Action, a supposedly anti-Communist liberal organization.

Several references state he is a liberal but anti-Communist. One informant states he is a friend of C-36, of FCC, a reported Communist. He is a member of the National Lawyers Guild and Washington Book Shop. His wife belongs to the League of Women Shoppers. The applicant is a subscriber to New Masses, and has closely associated with members of the American Peoples' Mobilization and Washington Committee for Democratic Action. A relative of his has a financial interest in the Daily Worker.

Inquiry at the Personnel Department reflects that he was not employed inasmuch as security clearance was not given soon enough and he accepted another position. Mr. Ryan of that Office advised that Under Secretary Clayton's Office has requested completion of the investigation in this case in the event he is considered for a position in the future. The case was still pending on October 31, 1947.

No. 100

He is an applicant for a P-8 position with the State Department.

He has been employed by the Treasury Department from April 1940 to the present time, except for military leave from July 1942 to December 1942. He is highly recommended by E-3 and is an apparent prodigy of E-2. Both of these individuals are allegedly engaged in Soviet espionage activities.

CSA has received information from another Governmental agency to the effect that the subject was one of many contacts of E-19, subject of a Soviet espionage case.

One of subject's references refused recommendation of him because of his association with two pro-Communists.

Little investigation has been conducted as of October 1947 and the case was pending with several leads outstanding.

No. 101

This man is an applicant for a P-7 position.

Investigation was initiated June 25, 1947. The file reflected that he studied under Harold Laski at the London School of Economics, 1927-1929. In 1933 he wrote an article "Applied Marxism in Soviet Russia" which was an objective review of the principles of Marxism as applied by Lenin and Stalin. He pointed out that much progress had been made in Russia up to that time and predicted that program would continue to be made "toward the completion of the foundation of the classless socialist state". One of his former associates of UNRRA praised him and referred to his excellent educational background. In this connection investigation at the University of Wisconsin revealed that he was dropped for poor scholarship at that school in 1921, readmitted in 1923 and dropped again in 1924. Prior to coming with the Government in 1942, applicant's top salary was $3,700 per annum. On his application he indicated that he would not accept less than $8,500 per annum. His only position in excess of that has been with UNRRA. A coworker at the War Foods Administration in a report dated September 3, 1947, expressed reservations concerning his loyalty. The report reads

"He stated further that the applicant admitted his loyalty to the Government, had been questioned on two occasions when he was asked about the articles on Russia and the Communist activities of his father. It was alleged by the applicant that he was mistaken for his father who has the same name and who is known to have attended some Communist meetings." The applicant traveled to Russia in 1936.

As of October 15, 1947, the investigation was still pending.

No. 102

This man is an applicant. He is presently employed by Twentieth Century Fox and, as such, made a study of Greece. From July 1942 until November 1946, he was employed by the Chicago Sun. He was associated with E-20. This individual was involved with Philip Jaffee in the case in which confidential documents were allegedly turned over to outside sources. The applicant was dropped from Northwestern and Wisconsin Universities for poor scholarship. He was a participant in a round-table discussion on a Northwestern University program in 1945. In this discussion he took the side of the Chinese Communists as opposed to the Chinese Government. He has been quoted for some time as being a great admirer of Russia. On July 16, 1944, he was quoted as saying "Henry Wallace is the outstanding symbol of American Democracy." On July 8, 1945, he indicated that Russia "has much of economic and social democracy to teach."

However, in spite of the above information, no one interviewed during the course of his investigation raised any question as to his loyalty.

His investigation is pending.

* * * * *

Numbers 103-106, which follow, are typical of numerous cases where some question as to the person's loyalty exists, but where little information actually exists on which to make an evaluation.

No. 103

He is with the Division of International Security Affairs.

A memorandum of July 25, 1947, indicated that Under Secretary Robert Lovett had raised some question about the security of the Division of International Security Affairs. The file indicates that the subject visits socially with a well-known leftist, CC-37. It further indicates that he was a member of the American Committee for Democratic Action and his wife was very active in the Washington Committee for Aid to China.

This case is pending.

No. 104

She is in the Office of Foreign Liquidation Commission.

A memorandum of December 9, 1946, stated that one informant had said that subject had criticized our foreign policy. A number of informants have emphasized that she entertains negroes and whites, both men and women, in her apartment. However, none of these informants appear to be able to furnish any information pointing out anything irregular with these meetings.

Another Government investigative agency reported that her brother was suspected of having Communist sympathies. She has been an officer in one of the Locals of the United Public Workers of America. She has been very active in behalf of the Union. In 1943 she was employed for a couple of months as a clerk for a liberal Senator (X-17). The memorandum mentioned above concludes as follows:

"Investigation would seem to indicate that the risk involved in employing the applicant requires careful consideration."

No. 105

He is on the Special Projects Staff.

The file reflects, as indicated in a memorandum of February 26, 1947, that numerous confidential informants reported he "was pro-Communist, radical, left-wing, of dubious background, etc." His father is regarded as very liberal.

The file developed no tangible proof of any Communist activities on the part of the subject. He was given security clearance on the date of the memorandum.

No. 106

This individual is a Chief in the Division of International Labor.

Information was received in October 1946, that the subject was a member of the Washington Book Shop in 1941, and that he is a fellow traveler. Substantial investigation was conducted, but as of June 18, 1947, when the last report was prepared, the allegation had not been proved or disproved and the case is still pending.

* * * * *

Numbers 107 and 108 are cases of individuals who left the Department, one by resignation and the other by reduction in force, a year or more after considerable derogatory information was available and on which action was not taken by the responsible officials.

No. 107

This is another case of failure to take action on unfavorable information until many months after the information was available.

The subject was born in New Jersey in 1919 of Russian-born parents. She was employed as a correspondence secretary at the White House from November 1940 to April 1944. She was a typist for the Soviet Information Bulletin, Soviet Embassy, Washington, D. C., from May 1944 to February 1945. Her salary at the White House was $2,700 per year.

In February 1945, she appeared at the Personnel Division of the State Department and requested a job, indicating her willingness to accept a position for $1,800. After she had been employed by the State Department for one month she specifically requested a job in the office of a certain high official and was transferred to that office from the Personnel Division. Her duties in that office were the receiving, screening, and distribution of all cablegrams for the high official. She also handled important documents of international and economic significance.

In her Form 57 she gave as references the names of two employees of the Soviet Embassy. The above information was set out in a memorandum dated July 27, 1945, in the file of the subject.

A memorandum dated November 17, 1945, from the Office of Controls, to Assistant Secretary Russell, pointed out the above facts and stated that for the subject to have been an employee of the Soviet Embassy she must have been accepted politically by them. The memorandum further stated that she is a member of the Washington Book Shop and subscribes to the Soviet Information Bulletin. The memorandum suggested that these facts be brought to the attention of the official for whom she worked. There is no indication in the file that this action was ever taken.

On February 12, 1947, the Security Office disapproved clearance for the subject to accompany the American Delegation to the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers.

In a report of March 6, 1947, the CSA investigator points out a number of instances of untruthfulness on the part of the subject found during the investigation which he reported in 25 pages. The investigator commented that "in the entire course of this investigation it is apparent that the subject exaggerates, deviates from truthfulness in varying degrees, and in a number of instances has made misstatements of facts so as to place herself in a more favorable position." The report also states that a former supervisor of subject at The White House said he had caught the subject in several lies and would not recommend her for a position of trust and confidence. Several other witnesses referred to her as a liar.

She reportedly associated closely with two women who were known to be pro-Communists. One of these women was interviewed and recommended the subject highly. Several witnesses reported the subject as pro-Russian. One informant said the subject had described John Foster Dulles as a Fascist and she was against General Bor, the anti-Communist General of Poland, and also disliked General Mihailovitch, of Yugoslavia.

A memorandum of April 1, 1947, from the Office of Controls, to Counsel-ACOPS, summarized the information against the subject and recommended her transfer to a position where she would not have access to highly classified information, and if such position could not be found for her, it was recommended her services be terminated.

A memorandum of April 9, 1947, from Mr. Peurifoy to Mr. Robinson stated that Mr. Peurifoy had reached the conclusion that she should be transferred to other work. There is no indication in the file, however, that this action was taken.

On June 18, 1947, a memorandum was prepared in CSA to Mr. Peurifoy again summarizing the facts and recommended the removal of subject from the rolls of the Department. There is no indication in the file that action was taken on the basis of this memorandum.

On August 8, 1947, a memorandum from Arch K. Jean, of the Personnel Division to the Office of Controls stated that the subject had submitted her resignation from the Department effective at a subsequent date.

No. 108

This is a case of lack of follow-up on unfavorable security information and also indicates poor supervision.

The subject was employed with OWI in July of 1944 and, subsequently, was transferred to the State Department as a Public Affairs Officer in OIE. In the file was a form memorandum, dated December 17, 1946, from the Office of Controls to the Foreign Personnel Division, which approved him for appointment purposes.

Another memorandum of the same date, from the Office of Controls to the Foreign Personnel Division, suggested careful consideration be given to his employment as investigation indicated his suitability for employment was questionable. The memorandum further suggested he be interviewed and requested to explain the following items discovered during the course of the investigation:

1. His arrest in 1935 for passing three worthless checks totaling $100.00.
2. His "no" answer to Question 28 on Form 57 (this is a question regarding whether applicant has been convicted of any criminal offenses).
3. His dismissal from a Missouri college.
4. His alleged failure to make restitution to that Missouri college of funds advanced to him for which he gave a note.
5. His giving of a worthless check to a Tulane University Professor in 1934.
6. His alleged padding of expense accounts while traveling for another college in 1930 and his dismissal therefor.

In addition to the above, several persons interviewed stated that they could not recommend the subject because of the activities mentioned above.

The Director of a Psychopathic Hospital in Iowa stated, in response to request for information by a CSA Agent, that the subject was examined in 1935, and was diagnosed as possessing a "psychopathic personality." This Director further said, "although in a certain number of cases, there is an improvement with maturity the lack of constitutional stability always makes such individuals a poor risk for a responsible position."

There is no indication in the file that the subject was ever interviewed, and he remained on the rolls until he was the victim of a reduction in force in October 1947.

Appendix for Case No. 78

The following is from CSA report dated February 17, 1947, partly paraphrased where necessary to protect informants, etc.

X-18 stated that his confidential files contained nothing on the subject and that his personal contacts with the subject are very infrequent so that he is unable to give anything definite about her. He stated that the efficiency ratings "Excellent" received by subject may as well be disregarded and that there is very little use to contact any of the references or supervisors given by subject in her Form 57. To clarify the above statement, he offered, in a very guarded and discreet manner, an explanation which is based only upon his impression, and it was very difficult for him to substantiate with concrete facts in all the details. He stated that since the start of the organization, it appeared that the personnel in the Policy Information Division consisted mostly of a very closely allied group, some of whom knew each other before they joined the organization, or became very chummy after joining it. This is substantiated by a superficial check of Forms 57 from that Division which disclosed an amazing frequency in use of names of the same people for references. It almost is "I refer to you and you refer to me." The informant stated further that practically on every occasion when someone from that Division was considered for dismissal, because of inefficiency, uselessness, or even for outright violations of the U. S. Civil Service Regulations—for example, falsifying information on Form 57 and others—the entire Division or at least the most prominent members of it, would rush to the culprit's defense, claiming he or she was indispensable and irreplaceable. Such clannishness amongst the members of the Division oversteps the harmony desired in any organization and acquires an entirely different and undesired aspect. He stated that through his association with the Division and his analysis of it, he still cannot draw a definite conclusion regarding it. It might be that its members are only a bunch of liberals banded together, a group of opportunists who are trying to feather their own beds and who are acting in consort, or even some radicals who are protecting the inefficient and are making friends for themselves, facilitating thereby their subversive work. At any rate, the informant stated that to contact the individuals mentioned as references would be a useless task for they all give the most flattering information about each other. In view of the above, various other heads of the International Broadcasting Division sections were contacted.

X-19, before expressing his opinion on the subject, gave a brief outline of his relationship with the Policy Information Desk and his opinion of it. He stated that when he started to work with OWI at the outbreak of the war, he felt an apprehension about the personnel connected with it. He felt that although on the whole the personnel consisted of men and women loyal to the United States and eager to sincerely help in the prosecution of the war and to protect the interests of this country, there was also a group, and a substantial one, which did not fall in this category. He found many "fellow travelers" if not outright Communists who were organized in a very closely knit sect, members of which protected each other and continuously assailed anyone who disagreed with their way of thinking. This informant attempted to "combat them" but they were too strong for him and as a result he was transferred to another job. Upon returning to New York and his present job, he discovered that although some of the members of the sect were gone, the majority still remained and continued their "unhealthy activities." He also stated that it was difficult to furnish concrete evidence, at least in a strong enough form, to prove that the subject and the rest of her crowd were Communists. However, there are a multitude of small clues which point to them as a bunch of "pseudo-liberals" whose work is damaging and who "almost terrorized" the rest of the personnel. "It is unhealthy to oppose them" and they conduct themselves in a most clever and insidious way that it is difficult to get anything on them. The informant further stated that it appears that through her extreme intelligence and cleverness, the subject is the center of this group, to which also belonged some of their associates who no longer are in the employ of the State Department: they include C-24, C-38, C-39, C-40, and some others who were regarded as undesirable and dangerous to the State Department. Informant stated that C-24 and C-38 still keep in touch with the subject, visiting the office in the evenings and are very much in evidence on various farewell and other parties. He added that it appears that subject No. 79 is very much under the influence of subject, backing her up in everything, including her attempts to get rid of personnel (even some not employed under her supervision) who dare to disagree with her. Informant indicated he would have been in favor of subject's participating in guiding the International Broadcasting Division's operations but for the fact that he has no confidence in her.

X-20, a third informant, was very careful in selecting his statements, attempting to commit himself as little as possible. He said in his opinion, subject was definitely not a Communist and that he did not suspect her in purposely distorting the policy of the State Department; at least he did not see any definite pattern in any possible "mistakes" made in either selecting the material or in the "Guidance Bulletins" issued by the Policy Control Desk. On the other hand, he thought that at times the material suggested could have been selected better, as well as when some articles taken for the MRD* were contracted for the reason of saving space, some parts of them which were removed were the "core" and without them the meaning was changed entirely. However, again the informant indicated that he thought this was due to the "moderate ability" of the people involved in preparation of MRD's and not to a definite purposeful pattern of subversive activity. He mentioned, however, that the faulty selected material was at times at cross purposes with the State Department policy and at times even hindered its execution. He referred to an incident where the release of some news items has tipped off prematurely the Department's policy regarding some bases in the Arctic. It was apparent during this interview that the informant did not want to commit himself one way or the other.

A fourth informant, X-21, said the subject is "The head" of the group of "pseudo-liberals," even Communists, to which C-38, C-24 and C-40 also belonged. She is their "moving spirit" and "protector" and heads any and all persecutions against anyone who disagrees with her and who may at one time or another question the material in her Daily Guidance Bulletins and MRD's. The informant indicated that many of the Daily Guidance Bulletins which are written by subject are constructed in such a way as to make the broadcast material prepared in a form advantageous to Communist policy line and to the U. S. S. R. He said subject and her crowd are domineering almost the entire personnel of the IBD because the Daily Guidance Bulletins and the MRD's emanate from her and she is also the one who interprets and enforces them. "She has very powerful connections in Washington" and is constantly backed by them whether in protection of personnel scheduled for dismissal for inefficiency or infraction of rules (provided they belong to the crowd) or assailing of anyone who may dare to question her instructions. The informant's opinion of the subject is definitely unfavorable, and he also stated that because of his not infrequent disagreements with the subject, he has incurred her displeasure and is made a victim of frequent attacks by her.

A fifth informant, X-14, termed the entire Policy Information Section as a bunch of "pseudo-liberals" and "fellow travelers". Specifically, he referred to some instances when MRD's emanating from the subject contained instructions on material to be used for broadcasting, regarded by him as definitely in disagreement with the official policy of the State Department and detrimental and harmful to it. He stated that unfortunately he cannot make any direct accusations of the subject being a Communist or purposely sabotaging the Department's policy in favor of the U. S. S. R., but that the results are just as damaging whether she does it consciously or unconsciously. He also stated it is very difficult, practically impossible, to collect concrete evidence to substantiate his feeling of distrust of the subject but that a close study of the MRD's issued by the subject and the material upon which they are based would be the best way to illustrate the point. He further stated that by omission of either a few words in the material usually taken out of newspapers or of the source of the information, the meaning is sometimes confusing or even reversed entirely from the original and always favoring the line of propaganda by the U. S. S. R. or its satellites. He stated that some of the commentators and producers have come to him from time to time and inferred that they refused to present on the air some of the material sent to them via MRD's because they considered it detrimental to the United States.

A sixth informant, X-22, indicated that his opinion of the subject, based on several years of association with her, is an unfavorable one. He said he examines all the material submitted to him after it has had the subject's OK and on numerous occasions he was forced to make corrections or changes because he felt that if it went on the air in its original form, it would undermine the policy of the State Department. He explained that the violation was never a gross one, but a few words omitted here, changed just a bit there, have changed the meaning intended for the broadcast, always favoring the U. S. S. R. The informant stated he felt the members and employees of the Department, who are paid by the American taxpayers, should observe the interests of the United States first and not the interests of any foreign country. He added that his attempts to safeguard the interests of the State Department have caused the ire of subject and she made every attempt to discredit him in accusing him of all sorts of mistakes and infractions allegedly made by him, and that she made her accusations through her Daily Bulletin. He also stated that some of the sincerely loyal workers are either "terrorized" by subject or are very apprehensive and bewildered. He said he cannot accuse subject of being a Communist, but that the work she is doing is playing into the hands of the Communists, and he considers her too clever and too intelligent to be unaware of what she is doing.

A seventh informant, X-23, refused to comment on the subject because of short association, but he expressed apprehension regarding the way security is handled (the examination of material), stating he can't help but feel that the Policy Control Desk and the subject are lax in performing their duty.

(The following observations were made by the CSA investigator as set out in his report of February 17, 1947.)

From the above statements made by the informants contacted, the following brief résumé might be construed; it would appear that the subject of this investigation belongs to a rather closely knit group of individuals, superior and subordinate to her, and constituting a substantial part of the employees of the Policy Information Desk. This group is termed as "pseudo-liberals", "fellow travelers", and "almost outright Communists" who unfortunately are placed in the most critical positions in the entire International Broadcasting Division.

This group, especially the subject is charged with the responsibility of composing Daily Guidance Bulletins which instruct all the various Desks as to the type of material to be used in the daily broadcasts abroad, indicating which material should be stressed, played up to, or modified. It is also issuing the Daily MRD's with definitely prepared material, and it is also reviewing and correcting the material prepared for the broadcast by all the Desks. From the accusations made by the informants, it appears that the Policy Information Desk, and especially subject, have influenced the radio broadcasts to acquire a more pro-Communist and pro-U. S. S. R. aspect, thereby undermining the official policy of the State Department. This has been done—not in a crude and self-evident way—but very cleverly and insidiously through putting stress on the wrong kind of material, through selecting the material disproportionately in far greater quantities from the left wing press in comparison with the true ratio of it in the entire field of newspapers, through cutting out the punch lines—which changes the meaning of the articles, and using similar means which, if taken up one by one separately, would not show the subject and her crowd as Communists, but collectively are weakening the State Department foreign policy and are definitely damaging it. One of the informants contacted indicated that a telegram has been received from a Foreign Service officer in the Balkans who pointed out that the work of the Foreign Service was hampered, instead of facilitated, by the wrong kind of material broadcast to the country in which he was stationed.

It also appears that subject and her crowd exert a very strong influence on many employees of the IBD, even some not in her section, through constantly protecting "her people" regardless of their ability and usefulness, attacking people who question any of her instructions or who just don't belong to her crowd, and through attempting to replace the latter category with her "own people."

In view of the fact that very little concrete evidence was presented by the informants to substantiate the charges against the subject, which is due to "her clever and insidious way of operating," suggestion was made by the majority of them that an unbiased and competent party be delegated to examine the following documents: all the Daily Guidance Bulletins issued by subject and all the MRD's issued daily, the latter to be compared with the material from which they were taken. However, your Agent was cautioned that it was necessary to examine this material, not for one day only, but for some appreciable length of time (a month or two), and that whoever will make this examination should personally see to it that all the right material would be submitted for inspection—this so that no material could be withheld or substituted. Example was given that it was always evident when some material was submitted for examination to the Congressional Committee, for a few days before that and for the period covered by this Congressional check-up, the tone and content of material changed appreciably.

Neighborhood investigation and contact with former employers developed no information concerning Communist activities on the part of subject or her husband. One former employer said he would not reemploy her because she was not good in publicity work; and as a writer, she had numerous limitations. He indicated that in private business, her present top salary would be not more than $80 per week. In all sincerity, this former employer said he could not see the subject employed in her present capacity which he considers entirely "out of her class."

A memorandum of February 6, 1947, by an employee who caught the change illustrates how changing a few words can change the entire meaning in a commentary. A commentary dealing with the new youth directive regarding Germany contained the following two sentences: "But Democracy is not a doctrine as National Socialism was a doctrine. Democracy means basically nothing else but the honest acceptance of a handful of rules for life in the community." On the Daily Report on Radio Output for February 4, 1947, these two sentences appeared as follows: "Contrary to national socialism, democracy is not a doctrine; basically, democracy means only the honest acceptance of a handful of rules for communist life." The employee who noted this change brought it up with the subject who stated, "So you're going to make a fight about it? If so, I will be forced to protect my people." (This Daily Report had been prepared by one of the subject's assistants.) Inasmuch as the employee who noted the change was responsible for preparation of the material in this commentary, he would be blamed for the "change" if it were noticed in Washington.

The following additional information is taken from the CSA Agent's report of March 10, 1947:

Informant X-19 pointed out to the Agent that in examining copies of MRD's and Daily Guidance Bulletins, it would be preferable to examine those in the middle months of 1946 rather than the last months, because after October 1946, "when the ax fell," there was a more cautious attitude on the part of the subject and her personnel. He also said that he has gained the impression that subject No. 79 has not consulted in the past, and is not now consulting the Area Division at the Department in formulating or in interpreting the Department's policy toward the U. S. S. R., which would appear rather strange since the policy of the Department is formulated upon the Area Specialist's advice. This informant expressed the hope that the Policy Information Desk be abolished, not only because he has no confidence in the personnel employed by it, but also because he feels it is an unnecessary superstructure, the elimination of which is also desired for administrative reasons.

Another example of the effect of selection of material for broadcasts by the subject and her personnel cited to the Agent is the following:

A Telegram from Budapest February 23, 1947, pointed out that many Hungarians not Marxist in outlook listen to the Moscow radio for reports and comment on developments in Hungary, because the American radio does not include such reports and comments. The telegram stated that failure to report and comment on Hungarian developments reduces the size and enthusiasm of the Hungarian audience and also suggests either that America is uninformed; or that what the Moscow radio says is true; or that America has no interest in Hungarian developments. The telegram suggested the situation should be rectified. The informant took up the matter with the Head of the Hungarian Desk, C-41 (who has since been dismissed for security reasons), and that individual pointed out in defense of himself that his broadcasts are prepared strictly in accordance with the Daily Guidance Bulletins, and that he cannot put in any material which is not approved by them.

A report on examination of Daily Guidance Bulletins and MRD's by CSA apparently had not been prepared as of the time of the Staff survey.

FOR RELEASE AT 7 P. M., E. D. T., SUNDAY, MAY 14, 1950. NOT TO BE PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED, QUOTED FROM, OR USED IN ANY WAY

The following letter has been sent to the more than 500 full members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors:

MAY 12, 1950.

As a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, you undoubtedly heard or read Senator Joseph McCarthy's speech before the ASNE convention in Washington on April 20.

While the Secretary dealt with the same general subject in his subsequent speech, he of course did not undertake to deal with the specific allegations made by Senator McCarthy.

I am therefore attaching an analysis, point by point, of some of the inaccuracies contained in the Senator's speech.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD W. BARRETT,
Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs.

ANALYSIS OF SENATOR MCCARTHY'S SPEECH TO ASNE

1. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"First, as to the figure 205." He then went on to assert that he had made it clear that he never claimed to have the names of 205 known Communists allegedly working in the State Department.

The facts.—In a radio address at Wheeling, West Virginia, on February 9, 1950, Senator McCarthy stated: "And, ladies and gentlemen, while I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as active members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205 * * * list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department." He was quoted to this effect by the Associated Press, and subsequently two officials of the radio station over which he spoke signed affidavits saying that they followed Senator McCarthy's speech and that this was what he said.

2. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—Two hundred and five persons "were named as bad security risks" and were "listed by the President's own security board and the forerunner of the present Loyalty Board as dangerous to our Government." He also stated that this "President's own security board" was "gotten rid of by Acheson in favor of a weaker board."

The facts.—In 1945, approximately 3,000 employees were transferred to the Department of State from other agencies. An ad hoc committee responsible to Assistant Secretary of State Russell, under Secretary of State Byrnes, was set up to carry out preliminary screening of these 3,000 people. On July 15, 1946, this committee filed a report listing 285 tentative disapprovals in categories ranging all the way from automatic disapproval of aliens to disapprovals in the basis of derogatory information.

The report specifically stated, however, that:

"Any disapproval of the 285 may be reversed and subsequently approved if the further investigation resolves the investigation in favor of the employee. This is reported in order that the total disapproval basis may be thoroughly understood and does not mean on the surface there are or were 285 people in the Department against whom charges would eventually be preferred."

Today all of these transferees into the State Department originally screened for further consideration or action are either no longer in the State Department or have been thoroughly investigated and cleared for employment. Those still on the roll, number 46. Those 46 have, of course, been checked under the President's Loyalty Program by the FBI.

This departmental screening group, which Senator McCarthy referred to as the "President's own security board", was not abolished by Secretary Acheson. It automatically went out of existence in the fall of 1946 upon the completion of its screening job, at which time Mr. Byrnes was Secretary of State. The present Loyalty Board was established by Secretary Marshall in the summer of 1947.

3. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"What is wrong with the misnamed Loyalty Board? Perhaps the case of George Wheeler, whom you will recall as having recently sought asylum from democracy behind the iron curtain, may explain why Communists, bad security and bad policy risks are retained on the Government payroll. Wheeler was first unanimously rejected by the Loyalty Board. * * * Later the Loyalty Board reversed itself and passed him and sent him a letter of apology."

The facts.—At no time has the case of George Wheeler ever been considered by a security or loyalty board of the Department of State. Mr. Wheeler was one of a group of former FEA employees in Germany who in September 1945, were transferred temporarily to the rolls of the State Department. In February 1946, that whole group was transferred to the War Department, and in fact Mr. Wheeler's transfer to the War Department was even earlier—in December 1945. During his brief time on the State Department payroll, Mr. Wheeler's case was under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. All these facts were set out in a departmental press release a week before Senator McCarthy made his misstatements.

4. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"There are 600 clerks in the United States who have access to those [loyalty] files daily * * * yet five Senators cannot crack a file cover."

The facts.—Access to loyalty files is normally limited strictly to FBI and other Government officials and their responsible subordinates when, and only when, particular files are needed in the proper execution of their duties.

5. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"First, let's look at that perennial joiner, Dr. Philip Jessup, our Ambassador at large. * * * Why does he always join Communist fronts? Why not anti-Communist organizations?"

The facts.—Dr. Jessup testified, before the subcommittee, that he had joined no Communist-front organizations, whereas the organizations to which he did belong included the following:

- The American Legion (He is a former commander of Utica Post, No. 229.)
- The American Philosophical Society
- The Foreign Policy Association.
- The American Bar Association

6. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"* * * Dr. Jessup had control of the magazine Far Eastern Survey, when the Communist Campaign in 1943 was initiated therein to smear Chiang Kai-shek and deify all the Communists. * * * I pointed out that he was head of the Research Advisory Board having complete control of the magazine during the height of the Communist Party line campaign. * * * Mr. Jessup's aide-de-camp was a Mr. T. A. Bisson, another expert on Far Eastern Affairs. He has spent considerable time in the State Department."

The facts.—Dr. Jessup was not Chairman of the Research Advisory Committee of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations in 1943. He was merely one of 50 trustees of the American Council. Mr. T. A. Bisson never was an employee of the Department of State.

7. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"* * * I am going to leave here on the table a number of photostats of checks representing Communist money—thousands of dollars—which was paid to his organization. * * * The Communists knew what those thousands of dollars were being paid for." As documentation, Senator McCarthy provided photostats of two checks signed by Frederick Vanderbilt Field totaling $3,500.

The facts.—At that time, Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, President of the University of California, was Chairman of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations; Mr. Francis Harmon, Vice President of the Motion Picture Export Association, was Treasurer; and Mr. William R. Herod, now President of the International General Electric Co., was Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. Juan Trippe, President of Pan American Airways, and Mr. Henry Luce, of Time and Life, were sponsors of a drive during that period for funds on behalf of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Mr. Field's contributions, according to Senator McCarthy's own figures, totaled only $3,500, as compared with a total expense for the two-year period of approximately $200,000. About half of the amount was met by contributions from the Rockefeller Foundation and Carnegie Corporation. Generous donations by large industrial concerns made up a large portion of the remainder.

As Ambassador Jessup stated on April 3, 1950, "Surely these gentlemen would never have accepted payment from Mr. Field or anyone else for selling the Communist Party line."

8. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"Now, let's briefly discuss the architect of our far-eastern policy, this man Owen Lattimore.

The facts.—Senator Tydings asked Secretaries Hull, Byrnes, Marshall, and Acheson whether this description was true or false. They all replied that it was false.

9. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"The Afghanistan Government asked the United States in December of 1949 to send a preliminary mission to Afghanistan to investigate the possibility of economic development under United Nations technical assistance program. Owen Lattimore was selected to head this mission."

The facts.—Neither the United States nor the Department of State had anything to do with the sending of this mission to Afghanistan. It was sent by the United Nations at the request of the Afghanistan Government.

Senator McCarthy's statement is a repetition of a similar statement previously made on the floor of the Senate, citing the Library of Congress as the source of his information. On April 11, Senator Green of Rhode Island read on the floor of the Senate a letter dated April 10 from Dr. Luther Evans, Librarian of Congress, regarding Senator McCarthy's original quotation of this alleged information from the Library of Congress. Dr. Evans' reply said:

"I beg to report that the Library of Congress knows of no information to the effect that the Afghanistan Government ever made a request to the State Department in relation to the Owen Lattimore mission; to the effect that the United Nations consulted the State Department on Dr. Lattimore's appointment to the mission; to the effect that the State Department recommended Dr. Lattimore for this assignment, or to the effect that Dr. Lattimore's expense on this trip and any salary or fee which may be involved are a charge on the United States, except in the sense that the United States is one of the contributors to the United Nations Treasury.

"It is our understanding that the Afghanistan Government made a request to the United Nations in December 1949, for a technical assistance mission, that the United Nations responded by sending a preliminary survey mission to investigate the possibilities of a program of technical assistance and general economic development, and that the United Nations Secretariat chose Dr. Lattimore as one of the members of this preliminary survey mission."

Dr. Evans' statements are completely in line with the facts as known to the Department.

10. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"* * * about three weeks ago I made a statement to the effect that Owen Lattimore had been requested by Acheson to, and did furnish to the State Department a document to act as a guide for Ambassador at Large Jessup insofar as Asiatic policy was concerned." He also referred to this document as "Lattimore's instructions to Jessup," and gave the impression that the Secretary and the Department attempted to conceal the document by calling it confidential.

The Facts.—The Department publicly and fully explained in press conferences on March 31 that Owen Lattimore was one of a group of 31 persons who submitted written memoranda in response to requests made in August 1949, by Ambassador Jessup. These memoranda were used as background material by a consultants' committee consisting of Mr. Raymond B. Fosdick, Mr. Everett Case, and Ambassador Jessup in their study of United States foreign policy in the Far East. Mr. Lattimore as director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations at Johns Hopkins, was also one of 25 private individuals participating in a round-table discussion on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949, arranged by the Office of Public Affairs for the purpose of exchanging views with informed private citizens on United States foreign policy toward China. The 31 who submitted memoranda were:

The following, including Mr. Lattimore and some others of the 31, attended the Round Table at the Department October 6, 7, and 8 to discuss Far East Policy:

Joseph W. Ballantine, the Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.
 Bernard Brodie, Department of International Relations Yale University, New Haven, Conn.
 Claude A. Buss, Director of Studies, Army War College, Washington, D. C.
 Kenneth Colegrove, Department of Political Science, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.
 Arthur G. Coons, president, Occidental College, Los Angeles, Calif.

 Ernest B. MacNaughton, Chairman of the Board, First National Bank, Portland, Oreg.
 George C. Marshall, President, American Red Cross, Washington, D. C.
 J. Morden Murphy, Assistant Vice President, Bankers Trust Co., New York, N. Y.
 Nathaniel Peffer, Department of Public Law and Government, Columbia University, New York, N. Y.
 Harold S. Quigley, Department of Political Science, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.

Edwin O. Reischauer, Department of Far Eastern Languages, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

William S. Robertson, president, American and Foreign Power Co., New York, N. Y.

John D. Rockefeller III, president, Rockefeller Brothers' Fund, New York, N. Y.

Lawrence K. Rosinger, American Institute of Pacific Relations, New York, N. Y.

Eugene Staley, Executive Director, World Affairs Council of Northern California, San Francisco, Calif.

Harold Stassen, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

Phillips Talbot, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

George E. Taylor, University of Washington, Seattle, Wash.

Harold M. Vinacke, Department of Political Science, University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.

All of the memoranda and all of the views above referred to were of course submitted to confidence by their authors, and the Department could not expect these people to be frank unless it respected that confidence. The Department would not and did not, however, in any way interfere with publication of any memorandum by its author. In fact, the substance of Mr. Lattimore's article was published in an article which he wrote for the January 1950 issue of the Atlantic magazine.

11. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE—"Here is the Comintern program for Asia: (1) The armies of Chiang Kai-shek must be destroyed; (2) The United States must be forced to withdraw from Korea; (3) Force the withdrawal of the United States forces from Japan; (4) Prevent the formation of a Pacific pact against Communist aggression. * * *

"That is the official Communist Party program. There is nothing secret about it.

"Here is Jessup's program, in this document. There is nothing secret about that either, since we forced the State Department to make that public. What does Mr. Lattimore advocate as a foreign policy for Asia?

"(1) Abandon Chiang Kai-shek.

"(2) Get out of Korea.

"(3) Get out of Japan.

"(4) Deny the need of a Pacific pact.

"Is this striking parallel the result of master planning or is it pure accident? I leave it to you gentlemen to decide."

Senator McCarthy thus stated that Owen Lattimore's memorandum as summarized by Senator McCarthy to parallel the Comintern program "is Jessup's program."

The Facts.—There is no "Jessup program" distinct from United States foreign policy. The United States record and policy in the Far East, as it relates to the points made by Senator McCarthy, is well known. In the light of the Senator's charges, however, it may be summarized:

(1) The United States poured tremendous amounts of aid into China in efforts to bolster the government of Chiang Kai-shek.

(2) The United States has led the fight for a free, democratic Korea; took its case to the United Nations; and, since the establishment of this government, has contributed substantial economic and military support.

(3) The United States as the principal occupying power in Japan will not enter into any peace treaty which makes impossible adequate protection of United States' security interests in the Western Pacific.

(4) The United States has publicly indicated that it would look with sympathy upon a regional alliance of Pacific nations, provided the impetus for such an association came from the nations themselves.

12. Senator McCarthy said to the ASNE.—"This letter from Lattimore to Joseph Barnes, dated June 13, 1943, * * * was an order to Barnes to get rid of all Chinese employees with OWI who were loyal to Chiang Kai-shek, and supplant them with Chinese loyal to the Communists."

The Facts.—Mr. Lattimore, of course, is not connected with the Department of State, but all OWI correspondence is now in the custody of the Department. At the time Senator McCarthy publicly read from it, the document in question was classified "Secret." It has subsequently been declassified and the letter in its entirety was read into the record before the Senate subcommittee on April 6. Moreover, the Department sent Senator McCarthy a copy of the letter on April 10.

The letter does not say what Senator McCarthy asserted it did. What it does say is: "In the circumstances, we have to be extremely careful about our Chinese personnel. While we need to avoid recruiting any Chinese Communists, we must be careful not to be frightened out of hiring people who have loosely been accused of being Communists * * *. For our purposes, it is wise to recruit as many unaffiliated Chinese as we can, to pick people whose loyalty will be reasonably assured on the one hand by the salaries which we pay them and on the other hand by the fact that they do not receive salaries or subsidies from somewhere else." (A copy of the letter is attached.)

OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION,
111 SUTTER STREET,
San Francisco, Calif., June 15, 1943.

Mr. JOSEPH BARNES,
Office of War Information,
224 West 57th Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR JOE: In your capacity as a member of our Personnel Security Committee there are certain things which you ought to know about Chinese personnel. It is a delicate matter for me to tell you about these things because of my recent official connection with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. For that reason I am marking this communication "secret."

When we recently reduced the number of our Chinese staff in New York it was quite obvious that there was going to be trouble and that this trouble would take the form of accusations against the remaining personnel. The fact is that certain of the personnel with whose services we dispensed had connections outside the office. This leads directly into the main question. It is extremely important from the point of view of security that intelligence information should not leak out of our office through our Chinese personnel. It is an open secret in Washington that the security of various Chinese agencies there is deplorable. Any pipeline from our office to any of those agencies is not a pipeline but practically an open conduit.

However, it is not only a question of Chinese government agencies. There is also a well-organized and well-financed organization among the Chinese in this country connected with Wang Ching-wei, the Japanese puppet. This can be traced back to the history of the Chinese Revolution as a whole. To present it in the fewest possible words: Sun Yat-sen was largely financed for many years by Chinese living abroad. Not only Sun Yat-sen but Wang Ching-wei had close connections among the overseas Chinese. However much he is a traitor now the fact must be recognized that Wang Ching-wei is a veteran of Chinese politics with connections which he has nourished for many years among Chinese communications abroad including those in the United States.

Chinese in the United States come almost exclusively from a few localities on the coast of China, practically every one of which is now occupied by the Japanese. Thus these Chinese in America have both family connections and financial investments which are under the control of the Japanese, because of his years of political organizing work Wang Ching-wei knows all of these connections and can apply pressure through them.

On the other side there is a special organization within the Kuomintang or Chinese Nationalist Party at Chungking which is charged with maintaining political and financial connections with Chinese overseas. This Overseas Bureau also has a detailed knowledge of the Chinese communities in America and is able to apply pressure. Thus there is a very intense conflict going on every day in every Chinatown in America between the Wang Ching-wei agents and those of the Kuomintang. It must be remembered that while the Kuomintang is able to operate in a private way as a political party among Chinese residents in America, it is also the party which "owns" the Chinese Government and is thus able to make use of Chinese Government agencies.

Thirdly, there are numerous Chinese in America who are politically unaffiliated. There are of course Communists but they have neither the money nor the organization of the Wang Ching-wei and Kuomintang groups. The genuinely unaffiliated Chinese are a curious compound product of Chinese politics and the American environment. They tend to be intensely loyal to China as a country, without conceiving that the Kuomintang or any other political organization has a monopoly right to control of their thoughts and actions. They are like Americans; they like to give their political allegiance, not to have it demanded of them. They are reluctant to support a regimented series of causes laid down for them under orders; like Americans, they often give moral and financial support to a scattered number of causes some of which may even conflict with each other to a certain extent.

The conflict between the Wang Ching-wei organizing group and the Kuomintang organizing group in America cannot be fought out in the open. Both sides have very good reasons for not courting publicity. Each is anxious to bring into its fold as many of the unaffiliated Chinese as possible. Each is anxious not to be exposed as an "un-American" organization or a foreign political group working on American soil. Both of them accordingly find it very good tactics, not only to cover up themselves but to put pressure on those whom they are trying to bring under their control, to accuse unaffiliated Chinese of being Communists. This is an accusation which covers up the accuser at the same time that it puts pressure on the accused.

One of the outstanding rallying points of the unaffiliated Chinese in America is the New China Daily News in New York. This is controlled by an organization of laundrymen. I understand that the shareholders number two or three thousand and that they take an active interest in the newspaper. The essential thing about these laundrymen is that in that in the nature of their business they are independent small-business men. This means that they are on the one hand fairly well insured against Communist ideology, since the small-business man of whatever nationality is likely to be a man who has made his way by his own initiative and enterprise and is therefore suspicious of collectivist economic theories. On the other hand these Chinese small-business proprietors are reluctant to submit themselves unquestionably to the control of the vested interests which have grown up in China in association with the dominant Kuomintang. The New China Daily News, would probably not come under much pressure if it were not for the fact that it is one of the best edited Chinese papers in America with a growing circulation. It does not need to be subsidized or supported by a patron like many, perhaps the majority, of Chinese papers. It pays dividends on its own merits. A number of Chinese language papers in America receive subsidies from the Kuomintang. At least two, and perhaps three, receive subsidies from the Wang Ching-wei group. One or two others trace back to the group within the Kuomintang, which was at one time headed by the late Hu Han-min, a leader of a right-wing faction within the Kuomintang. The Hu Han-min group, though once regarded as right-wing conservatives, are now regarded in China as "old fashioned liberals"—liberal, so to speak, short of the New Deal. They are less bitterly involved in Chinatown politics than the Wang Ching-wei and Kuomintang groups. The two latter, which are engaged in handing out carefully colored news and doctored editorial policies, are intensely jealous of and hostile to an unaffiliated paper like the New China Daily News which, so to speak, flaunts its sins by being so readable that the Chinese public in America buys it for its own sake.

It would be rash to say that there are no Communists connected with the New China Daily News. Here it is necessary to consider another peculiarity of the politics of Chinese living out of China. These Chinese are far from being tied to the chariot wheels of Moscow; but when it comes to resisting the trend toward totalitarian regimentation within China they are often willing to support parts of the program advocated by the Chinese Communists within China. This is so much a part of the pattern of politics of Chinese living out of China that it is not uncommon to find wealthy men, even millionaires, supporting the program of the Chinese Communists in whole or in part. This was, for instance, conspicuous in Malaya before the fall of Singapore. For such prosperous and independent Chinese it was a question either of backing their independent judgment of the steps that needed to be taken toward creating a working democracy within China, or of paying financial tribute to the Kuomintang, which sometimes tends to be autocratic, and not infrequently spurs advise from Chinese abroad at the same time that it demands their financial contributions.

In the specific setting of America, it is the independent small-business man—like the laundryman—rather than the very few wealthy merchants, who most conspicuously maintain this tradition of political independence. In America, some of the most wealthy individuals are either committed to Wang Ching-wei and his puppet Japanese party or at least are hedging until they have a better idea of how the war is finally going to turn out.

In the circumstances we have to be extremely careful about our Chinese personnel. While we need to avoid recruiting any Chinese Communists we must be careful not to be frightened out of hiring people who have loosely been accused of being Communists. We have to be at least equally careful of not hiring people who are pipelines to the Wang Ching-wei group or to one or other of the main faction within the Kuomintang. After all, as American Government agency we should deal with the Chinese Government or regular agencies of the Chinese Government, but should not get in the position of committing ourselves to the Kuomintang, the political party which control the Chinese Government, as if it were itself the Chinese Government. You will recognize both the importance of this proposition and the delicacy which it requires on the operational level.

For our purposes, it is wise to recruit as many unaffiliated Chinese as we can, to pick people whose loyalty will be reasonably assured on the one hand by the salaries which we pay them and on the other hand by the fact that they do not receive salaries or subsidies from somewhere else.

Mr. Chi and Mr. Chew Hong, both of our New York office, conform excellently to these requirements. Mr. Chi I have known for many years. Until his family estates were occupied by the Japanese, he was a wealthy landlord. He was brought up in the older scholastic tradition in China, before the spread of modern western education, but at the same time he is keenly interested in the national unification of China and the orderly development of a stable political organization there. I know by long experience that he is anything but a Communist; I also know that because of his seniority, his background of independent wealth, and his superior mentality he is not a man to be pushed around by party bureaucrats. Chew Hong is a much younger man, but one whom Dr. Chi trusts and of whose integrity he is convinced. There is something in their relationship of the old Chinese standards of disciple and master. As long as Dr. Chi stands in the relationship of loyal friendship to me and the loyalty of an honest employee of an American Government agency, there will be no difficulty with either man, no irresponsible playing with Chinese politics, and no leakage to any Chinese faction.

The retention of both men is therefore a guarantee to the secrecy and security of the work of OWI as well as a guarantee of the confident fulfillment of directives. I urge you not to be high-pressured into getting rid of either man. I know that both men may be subjected to attacks. Given the time to work on it, I could undoubtedly trace such attacks to their origin and give you the full details. I doubt whether the Personnel Security Committee of OWI would be able to trace such attacks, rooted in the intricacies of Chinese factional politics, to their source; but I should not like to see us placed in a position where, after getting rid of people now attached, we would be forced to hire people who would actually be nominees of factions not under our control.

It is for this reason that I have written this long letter to urge you to report to our Personnel Security Committee the necessity for exercising pronounced agnosticism when any of our Chinese personnel are attacked.

In the meantime I am doing my best to check over our Chinese personnel in San Francisco.

Once more I urge you to observe the strictest confidence in acting on this letter, because in certain quarters it might be considered that I am under moral obligation to see that OWI is staffed with Chinese who take their orders from some source other than the American Government.

Yours,

OWEN LATTIMORE,
Director, Pacific Operation.

1. Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—" * * * The skeleton files which the President has given to the Tydings Committee * * * were inadequate, * * * many of them had been completely rifled * * * [and] there is no way of knowing whether or not any file was complete." He also said that "in order to get at the truth, they must get not only the skeleton State Department loyalty files, but the Civil Service and the FBI files."

The Facts.—A charge of tampering with records is a very serious charge. It has been described by the courts in this country as "highly improper." (State ex rel Department of Agriculture, Petitioner v. McCarthy, Circuit Judge, Respondent (238 Wisconsin 258, 270, 299 N. W. 58, 65 (1941)). The files which have been made available to the subcommittee by the President are complete. They contain the material collected by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and transmitted to the State Department through the Civil Service Commission. These files were reviewed by a representative of the Department of Justice before they were turned over to the subcommittee. A representative of the Department of Justice has also attended the meetings of the subcommittee at which the files were discussed. If Senator McCarthy believes any material has been deleted, it is his duty to bring to the attention of the subcommittee, and the FBI any evidence he has to back up his charge.

2. Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—Senator McCarthy described that portion of Owen Lattimore's memorandum on far eastern policy which dealt with South Korea and then said: "That is Lattimore's plan for South Korea. That is now the plan of the Lattimore-Acheson Axis for the entire Far East."

The Facts.—Mr. Lattimore's relationship with the Department of State from 1933 to date and the circumstances under which he and 30 other people supplied memoranda containing their views on far eastern policy have been described many times. These facts of public record are not reflected in Senator McCarthy's statement.

The facts concerning Mr. Acheson's position on South Korea are also a matter of well-known public record. On January 20, 1950, Mr. Acheson wrote a letter describing the adverse effects the defeat of the Korean Aid bill by a vote of 193 to 191 would have on our foreign policy. This letter which was the basis of a successful attempt to obtain aid for Korea is quoted below. It speaks for itself.

3. In his speech at Atlantic City, Senator McCarthy made other misstatements which will be refuted in the near future.

[For the press, Department of State, May 20, 1950. No. 529]

FOR RELEASE AT 7:00 P.M., E.D.T., SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1950, NOT TO BE PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED, QUOTED FROM OR USED IN ANY WAY

The Department of State today made public the following analysis of the speech delivered by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy in Chicago, May 6, 1950, on "Communism in Government":

1. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—Senator McCarthy referred to the Department of State's files being examined by the Tydings Subcommittee as "skinny-ribbed bones of the files"; "skeleton files"; "These purged files"; "phony files"; "1947 and '48 files instead of 1949 and 1950."

The Facts.—The files transmitted to the Tydings Subcommittee are the full and complete State Department files current as of the date transmitted. They contain all information relevant to the determination of employee loyalty or security. Under the Federal Employees Loyalty Program, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is the agency charged with responsibility for conducting investigations into the loyalty of State Department personnel.

A representative of the Department of Justice has been present at the meetings of the Tydings Subcommittee. The files were viewed by a representative of the Department of Justice before they were turned over to the Subcommittee. The files made available to the Subcommittee contain the material collected by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and transmitted to the State Department.

2. Senator McCarthy said in Chicago.—"Now from page 37 of the House Report I quote the following: * * * almost anyone and everyone in the State Department had access to the files. * * *"

The Facts.—The report to which Senator McCarthy referred is a report of the House Appropriations Committee investigators, dated January 27, 1948, which accompanied the list of 108 cases which were the basis of Senator McCarthy's speech of February 20, 1950. Senator McCarthy misquoted this report.

The report said: "* * * most everyone and anyone in the Division has access to the files * * *"

The Division that the House investigators were talking about was the Division of Security. That is the division charged with the physical and personnel security program of the Department and the Foreign Service, and it is therefore essential that its staff have access to the files when needed. Senator McCarthy, by substituting "the State Department" for "the Division of Security," crudely misquotes the language of the report in order to give an entirely false impression: namely, that any and everyone in the Department has access to the files: whereas as a matter of fact such access is strictly limited to employees of the Division when required and to a very small number of employees outside the Security Division, such as the members of the Loyalty Security Board. Senator McCarthy substituted the entire State Department for the Division of Security, a crude misquotation for the purpose of giving an entirely false impression. It is not only a misquotation, it is a quotation out of context, a quotation over two years old made without reference to the facts as they exist at the present time.

3. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"Tell them to take the list of names which I have given * * * the Secretary of State * * *."

The Facts.—Despite Under Secretary of State Peurifoy's reiterated requests since February 11, 1950, that Senator McCarthy furnish the Department with a list of names of the "205" or "57" accused State Department employees, Senator McCarthy has never furnished the Department or the Secretary of State such a list of names.

4. Senator McCarthy said a Chicago.—Describing the Federal Loyalty Program, Senator McCarthy said, "First of all, it permits each Department to investigate its own people. Those doing the investigating know little or nothing of communist techniques, even less of about how to conduct an investigation * * *"

The Facts.—The Federal Bureau of Investigation is the agency charged under Executive Order 9835, issued over three years ago, with responsibility for conducting loyalty investigations under the Federal Loyalty Program.

5. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—Describing loyalty investigations, Senator McCarthy said, "In dozens of cases, in dozens of cases—for instance, recommendation from Alger Hiss on State Department employees was all that was needed to completely clear them—like accepting a recommendation from Dillinger in hiring a bank clerk."

The Facts.—There is not a single instance of this.

6. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"You will recall a former State Department employee by the name of George Wheeler recently retired behind the Iron Curtain after making typical communist name-calling statements damning and cursing the United States. This man, George Wheeler, who had been assigned tremendously important work by the State Department had first been given a completely clean bill of health by the Loyalty Board even though his file would have convinced anyone who could add two and two that he was a full-fledged communist."

The Facts.—At no time has the case of George Wheeler ever been considered by a security or loyalty board of the Department of State. Mr. Wheeler was one of a group of former FEA employees in Germany who in September 1945 were transferred temporarily to the rolls of the State Department. In February 1946 the whole group was transferred to the War Department, and in fact Mr. Wheeler's transfer to the War Department was even earlier—in December 1945. During his brief time on the State Department payroll, Mr. Wheeler's case was under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. All these facts were set out in a departmental press release a month before Senator McCarthy made his misstatements.

These facts were also contained in the Department's analysis of Senator McCarthy's April 20th speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, in which the Department pointed out twelve glaring McCarthy inaccuracies. Senator McCarthy on May 15 replied to the Department's statement by citing two alleged inaccuracies in the Department's analysis of his speech. He was silent as to the remaining ten. Of the two so-called inaccuracies he cited, one pertains to the case of George Wheeler. As to George Wheeler, Senator McCarthy said that the Department should "admit that Wheeler was on the pay roll and given an absolutely clean bill of health by whatever Government Loyalty Board cleared personnel for the State Department." Two comments may be made thereon: first, as of the date of Mr. Wheeler's brief employment with the Department the present loyalty program, under which the Department's loyalty board was established, was not in existence; second, Senator McCarthy's implication was that the Department's Loyalty Board was at fault. Even Senator McCarthy should see the irrelevancy of his attributing to the State Department matters under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

7. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"Mr. Service, you will recall, was picked up by the FBI in connection with the Amerasia case * * * The papers carried the story that J. Edgar Hoover, who is not noted for overstatements, that J. Edgar Hoover stated that this is a 100 percent air-tight case of espionage."

The Facts.—On May 1, 1950, Deputy Under Secretary of State Peurifoy in a letter to Mr. Peyton Ford, The Assistant to the Attorney General, asked whether Mr. Hoover, in fact, made any similar statement. Mr. Ford, on May 8, 1950, replied: "You are advised that Mr. Hoover did not make the statement which has been attributed to him."

The exchange of correspondence is attached. (See pp. 8, 9.)

8. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—" * * * the State Department which is about to hear the case of Service is now busily giving Mr. Service's lawyer the secret documents which the President has denied the Senate, this so that he can properly defend Mr. Service."

The Facts.—The Department has categorically denied this. Mr. Service has been furnished copies of documents which he himself had prepared for the Department in the course of his duties as a foreign service officer.

Relevant excerpts from a letter of May 4, 1950, by General Conrad E. Snow, Chairman of the Department's Loyalty Security Board, to Mr. Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Herald Tribune, are attached. (See page 9.)

9. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"First take the case of Philip Jessup, the State Department's Ambassador at Large. Now, here was really a great joiner, especially Communist-front organization * * * organizations which the President's own Attorney General and Congressional committee have labeled as agents of the Communist Party."

The Facts.—In view of Senator McCarthy's repeated assertions the Department wrote to Mr. Morgan, Counsel of the Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, investigating Senator McCarthy's charges, to see if Senator McCarthy had supplied them with any information to back up these charges. Mr. Morgan replied that Senator McCarthy has not supplied any such material. The only documentary material supplied to the committee concerning the organizational affiliations or associations of Ambassador Jessup was provided by Senator Hickenlooper, a photostat of one letterhead of the American Law Students Association listing Professor Philip Jessup of Columbia University on the Association's "Faculty Advisory Board." The American Law Students Association is not listed by the Attorney General and does not appear on the list of "Citations by Official Government Agencies" issued in 1948 by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The correspondence with Mr. Morgan is attached. (See pp. 10 and 11.)

Dr. Jessup testified, before the Subcommittee, that he had joined no Communist-front organizations, whereas the organizations to which he did belong included the following:

The American Legion. (He is a former commander of Utica Post No. 229.)

The American Philosophical Society.

The Foreign Policy Association.

The American Bar Association.

On April 6, 1950, the Utica Post No. 229 passed a resolution condemning Senator McCarthy's attack upon their past commander, Philip C. Jessup. A copy of this resolution is attached. It will be noted that a copy of it was sent to Senator McCarthy with the admonition that "his reckless and despicable conduct in this instance cannot be condoned by any right-thinking American and should never be repeated if he hopes to retain a shred of public respect." (For copy of resolution, see pp. 11 and 12.)

10. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"Jessup * * * was largely in charge of a publication known as the Far Eastern Survey, the publication of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations; that he was in charge while it was spewing forth the perfumed Communist Party line sewage * * *."

The Facts.—Senator McCarthy grossly exaggerated Dr. Jessup's relationship with Far Eastern Survey based on the single fact that in 1944 Dr. Jessup served on the Research Advisory Committee of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator McCarthy's allegation that Far Eastern Survey followed the Communist Party originates in discredited contentions made by one Alfred Kohlberg in 1944. The American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations investigated Kohlberg's charges. In a document circulated to its members, it was demonstrated that Kohlberg had ignored the overwhelming number of facts that did not support his contention. The document showed, among other things, that Kohlberg had quoted, in connection with "Far Eastern Survey, and other publications, from less than 2 per cent of the articles published and from less than .002 per cent of the books published. In April 1947, the membership of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations in a vote of 1163 to 66 overwhelmingly repudiated Kohlberg's charges as "inaccurate and irresponsible."

11. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"I have brought with me photostatic copies of checks representing thousands of dollars of Communist money paid to Jessup's organization." As documentation he provided photostats of two checks signed by Frederick Vanderbilt Field totalling $3,500.

The Facts.—This is another repetition of a refuted charge made by Senator McCarthy many times before. Senator McCarthy repeats it although it has already been refuted. The inference is that the Institute of Pacific Relations had been "bought" with Communist money. At that time, Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, President of the University of California, was Chairman of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations; Mr. Francis Harmon, Vice President of the Motion Picture Export Association, was Treasurer; and Mr. William R. Herod, now President of the International General Electric Company, was Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. Juan Trippe, President of Pan American Airways, and Mr. Henry Luce, of Time and Life, were sponsors of a drive during that period for funds on behalf of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. Mr. Field's contributions, according to Senator McCarthy's own figures, totalled only $3,500, as compared with a total expense for the two-year period of approximately $200,000. About half of the amount was met by contributions from the Rockefeller Foundation and Carnegie Corporation. Generous donations by large industrial concerns made up a large portion of the remainder.

12. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"Mr. Lattimore, as the nation knows has long been referred to as the architect of the State Department's Far Eastern policy, the architect whose shadow lingers over the corpse of China."

The Facts.—Senator Tydings asked Secretaries Hull, Byrnes, Marshall and Acheson whether this description was true or false. They all replied that it was false. These letters were made public by Senator Tydings on April 29, 1950. The person responsible for long and repeated use of the term "architect of the Far Eastern Policy" is Senator McCarthy who employed the term in his testimony before the Subcommittee.

13. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—" * * * so that you will have a full picture of the extent to which Lattimore shaped our dismal policy of failure in the Far East. I call to your attention a secret document which he furnished to the State Department in August of 1949, a document which the State Department itself labeled as a guide for Ambassador at Large Jessup * * *."

The Facts.—This is another repetition of a refuted McCarthy charge.

The Department publicly and fully explained in press conferences on March 31, that Owen Lattimore was one of a group of 31 persons who submitted written memoranda in response to requests made in August, 1949, by Ambassador Jessup. These memoranda were used as background material by a consultant's committee consisting of Mr. Raymond B. Fosdick, Mr. Everett Case, and Ambassador Jessup in their study of United States foreign policy in the Far East. (Mr. Lattimore's memorandum was never singled out, or labeled as a guide for Ambassador Jessup.) Mr. Lattimore as director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations at Johns Hopkins, was also one of 25 private individuals participating in a round-table discussion on October 5, 7, and 8, 1949, arranged by the Office of Public Affairs for the purpose of exchanging views with informed private citizens on United States foreign policy toward China. The 31 who submitted memoranda were:

Former Consul General Joseph W. Ballantine, now at Brookings Institution
 Professor Hugh Borton, Columbia University
 Former President Isaiah Bowman, Johns Hopkins University
 Dr. A. J. Brumbaugh, American Council on Education, Washington
 Former Ambassador William Bullitt
 Former Under Secretary Castle
 Former Consul John A. Embry
 Professor Rupert Emberson, Harvard University
 Dr. Charles B. Fahs, New York City
 Professor John K. Fairbank, Harvard University
 Dr. Huntington Gilchrist, New York City
 Professor Carrington Goodrich, Columbia University
 Former Under Secretary Grew
 Colonel Robert A. Griffin, former Deputy Administrator, ECA China
 Former Ambassador Stanley K. Hornbeck
 Roger Lapham, Former Administrator, ECA China
 Professor Kenneth S. Latourette, Yale University
 Professor Owen Lattimore, Director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University
 Oliver C. Lockhard, Export-Import Bank of Washington
 Walter H. Mallory, Council on Foreign Relations
 Professor Wallace Moore, Occidental College, Los Angeles
 Professor Edwin O. Reischauer, Harvard University
 C. A. Richards, Economic Cooperation Administration
 Former Minister Walter S. Robertson, Richmond, Virginia
 Dr. Lawrence K. Rosinger, New York, New York
 Mr. James Rowe, Washington

Mrs. Virginia Thompson (Adloff), New York City
 Professor Amry Vandenbosch, University of Kentucky
 Professor Karl A. Wittfogel, Columbia University
 Professor Mary Wright, Stanford University
 Admiral Yarnell

The following, including Mr. Lattimore and some others of the 31, attended the Round Table at the Department October 6, 7, and 8 to discuss Far East Policy:

Joseph W. Ballantine, The Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.
 Bernard Brodie, Department of International Relations, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut
 Claude A. Buss, Director of Studies, Army War College, Washington, D. C.
 Kenneth Colgrove, Department of Political Science, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois.
 Arthur G. Coons, President, Occidental College, Los Angeles, California.
 John W. Decker, International Missionary Council, New York, New York.
 John A. Fairbanks, Committee on International and Regional Studies, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.
 William R. Herod, President, International General Electric Company, New York, New York.
 Arthur N. Holcombe, Department of Government, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.
 Benjamin H. Kizer, Graves, Kizer, and Graves, Spokane, Washington.
 Owen Lattimore, Director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland.
 Ernest B. MacNaughton, Chairman of the Board, First National Bank, Portland, Oregon.
 George C. Marshall, President, American Red Cross, Washington, D. C.
 J. Morden Murphy, Assistant Vice President, Bankers Trust Company, New York, New York.
 Nathaniel Peffer, Department of Public Law and Government, Columbia University, New York, New York.
 Harold S. Quigley, Department of Political Science, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 Edwin O. Reischauer, Department of Far Eastern Languages, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.
 William S. Robertson, President, American and Foreign Power Company, New York, New York.
 John D. Rockefeller, III, President, Rockefeller Brothers' Fund, New York, New York.
 Lawrence K. Rosinger, American Institute of Pacific Relations, New York, New York.
 Eugene Staley, Executive Director, World Affairs Council of Northern California, San Francisco, California.
 Harold Stassen, President, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 Phillips Talbot, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois.
 George E. Taylor, University of Washington, Seattle, Washington.
 Harold M. Vinacke, Department of Political Science, University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.

All of the memoranda and all of the views above referred to were of course submitted in confidence by their authors, and the Department could not expect these people to be frank unless it respected that confidence. The Department would not and did not, however, in any way interfere with publication of any memorandum by its author. In fact, the substance of Mr. Lattimore's article was published in an article which he wrote for the January 1950 issue of The Atlantic magazine.

14. Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"But let me give a brief résumé of the official Communist Party program for Asia—there is no secret about that. Number 1, destroy the armies of Chiang Kai-shek. Number 2, get the United States out of Korea. Number 3, force the withdrawal of United States forces from Japan; and number 4, prevent the formation of a Pacific Pact against Communist aggression.

"Now, what does Lattimore tell Jessup our policy in Asia should be? Listen to this if you will: Number 1, Abandon Chiang Kai-shek; number 2, get out of Korea; number 3, withdraw United States forces from Japan; and 4, deny the need of a Pacific Pact."

The Facts.—This is another repetition of a refuted McCarthy charge.

The United States' record and policy in the Far East, as it relates to the points made by Senator McCarthy may be summarized as follows:

(1) The United States poured tremendous amounts of aid into China in efforts to bolster the government of Chiang Kai-shek.

(2) The United States has led the fight for a free, democratic Korea; and has taken its case to the United Nations; and, since the establishment of this government, has contributed substantial economic and military support.

(3) The United States as the principal occupying power in Japan will not enter into any peace treaty which makes impossible adequate protection of United States' security interests in the Western Pacific.

(4) The United States has publicly indicated that it would look with sympathy upon a regional alliance of Pacific nations, provided the impetus for such an association came from the nations themselves.

Following is the material referred to on pages 3 and 4:

Exchange of correspondence between Mr. John E. Peurifoy, Deputy Under Secretary of State, and Mr. Peyton Ford, Assistant to the Attorney General (referred to on page 3):

MAY 1, 1950.

The Honorable PEYTON FORD,

The Assistant to the Attorney General.

DEAR MR. FORD: In his address on April 20, 1950, to the American Society of Newspaper Editors at the Hotel Statler in Washington, Senator McCarthy said:

"One of those arrested was John S. Service. He was never convicted; he was never tried; he was never indicted.

"J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the FBI, publicly stated at the time of the arrests that this case was a 100-percent airtight case of espionage. At the time the case broke John S. Service was picked up by the FBI. Mr. Hoover made that statement, and he seldom errs on the side of overstatement, as you well know."

The Department of State is naturally interested in whether or not this statement of Senator McCarthy is an accurate one. As a result, I would appreciate it if you would inform the Department as soon as possible whether the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation made any statement similar to that attributed to him by Senator McCarthy.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. PEURIFOY, Deputy Under Secretary.

MAY 8, 1950.

JOHN E. PEURIFOY, Esquire,

*Deputy Under Secretary, Department of State,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. PEURIFOY: This is in reply to your letter dated May 1, 1950, inquiring as to the accuracy of a statement alleged to have been made by J. Edgar Hoover, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, at the time of the arrest of John S. Service and other suspects involved in the so-called Amerasia case. You are advised that Mr. Hoover did not make the statement which has been attributed to him.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,

The Assistant to the Attorney General.

EXCERPTS FROM GENERAL SNOW'S LETTER TO THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Because of the reputation of the New York Herald Tribune for fair and objective reporting, I am taking the liberty of calling your attention to the headings of two articles which appeared in your issues of May 3 and 4, respectively, regarding the conduct of the John S. Service case by the Loyalty Security Board of the Department of State, of which I am Chairman. * * *

Nor is it true that Mr. Service is being given any illegitimate advantage in the matter of access to papers. Mr. Service has not been given and will not be given access to the loyalty or personnel files which were gathered by the FBI and other investigatory bodies and which were refused by the President to the Senate Committee. Mr. Service is entitled, however, as a matter of elementary fairness to see and put in evidence, any reports or other papers in the files of the State Department which were prepared by him or in connection with the missions on which he served, which may be material to his defense. Action by the Department of State is necessary to permit him to show them to counsel. To date, the only confidential documents in which this action has been taken are documents actually written by Mr. Service himself. This is all there is to that part of the story.

The Loyalty Security Board of the Department of State is a judicial body set up for the purpose of giving to an employee accused of disloyalty, or of being a security risk, a fair hearing. While under the regulations he has no opportunity to confront and cross-examine witnesses who have given confidential information to the Board, or even to see a transcript of their statements, he is advised of the substance of the accusations, and must be given a fair opportunity to defend himself, not only by his own testimony, but also by the production of any witnesses or of any documentary evidence that may tend to establish his innocence of the accusations. The Board has an obligation to give him the fullest opportunity to prepare and present his defense.

EXCHANGE OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MR. JOHN E. PEURIFOY, DEPUTY UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE, AND MR. EDWARD P. MORGAN, CHIEF COUNSEL, FOREIGN RELATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE STATE DEPARTMENT

MAY 16, 1950.

Mr. EDWARD P. MORGAN,
Chief Counsel, Foreign Relations Subcommittee,
The Capitol

DEAR MR. MORGAN: In connection with the analysis of Senator McCarthy's speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors forwarded on May 12, 1950, to the Society by Assistant Secretary Barrett, Senator McCarthy has stated, as quoted on May 15 by the Associated Press:

"The State Department also states that Jessup belonged to no Communist front organizations. I gave photostatic proof to the committee that he was affiliated with five organizations listed by the Attorney General or congressional committees as fronts for the Communist Party.

"He was a director of one of the worst of such organizations named by the Attorney General, namely, the China Aid Council of the American League for Peace and Democracy."

At Atlantic City on the same day he said:

"* * * Now, the thing they forget is that I have presented to the Committee photostats showing that he belonged, that he was affiliated with not one, but with five Communist front organizations; and that he not only belonged to, but was a Director of one of the worst of the lot, named as such by the Attorney General. * * *"

In view of these assertions of Senator McCarthy, it would be very much appreciated if you could make available to this Department copies of the photostats which the Committee has received from him.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. PEURIFOY.

MAY 17, 1950.

Mr. JOHN E. PEURIFOY,
Deputy Undersecretary, United States State Department,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PEURIFOY: Reference is made to your letter of May 16, 1950, referring in turn to the remarks, as quoted by the Associated Press, of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy relative to Dr. Philip Jessup, as follows:

"The State Department also states that Jessup belonged to no Communist front organizations. I gave photostatic proof to the committee that he was affiliated with five organizations listed by the Attorney General or congressional committees as fronts for the Communist Party.

"He was a director of one of the worst of such organizations named by the Attorney General, namely the China Aid Council of the American League for Peace and Democracy."

* * * * *
 "Now, the thing they forget is that I have presented to the Committee photostats showing that he belonged, that he was affiliated with not one, but with five Communist-front organizations; and that he not only belonged to, but was a Director of, one of the worst of the lot, named as such by the Attorney General. * * *"

Relative to your request for photostatic copies of the material stated to have been turned over to the subcommittee by Senator McCarthy, you are advised that, after a careful and diligent search of our files, we find no record of any material having been turned over to the subcommittee by Senator McCarthy indicating that Dr. Jessup has been associated with Communist-front organizations.

For your information, however, in the course of Senator Hickenlooper's examination of Dr. Jessup, he offered in evidence, at page 530 of the transcript, a photostat of a letterhead of an organization known as the American Law Student's Association on which "Prof. Philip Jessup" of Columbia University is listed on the "Faculty Advisory Board," along with other named individuals. The subcommittee has been supplied no other documentary material concerning organizational affiliations or associations of Dr. Jessup.

After hearing of Senator McCarthy's statements referred to above, I immediately called his office requesting the photostatic material to which he referred. Again on May 16, 1950, I called Senator McCarthy personally, advising that the subcommittee had not been supplied the photostatic material concerning Dr. Jessup to which he had referred and requested that he supply the same for our record. As yet, I have not been supplied the photostats in question.

Should they be received by me, I shall be glad to make copies thereof available to your office.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD P. MORGAN,

Chief Counsel, Subcommittee Investigating the State Department.

RESOLUTION CONDEMNING ATTACK UPON PAST COMMANDER PHILIP C. JESSUP ADOPTED AT A REGULAR MEETING OF UTICA POST, NO. 229, AMERICAN LEGION, HELD ON APRIL 6, 1950

(Referred to on p. 4)

Whereas Utica Post, No. 229, American Legion, is proud to number among the list of its Past Commanders a distinguished comrade, friend, and charter member, Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, whose record of patriotic devotion and continued helpfulness to our country over a period of many years is a source of great satisfaction, pride, and distinction to Utica Post and to its entire membership; and

Whereas the sterling character, splendid reputation, and unquestionable loyalty and patriotism of Past Commander Philip C. Jessup, both privately and in his public capacity as U. S. Ambassador at Large, have recently been subjected to scurrilous, unprincipled, and wholly unjustifiable attack by one Joseph McCarthy, who in so doing has sullied the office of U. S. Senator which he presently holds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Utica Post, No. 229, American Legion, and its entire membership shall and do strongly resent, condemn, and decry the unprincipled, unjustified, unsportsmanlike, un-American, and intolerable conduct of Senator Joseph McCarthy in his wanton attempt without proof or reason to smear and destroy the good reputation and high standing of so devoted and patriotic a citizen as our esteemed and valued friend and comrade, the Honorable Philip C. Jessup, U. S. Ambassador at Large; and be it further

Resolved, That Utica Post, No. 229, American Legion, and its members in meeting duly assembled feel privileged at this time to reaffirm their continued trust and confidence in, their esteem and devotion to, and their lasting friendship for a distinguished public servant, a loyal patriot, and a great citizen, the Honorable Philip C. Jessup, a Past Commander of this Post; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be inscribed upon the Minutes of this meeting, that a copy thereof be delivered to our comrade, Ambassador Jessup; that a secand copy be delivered to the public press; and that a third copy be mailed to Senator McCarthy with the admonition that his reckless and despicable conduct in this instance cannot be condoned by any right-thinking American and should never be repeated if he hopes to retain a shred of public respect.

[For the press, Department of State, May 25, 1950. No. 549]

FOR RELEASE AT 7:00 P. M., E. D. T., THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1950. NOT TO BE PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED, QUOTED FROM OR USED IN ANY WAY

The Department of State today made public the following analysis of some of the factual inaccuracies in the speech delivered by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy at Atlantic City, May 15, 1950, to the Sons of the American Revolution:

(1) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—"[as to] the skeleton files which the President has given to the Tydings Committee * * * I have made photostats of a report [of House investigators] * * * based partly on FBI investigations of the files * * * they set forth in some detail that * * * some of them have been completely rifled * * * that practically everyone in the Division had complete and free access * * *" [Emphasis supplied.]

The Facts.—This charge has already been demonstrated to be false. It was previously made by Senator McCarthy at Chicago, on May 6, 1950, and the Department commented thereon in its press release of May 20. It was there pointed out that the files transmitted to the Subcommittee were complete files; that Senator McCarthy was referring to a report submitted by investigators of the House Appropriations Committee in 1948 and that the Senator had misquoted the language of the report by substituting "the State Department" for "the Division of Security." It is noted that the Senator at Atlantic City repaired his quotations by using "the Division" in place of "the Department of State."

At Atlantic City Senator McCarthy added one new element. He refers to an "FBI investigation of the files." The "FBI investigation" he refers to was a survey of the Security Division made for the Department by the FBI at the Department's request. In the language of the House Investigators, who conducted their investigations in the Fall of 1947:

"In April 1947, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at the request of the State Department, made a survey of the Security and Investigations Division * * *"

There was no suggestion, either expressed or implied in either the FBI or the House Report, that the condition of the files in 1947 was purposeful or suspicious. Senator McCarthy's use of the word "rifled" in speaking of the files was entirely without substantiation. The constructive criticism and suggestions invited from the FBI and the House Investigators have been of great help.

In 1950 these files are as rigidly controlled, accurate, and complete as it is possible to make them. The files delivered to the Subcommittee are complete files—State Department reports, FBI reports, interrogations, hearings, administrative memoranda, even pencilled working papers—everything. On May 10 when the committee started examining the files, Senator Tydings is quoted as saying:

"These 81 files contain not only all of the data which the State Department investigators have assembled, but also all of the loyalty data which the FBI has gathered and referred to the State Department and which has been made a part of these files.

"Thus the Committee will have the complete record from all sources * * *"

(2) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—"Now to those in the State Department who say that Soviet Russia's aims have changed in the last few years and that she no longer wants to enslave America * * *"

The Facts.—Senator McCarthy insinuates that there are those in the State Department who do not realize that Soviet aims and propaganda are directed against America's free institutions.

The United States is striving, by all possible means, to preserve these free institutions. The Department and its personnel have no illusions about the methods or the aims of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party here or abroad.

Ambassador Jessup—whom Senator McCarthy has accused of having "an unusual affinity for communist causes"—expressed the viewpoint of the entire Department when he told the press of India and the world at New Delhi, February 23, 1950:

"Since the end of the Second World War, history has recorded the extension of a new imperialism that has brought more than a dozen countries under the domination of a single expanding power. The device used by this expanding power in extending its imperialism is to hold out the glittering promises of communism as a beacon light for the rescue of peoples who are suffering from economic underdevelopment or who are trying to remove the shackles of the old traditional kinds of colonialism. However, where communism gains control, it becomes immediately apparent that the peoples are not allowed to determine their own future, but must conform to a single policy laid down in Moscow."

Similarly, Counselor George Kennan wrote in an article appearing in the March issue of The Reader's Digest:

"The Russian leaders believe our downfall is inevitable. They would do anything they can to hasten it. * * *"

On March 13, 1950, Secretary Acheson said at Berkeley:

"We can see no moral compromise with the * * * theses of international communism: that the end justifies the means, that any and all methods are therefore permissible, and that the dignity of the human individual is of no importance as against the interest of the state.

"To our minds, these principles mean, in their practical application, the arrogation to individual human leaders, with all their inevitable frailties and limitations, of powers and pretenses which most of us would be willing to concede only to the infinite wisdom and compassion of a Divine Being. They mean the police state, with all that that implies; a regimentation of the worker which is hardly distinguishable from slave labor; a loss to society of those things which appear to use to make life worth living; a denial of the fundamental truths embodied in all the great religions of the world."

(3) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—(Referring to Mr. Owen Lattimore:) " * * * the architect of our eastern policy, Owen Lattimore."

" * * * Mr. Acheson's architect."

" * * * this architect of the new Lattimore-Acheson Pacific plan * * *"

The Facts.—This characterization of Mr. Lattimore also has been repeatedly disproved. On April 29, 1950, Senator Tydings released letters he received from Secretaries Hull, Byrnes, Marshall, and Acheson conclusively showing that the description of Lattimore as an architect of our Far Eastern policy is false. Although it appeared widely in the press at the time, the text of this correspondence is attached, because of Senator McCarthy's twice renewed disregard of the facts.

(4) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—" * * * after all, doesn't Mr. Lattimore * * * say in his secret instructions to the State Department * * *"

The Facts.—As has now been publicly set forth by the Department several times, Owen Lattimore was one of a group of 31 persons who submitted written memoranda in response to requests made in August, 1949, by Ambassador Jessup. Mr. Lattimore was also one of 25 private individuals participating in a round-table discussion on October 6, 7, and 8, 1949, arranged by the Office of Public Affairs for the purpose of exchanging views with informed private citizens on United States foreign policy toward China.

Allowing for duplications on the two lists, over 50 non-Departmental persons participated in the two projects. Included were former Ambassadors William Bullitt and Joseph Grew, General George C. Marshall, Harold Stassen, and many other prominent and informed citizens representing many shades of opinion. Their opinions had never been treated or referred to as "instructions" until Senator McCarthy began to foreshadow his reiteration of the theme in March 1950 when he referred to Mr. Lattimore as the "top adviser" of the Department.

As early as March 31, immediately after Senator McCarthy's references on the Senate floor to Mr. Lattimore, and long before his ASNE speech of April 20, the Department made public the full facts about the Lattimore memorandum. The names of the participants submitting memoranda were:

Former Consul General Joseph W. Ballantine, now at Brookings Institution.

Professor Hugh Borton, Columbia University.

Former President Isaiah Bowman, Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. A. J. Brumbaugh, American Council on Education, Washington.

Former Ambassador William Bullitt.

Former Under Secretary Castle.

Former Consul John A. Embry.

Professor Rupert Emberson, Harvard University.
 Dr. Charles B. Fahs, New York City.
 Professor John K. Fairbank, Harvard University.
 Dr. Huntington Gilchrist, New York City.
 Professor Carrington Goodrich, Columbia University.
 Former Under Secretary Grew.
 Colonel Robert A. Griffin, former Deputy Administrator, ECA China.
 Former Ambassador Stanley K. Hornbeck.
 Roger Lapham, Former Administrator, ECA China.
 Professor Kenneth S. Latourette, Yale University.
 Professor Owen Lattimore, Director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University.
 Oliver C. Lockhart, Export-Import Bank of Washington.
 Walter H. Mallory, Council on Foreign Relations.
 Professor Wallace Moore, Occidental College, Los Angeles.
 Professor Edwin O. Reischauer, Harvard University.
 C. A. Richards, Economic Cooperation Administration.
 Former Minister Walter S. Robertson, Richmond, Virginia.
 Dr. Lawrence K. Rosinger, New York, New York.
 Mr. James Rowe, Washington.
 Mrs. Virginia Thompson (Adloff), New York City.
 Professor Amry Vandenbosch, University of Kentucky.
 Professor Karl A. Wittfogel, Columbia University.
 Professor Mary Wright, Stanford University.
 Admiral H. E. Yarnell.

The following, including Mr. Lattimore and some others of the 31 listed above, attended the Round Table at the Department October 6, 7, and 8 to discuss Far East Policy:

Joseph W. Ballantine, The Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.
 Bernard Brodie, Department of International Relations, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut.
 Claude A. Buss, Director of Studies, Army War College, Washington, D. C.
 Kenneth Colgrove, Department of Political Science, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois.
 Arthur G. Coons, President, Occidental College, Los Angeles, California.
 John W. Decker, International Missionary Council, New York, New York.
 John A. Fairbank, Committee on International and Regional Studies, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.
 William R. Herod, President, International General Electric Company, New York, New York.
 Arthur N. Holcombe, Department of Government, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.
 Benjamin H. Kizer, Graves, Kizer, and Graves, Spokane, Washington.
 Owen Lattimore, Director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland.
 Ernest B. MacNaughton, Chairman of the Board, First National Bank, Portland, Oregon.
 George C. Marshall, President, American Red Cross, Washington, D. C.
 J. Morden Murphy, Assistant Vice President, Bankers Trust Company, New York, New York.
 Nathaniel Peffer, Department of Public Law and Government, Columbia University, New York.
 Harold S. Quigley, Department of Political Science, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 Edwin O. Reischauer, Department of Far Eastern Languages, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.
 William S. Robertson, President, American and Foreign Power Company, New York, New York.
 John D. Rockefeller, III, President, Rockefeller Brothers' Fund, New York, New York.
 Lawrence K. Rosinger, American Institute of Pacific Relations, New York, New York.
 Eugene Staley, Executive Director, World Affairs Council of Northern California, San Francisco, California.
 Harold Stassen, President, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 Phillips Talbot, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois.

George E. Taylor, University of Washington, Seattle, Washington.
 Harold M. Vinacke, Department of Political Science, University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The full facts were reiterated, and again documented with the names of the individuals involved, in the Department's analyses of the Senator's ASNE and Chicago speeches. Despite this, Senator McCarthy has repeated this discredited charge on each occasion, and at Atlantic City repeated it again.

(5) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—"I have presented to the Committee photostats showing that he (Dr. Jessup) belonged, that he was affiliated with not one, but five Communist-front organizations, and that he not only belonged to, but was a director, a director of one of the worst of the lot named as such by the Attorney General."

The Facts.—Senator McCarthy has submitted no photostats as of this writing. Mr. Edward P. Morgan, Chief Counsel of the Tydings Subcommittee, to which Senator McCarthy said he gave "photostatic proof," has informed the Department:

"* * * We find no record of any material having been turned over to the subcommittee by Senator McCarthy indicating that Dr. Jessup has been associated with Communist-front organizations.

"For your information, however, in the course of Senator Hickenlooper's examination of Dr. Jessup, he offered in evidence, at page 530 of the transcript, a photostat of a letterhead of an organization known as the American Law Student's Association on which 'Prof. Philip Jessup,' of Columbia University is listed on the 'Faculty Advisory Board', along with other named individuals. The Subcommittee has been supplied no other documentary material concerning organizational affiliations or associations of Dr. Jessup.

"After hearing of Senator McCarthy's statements referred to above, I immediately called his office requesting the photostatic material to which he referred. Again on May 16, 1950, I called Senator McCarthy personally, advising that the subcommittee had not been supplied the photostatic material concerning Dr. Jessup to which he had referred and requested that he supply the same for our record. As yet, I have not been supplied the photostats in question."

The Department checked by telephone again today with Mr. Morgan's office. The photostats referred to by Senator McCarthy have not been received by it.

With regard to the general charge, this has been repeated and refuted at least three times. Senator McCarthy originally claimed that Doctor Jessup had an "unusual affinity" for Communist causes. Before the ASNE, he claimed Dr. Jessup was a "perennial joiner" and at Chicago he said the Doctor was a "great joiner" of Communist fronts. Doctor Jessup himself discussed Senator McCarthy's original charge in careful detail in his statement before the Subcommittee, and the Department refuted the ASNE and Chicago repetitions in its analyses of both speeches.

In renewing this charge at Atlantic City, Senator McCarthy added one innovation: that Doctor Jessup belonged to and was a director of "one of the worst" Communist fronts cited by the Attorney General. In a supplementary statement to the Associated Press on the same day, Senator McCarthy said:

"He was a director of one of the worst of such organizations named by the Attorney General, namely the China Aid Council of the American League for Peace and Democracy."

Ambassador Jessup is not and has never been a director of the China Aid Council. This charge evidently is based—intentionally or carelessly—on the fact that not Mr. Jessup, but his wife, was listed in 1944 as a Director of the China Aid Council. However, at that time, Mrs. Jessup was taking no active part in the work of the Council and attended no meetings. Prior to 1942, Mrs. Jessup had been active in the American Committee for Chinese War Orphans, formed under the sponsorship of Mme. Chiang Kai-shek to raise money for orphanages in China. * * * This organization has never been cited by the Attorney General or the House Committee on Un-American Activities. In 1942 Mrs. Jessup turned her attention to the American Friends Service Committee in Philadelphia, for which she worked full time until 1946. Meanwhile, however, the China Aid Council absorbed the American Committee for Chinese War Orphans and continued as of 1944 to carry Mrs. Jessup's name on its letterhead.

Dr. Jessup is a member of a number of highly respectable non-Communist-front organizations, including Utica Post, No. 229, of the American Legion, which, on April 6, 1950, resolved that the Post and its entire membership:

"* * * strongly resent, condemn and decry the * * * intolerable conduct of Senator Joseph McCarthy in his wanton attempt, without proof or reason, to smear and destroy the good reputation (of) Phillip C. Jessup

* * * .”

(6) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—“(This) publication was being supervised by Mr. Jessup (and) was being used to spearhead the smear against the anti-Communist forces in China * * * .”

The Facts.—This twice refuted yet now reiterated statement refers to Dr. Jessup's association with the Institute of Pacific Relations and its publication, Far Eastern Survey. In the Department's analyses of the ASNE and Chicago speeches, it has been demonstrated that:

1. Senator McCarthy has merely parroted thoroughly discredited charges leveled by one Arthur Kohlberg against the Institute of Pacific Relations (an organization which the Rockefeller Foundation has referred to as “The most important single source of independent studies of the problems of the Pacific Area and the Far East”).

2. Dr. Jessup never “supervised” the Far Eastern Survey.

(9) Senator McCarthy said at Atlantic City.—“I have presented to the Committee checks totaling $3,500 which represent Communist money paid * * * the Institute of Pacific Relations * * * . I have gotten photostats of additional checks which now total $6,500.00 of Communist money * * * .”

The Facts.—The charge, expressed or implied, that the Institute of Pacific Relations was bought and paid for by “Communists” is among the most thoroughly refuted charges the Senator has advanced. The Institute of Pacific Relations and the Department have repeatedly presented the facts in careful detail.

Senator McCarthy's evidence consisted of photostatic copies of checks signed by Frederick Vanderbilt Field. Mr. Field's contributions to the Institute of Pacific Relations were made in the course of a campaign for funds sponsored by Mr. Juan Trippe, President of Pan American Airways, and Mr. Henry Luce, of Time, Life and Fortune. At the time, Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, President of the University of California, was Chairman of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations; Mr. Francis Harmon, Vice President of the Motion Picture Export Association, was Treasurer; and Mr. William R. Herod, now President of the International General Electric Company, was Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Characteristically, however, Senator McCarthy included among the new photostats shown at Atlantic City a $500 check from Field payable, not to the Institute of Pacific Relations, but to the American Council on Soviet Relations. The American Council on Soviet Relations is a well-known organization listed as subversive by the Attorney General. The Institute of Pacific Relations is in no way related to it. The two organizations have never before been thus confused.

As pointed out in previous releases, the Institute's expenses averaged $100,000 a year; therefore, Mr. Feld's $6,000 represented only a drop in the bucket as compared with total expenses of $300,000 for the three-year period.

TEXT OF LETTERS ON THE LATTIMORE ISSUE

APRIL 17, 1950.

DEAR GENERAL MARSHALL: It has been stated by Senator McCarthy during the course of the hearings now being held by the subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee under S. Res. 231, that Mr. Owen Lattimore is “the principal architect of our Far Eastern policy.”

It is important for our committee to determine the truth of this contention for whatever bearing it may have on other evidence adduced in the Lattimore matter. For that reason, I would appreciate it greatly if you would inform me at your earliest possible convenience of the extent to which, in your opinion, Dr. Lattimore was “the principal architect of our Far Eastern policy” or the extent that Dr. Lattimore influenced our Far Eastern policy during the period in which you were Secretary of State.

I am addressing a similar letter to Secretary Acheson, Mr. Hull and Mr. Byrnes.

Thanking you for your kindness in giving the committee this information, I am Very respectfully,

MILLARD E. TYDINGS.

APRIL 22, 1950.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have received your letter of April 17 in which you refer to a recent statement, in connection with the hearings of the subcommittee on Foreign Relations under Senate Resolution 231, that "Owen Lattimore is the principal architect of our Far Eastern policy." Your letter then asks the extent to which, in my opinion, "Lattimore was the principal architect of our Far Eastern policy" during the period in which I served as Secretary of State.

The statement referred to above is completely without basis in fact.

So far as I and my associates can recall I never even met Mr. Lattimore.

I take the liberty of commenting on the harmful effect on our foreign relations of such statements, charges or insinuations broadcast with so little regard for the truth. They undoubtedly confuse our friends abroad, undermine and weaken our position before the world and actually lend assistance to the powers that would destroy us.

Faithfully yours,

G. C. MARSHALL.

APRIL 24, 1950.

DEAR MILLARD: I have your letter of the 17th asking the extent to which, in my opinion, Mr. Owen Lattimore was "the principal architect of our Far Eastern policy" or the extent he influenced our Far Eastern policy during the period I was Secretary of State.

I do not know Mr. Lattimore. If he ever wrote me about the Far Eastern policy the letter was not called to my attention. If, while I was Secretary of State, he discussed our Far Eastern policy with any officials of the department concerned with that policy, in their discussions with me, they did not quote him.

Early in December 1945, General George C. Marshall went to China and thereafter his reports to the President and me influenced our policies in China and the Far East. I do not think General Marshall was influenced by Mr. Lattimore.

To my former colleagues, I take the liberty of adding that, regardless of the merits of complaints as to what has heretofore occurred, the President and the Secretary of State have given proof of their desire to restore the bipartisan policy in our foreign affairs, and I earnestly hope the members of the Senate will cooperate in that effort.

When I was Secretary of State I found I could talk to Senator Vandenberg with the same freedom with which I talked to Senator Connally and to my assistants, and I profited by his advice. I am sure that in his absence other Republican Senators will cooperate just as did Senator Vandenberg. It is extremely important at this time, in view of the tenseness of the situation in world affairs, that we do not give to either our friends or enemies abroad the false impression of a serious division among us in our policies as to the Soviet Government. Seldom in history have our people been so united on any issue.

I hope that, regardless of our differences on domestic issues, our political leaders can present a united front in our foreign relations.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES.

APRIL 20, 1950.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have your letter of April 17 in which you inquire concerning the extent to which, in my opinion, Dr. Owen Lattimore was "the principal architect of our Far Eastern policy" or the extent he influenced our Far Eastern policy while I was Secretary of State.

In my opinion, he was in no sense the "principal architect" of our Far Eastern policy during the period I served as Secretary of State. Although his position in academic circles as a student of and writer on some aspects of Chinese life and history was, of course, known to us, I am not aware that during this period he had any appreciable influence on our Far Eastern policy. I do not remember having consulted with him on that subject or on any subject at any time.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

APRIL 27, 1950.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: In a letter dated April 17, 1950, you asked that I inform you of the extent to which, in my opinion, Mr. Owen Lattimore was the "principal architect of our Far Eastern policy," or the extent to which he influenced our Far Eastern policy during the period in which I have been Secretary of State. On April 17 Mr. Peurifoy, Deputy Under Secretary of State, wrote you in full detail concerning Mr. Lattimore's connections with this department in the past. The Far Eastern policy of this Government, like all other foreign policy, is the responsibility of the Secretary of State and has been made by me in my administration subject, of course, to the direction of the President.

I welcome this opportunity to state personally and categorically that during the period in which I have been Secretary Mr. Lattimore, so far as I am concerned or am aware, has had no influence in the determination of our Far Eastern policy. There is clearly no basis in fact for describing Mr. Lattimore as the "principal architect" of our Far Eastern policy. I might add that, so far as I am aware, I have never met Mr. Lattimore.

The Far Eastern policy of the United States has at all times been determined after careful study by the responsible officers of the department and an objective evaluation by me of all of the facts available to this Government. The Department of State has explored all avenues to arrive at the relevant facts. The measure of the participation of Mr. Lattimore, so far as this department and I are concerned, is fully and fairly indicated in the letter of April 17 from Mr. Peurifoy.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON.

SENATOR MCCARTHY'S ROCHESTER CHARGES

On February 9, 1950, Senator McCarthy charged at Wheeling, West Virginia: "While I cannot take time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as members of the Communist Party and as members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping the policy of the State Department."

During the following months he has made numerous other charges. He has said that the Department has followed the Communist Party line, that the architect our foreign policy has been Mr. Owen Lattimore, and he has made many charges against Ambassador Jessup and other persons, both in and outside the Department. He has repeated these charges over and over again, even though they have been shown to be clearly without basis in fact.

To date his irrepressible and irresponsible charges have not resulted in the disclosure of a single Communist in the State Department. They have resulted in great harm to our foreign policy abroad, and in serious injury to the persons unjustly accused. The Department feels that his charges would have had an even worse effect abroad if they had not been answered as strongly and effectively as possible. Accordingly the Department has been carefully analyzing the inaccuracies in each of Senator McCarthy's statement and setting forth the facts as we understand them. It will follow this procedure with respect to his speech at Rochester last night.

An analysis will be made available in the near future. In the meantime, the Department points out that Senator McCarthy said in advance of the speech that he would disclose State Department files on Lattimore. Instead, he dealt with the clearance by the Civil Service Commission of two former Chinese employees of the Office of War Information.

The record has been set straight a number of times on some of the assertions which the Senator repeated again last night. The facts, however, unfortunately do not deter him in his reckless course.

The Senator's campaign does, however, seem to be getting further and further afield from his original assertion that there were Communists in the Department. He no longer talks about 205 Communists in the Department, or 81, 57, 3 or even 1. As State Department officers have often said before, if there are any Communists in the Department, they will be fired. The Department does not believe there are any.

Even Mr. McCarthy now seems to agree.

[For the press. Department of State, May 27, 1950. No. 558]

FOR RELEASE AT 7 P. M., E. D. T., SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1950. NOT TO BE PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED, QUOTED FROM, OR USED IN ANY WAY

The Department of State today made public the following analysis of some of the factual inaccuracies in the speech delivered by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy at Rochester, N. Y., on May 25, 1950, to the National Convention of the Catholic Press Association of the United States:

1. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—"When I began the presentation of the case against Owen Lattimore, the State Department's architect of our Far Eastern policy, * * * I informed the Senate that Lattimore in a letter to Joseph Barnes * * * instructed him, in effect to get rid of all Chinese employees in the Office of War Information who were loyal to * * * Chiang Kai-shek, and to replace them with Chinese Communists * * * Later when addressing the American Society for Newspaper Editors, I furnished them complete copies of and discussed the Lattimore-Barnes letter."

The Facts.—In the first place, as the Department of State has reiterated time and time again, Mr. Owen Lattimore is not an employee of the Department of State.

In the second place, Mr. Lattimore is not the "architect" of the State Department's Far Eastern policy. Four Secretaries of State have publicly contradicted this assertion.

In the third place, Senator McCarthy originally lifted completely out of context, from a document then classified as secret, a passage purporting to support his charge that Mr. Lattimore instructed Mr. Barnes to replace pro-Chiang Kai-shek employees of the Office of War Information with Communists. As a result, Senator Tydings publicly read the entire letter into the record, and on April 10—ten days before his speech to the American Society for Newspaper Editors—the State Department sent a copy of the letter to Senator McCarthy.

The letter did not say what Senator McCarthy asserted it did. What it did say was: "In the circumstances, we have to be extremely careful about our Chinese personnel. While we need to avoid recruiting any Chinese Communists, we must be careful not to be frightened out of hiring people who have loosely been accused of being Communists. * * * For our purposes, it is wise to recruit as many unaffiliated Chinese as we can, to pick people whose loyalty will be reasonably assured on the one hand by the salaries which we pay them and on the other hand by the fact that they do not receive salaries or subsidies from somewhere else."

2. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—" * * * Keep in mind those three names—Dr. Chi, Mr. Chew Hong, and the New China Daily News. Those names are the key to this (the Lattimore-Barnes) letter and the State Department's fraudulent cover up * * * I am therefore submitting to you the secret files on those two men * * *"

The Facts.—At Wheeling, West Virginia, on February 9, 1950, Senator McCarthy asserted in a speech:

* * * While I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as active members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205—a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department.

The next day, he said he had the names of "57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party" allegedly working in the Department. Later he talked in terms of S1 security risks of various sorts. Eventually, he said he would stand or fall on his ability to prove that there was one "top Soviet espionage agent" in the State Department.

To date, Senator McCarthy has utterly failed to prove that there is a single Communist or pro-Communist in the State Department, and he now appears to be reduced to an attempt to divert attention with two seven- and eight-year-old memoranda dealing with the Civil Service Commission clearance for Office of War Information employment of two Chinese.

3. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—" * * * Edward Barrett, Mr. Acheson's publicity chief * * * was Mr. Lattimore's superior when both worked in the Office of War Information."

The Facts.—In a letter to Senator Brewster, entered in the Congressional Record of May 2, Mr. Barrett, who is Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, stated:

"* * * I was in charge of the Overseas Branch of Office of War Information during the last part of the war, and I am proud of what I did toward helping to make that agency an effective psychological warfare arm of the Government. Owen Lattimore worked under me for a brief time during the war, but he left the Office of War Information a few weeks after I became his superior. I have not seen him since * * *"

4. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—"* * * Our disaster in China * * * is the disaster to which Mr. Acheson refers as the 'dawning of a new day.'"

The Facts.—Here, again, Senator McCarthy lifts completely out of context a single phrase in order to completely distort the meaning of Secretary Acheson's hour-long address before the National Press Club on January 12, 1950. The Secretary, in discussing the Far Eastern situation, emphasized the extent to which nationalism had "become the symbol both of freedom from foreign domination and freedom from the tyranny of poverty and misery."

Developing this theme, he added:

"Since the end of the war in Asia, we have seen over 500 million people gain their independence and over seven new nations come into existence in this area.

"We have the Philippines with twenty million citizens. We have Pakistan, India, Ceylon and Burma with 400 million citizens, southern Korea with twenty million, and within the last few weeks, the United States of Indonesia with 75 million. * * *

"Communism is the most subtle instrument of Soviet foreign policy that has ever been devised and it is really the spearhead of Russian imperialism which would, if it could, take from these people what they have won, what we want them to keep and develop which is their own national independence, their own individual independence, their own development of their own resources for their own good and not as mere tributary states to this great Soviet Union. * * *

"So after this survey, what we conclude, I believe, is that there is a new day which has dawned in Asia. It is a day in which the Asian peoples are on their own and know it and intend to continue on their own. * * * So what we can see is that this new day in Asia, this new day which is dawning, may go on to a glorious noon or it may darken and it may drizzle out. But that decision lies within the countries of Asia and within the power of the Asian people. It is not a decision which a friend or even an enemy from the outside can decide for them."

5. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—"* * * I am enclosing in the folder for each of you photostats of five Communist-front organizations with which Jessup was affiliated. You will note that Mrs. Jessup appears on the Executive Committee of a sixth Communist-front organization. The reason for including this with the photostats on Philip Jessup is because of the close affiliation of Philip Jessup with this organization also."

The Facts.—At Atlantic City Senator McCarthy asserted that he had presented photostatic proof of such affiliations to the Tydings subcommittee, but counsel of the subcommittee informed the Department of State that such proof had not been submitted. The following analysis of the photostats produced by the Senator at Rochester reveals:

(1) American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations: Dr. Jessup has been prominently connected with the activities of this organization. It is not a Communist front. Senator McCarthy's only "evidence" against it was a single citation by a California Legislative Committee in 1948, on the ground that the Council "* * * received funds (from) Frederick V. Field * * *."

(2) Coordinating Committee to Lift the Spanish Embargo: Ambassador Jessup has never been affiliated with this organization in any way. At Rochester Senator McCarthy presented reproductions of three full pages and a part of a fourth page of a brochure entitled, "These Americans Say: 'Lift the Embargo against Republican Spain.'" The full twenty-page document is and purports to be merely a compendium of public opinion concerning the Spanish embargo.

The only reference to Ambassador Jessup in the "photo-reproductions" presented by Senator McCarthy was a seven-line quotation from a statement by Charles C. Burlingham and Ambassador Jessup in The New York Times of January 31, 1939. A week earlier the Times had printed a three-column letter from Henry L. Stimson recommending the lifting of the Spanish embargo. On January 26, the Times published a letter of rebuttal by Martin Conboy. It was from a three-column statement which the Times headlined as "Text of Reply of Burlingham and Jessup to Conboy's Letter" that the Burlingham-Jessup quotation was taken. The quotation in question reads:

"It (lifting the embargo) would further mark a return to our historic policy of avoiding intervention in European civil wars by following a strict hands-off policy instead of taking the affirmative action which, as events have demonstrated, inevitably affects the outcome of a struggle in which we profess not to be concerned."

The Burlingham-Jessup quotation was "photo-reproduced" by Senator McCarthy in such a way as to indicate that it constituted a full page of the brochure, whereas it was actually only one among eleven similar statements by private individuals included on the page in question of the original brochure. Furthermore, it was only one of a total of thirty-one such quotations in the brochure as a whole, including statements by Henry L. Stimson, John Dewey, Helen Keller, Raymond Leslie Buell, Dorothy Thomphon, A. F. Whitney, and William E. Dodd.

(3) National Emergency Conference and National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights: Senator McCarthy's "photo-reproductions" show that Ambassador Jessup, along with more than 280 other private citizens, was listed as a sponsor of a "call" for a National Emergency Conference, to discuss matters of alien registration, in 1939. They also show that Ambassador Jessup's name was carried in the letterhead of the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, as a sponsor, in February 1940.

With regard to the National Emergency Conference, Ambassador Jessup testified before the Tydings Subcommittee that he had no recollection of the conference, that he did not attend the meeting for which the "call" was issued, and that he "certainly had no knowledge at the time that it was subversive." It was not until four years later that the Conference was first cited by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

With regard to the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, Ambassador Jessup testified that he did not recall the organization or any participation in it. This organization was first cited in 1943.

(4) American-Russian Institute: Ambassador Jessup has never been a member, sponsor, or officer of this organization. Senator McCarthy's "photo-reproductions" show Ambassador Jessup's name along with those of 285 other individuals on one list of "sponsors" and with 99 others, on a second list of "sponsors." These lists, however, were not lists of sponsors of the American-Russian Institute itself. They were lists of the sponsors of two dinners given by the organization—one in 1944, dedicated to American-Soviet postwar relations, and the other, in 1946, for the presentation of a posthumous award to Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Concerning the first of these two dinners, Ambassador Jessup told the Tydings Subcommittee:

"I do recall * * * that I was asked by Mr. William Lancaster, a prominent New York lawyer, to permit my name to be used as a sponsor of a dinner which was to be held on October 19, 1944. I had met Mr. Lancaster particularly through his activities on the Foreign Policy Association, at a time when General Frank McCoy was President and Senator Alexander Smith and I were members of the Board. I accepted that invitation in 1944, but was unable to attend the dinner."

Concerning the second dinner, he testified:

"The dinner in question was one given on May 7, 1946, on the occasion of the presentation of its first annual award to Franklin D. Roosevelt which was accepted on behalf of his family. A search of my files has failed to reveal any information concerning this incident, nor do I remember attending the dinner. From approximately February to June of the year 1946, I was seriously ill in a hospital in New York City, so it is unlikely that I attended."

Ambassador Jessup specifically declined invitations to speak at dinners of the Institute in 1948 and 1949. Meanwhile, the New York organization had been expressly excluded from the Attorney General's first published lists of subversive organizations and it was not included until 1949.

(5) American Law Students Association: This organization, which Ambassador Jessup served as a Faculty Adviser for about two years, was a perfectly innocent group. It was not and has never been cited as a communist front.

As "evidence" to the contrary, Senator McCarthy produced at Rochester a photostat of a letterhead of the association carrying the customary union shop printer's label. This label was identified by Senator McCarthy in a typewritten notation as "Union label No. 209 which is the Communist print shop label."

He also handed out at Rochester a mimeographed statement in which he flatly asserted, without giving any supporting evidence, that the association was "affiliated" with three organizations cited as communist or communist front. He then devoted three single-spaced typewritten pages to a listing of various citations, not against the American Law Students Association, but against the three organizations with which he asserted it was "affiliated."

The fact that the association has never been cited in any way by any agency speaks for itself.

(6) China Aid Council: Ambassador Jessup has never been affiliated with this organization. Senator McCarthy had previously charged, at Atlantic City, that Ambassador Jessup was a director of "one of the worst" communist-front organizations, and identified that organization, to a press association as the China Aid Council. At Rochester, however, he presented a "photo-reproduction" indicating that, not Ambassador Jessup, but Mrs. Jessup, was at one time on the Executive Committee of the Council.

The Department, in its analysis of the Senator's Atlantic City speech correctly asserted that, intentionally or carelessly, the Senator had confused Dr. Jessup with his wife. The analysis then pointed out that Mrs. Jessup's association with the organization came about through her interest in the activities of an organization sponsored by Madame Chiang Kai-shek—the American Committee for Chinese War Orphans.

It will be noted that Senator McCarthy's letterhead presented as evidence shows that the "Council" was combined with this Committee for orphans. Mrs. Jessup's part in the Committee's work was to organize a tea business—the tea was called 'May Ling' tea (after Mme. Chiang)—and the profits went directly to orphanages. After 1942, Mrs. Jessup took very little active interest in the Committee, because from that year until 1946 she was working full time for the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers) in Philadelphia, Spain, and France. She did not attend meetings or keep in touch with the work of the China-Aid Council.

It will be noted that, of the six organizations in question, two are not communist-fronts, and two are organizations with which Dr. Jessup has had no connection. For the fifth organization, Dr. Jessup was a sponsor of two dinners which he did not attend. He signed a "call" which resulted in the formation of the sixth organization but had no further connection with it.

6. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—"They (the State Department in its analysis of Senator McCarthy's American Society of Newspaper Editors speech) quote me as having stated that at the height of the communist party line campaign on the part of the Far Eastern Survey that Dr. Jessup was head of the Research Advisory Council. The 'facts' they give were that he was not the Chairman in 1943 * * *. Now here is a photostat to show that he was head of the Research Advisory Council in 1944 * * *"

The facts.—The identifiable date in Senator McCarthy's American Society of Newspaper Editors speech was 1943. However, in his subsequent Chicago speech, Senator McCarthy broadened his charge and was again met with the facts. In its analysis on May 20, 1950, the Department stated:

"Senator McCarthy said at Chicago.—"Jessup * * * was largely in charge of a publication known as the Far Eastern Survey, the publication of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations; that he was in charge while it was spewing forth the perfumed Communist Party line sewage. * * *"

"The Facts.—Senator McCarthy grossly exaggerated Dr. Jessup's relationship with 'Far Eastern Survey' based on the single fact that in 1944 Dr. Jessup served on the Research Advisory Committee of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

"Senator McCarthy's allegation that 'Far Eastern Survey' followed the Communist Party originates in discredited contentions made by one Alfred Kohlberg in 1944. The American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations investigated Kohlberg's charges. In a document circulated to its members, it was demonstrated that Kohlberg had ignored the overwhelming number of facts that did not support his contention. The document showed, among other things, that Kohlberg had quoted, in connection with 'Far Eastern Survey,' and other publications, from less than two percent of the articles published and from less than .002 percent of the books published. In April 1947, the membership of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations in a vote of 1163 to 66 overwhelmingly repudiated Kohlberg's charges as 'inaccurate and irresponsible.' "

At Atlantic City Senator McCarthy repeated these charges all over again. In its analysis, the Department added this characterization of the Institute of Pacific Relations by the Rockefeller Foundation: "The most important single source of independent studies of the problems of the Pacific area and the Far East."

7. Senator McCarthy said at Rochester.—"I have succeeded in digging up photostats of another $3,000 making a total of $6,500 (of 'communist money') paid to support the publication which Mr. Acheson's Ambassador-at-Large Jessup supervised."

The Facts.—Senator McCarthy's charges and implications that the Institute or its publication were bought and paid for by "communist money" have been repeatedly refuted by the Department. About half of the Institute's budget was met by the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Corporation, while Mr. Field's contributions were only a drop in the bucket as compared with the generous donations of large industrial concerns.

In 1941 Ambassador Jessup was Vice Chairman of the American Council, Ray Lyman Wilbur was Chairman. The Treasurer was Francis S. Harmon.

In addition to Henry R. Luce, of Time, Life, Fortune, William H. Herod, President of the International General Electric Corporation, Philo Parker, of the Standard-Vacuum Oil Company, and other outstanding bankers, industrialists, lawyers, etc., the Institute's Committee on Financial Support included both Frederick V. Field and Alfred Kohlberg, the New York importer who has admittedly been one of Senator McCarthy's principal sources of information. During this period Mr. Kohlberg also was a member of the Institute's Committee on Corporate Membership, the purpose of which was to increase the donations from larger organizations.

For the 1942-43 period, the persons responsible for over-all and financial affairs included the same distinguished names referred to many times before—Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, President of the University of California; Mr. Francis Harmon, Vice President of the Motion Picture Export Association; Mr. Herod; Mr. Juan Trippe, President of Pan American Airways, and Mr. Luce.

Senator McCarthy at Rochester handed out as part of his "proof" the same photostat he used at Atlantic City—a check for $500 signed by Field and made payable to and endorsed by the American Council on Soviet Relations. The American Council on Soviet Relations is a well-known organization listed as subversive by the Attorney General. The Institute of Pacific Relations is in no way related to it. The two organizations have now been twice confused by Senator McCarthy.

[For the press, Department of State, June 9, 1950. No. 614]

The Department of State has already characterized as absolutely false the statement by Senator McCarthy that a photostat which he produced on the Senate floor June 6 constituted proof that three men individually listed by the FBI as Communist agents in 1946 are still working for the Department.

It has pointed out that the Senator's charge was based upon the completely erroneous belief that a 1946 chart referred to in the photostated document, a chart purportedly evaluating Departmental personnel in terms of Communist "agents," "Communists," "sympathizers," and "suspects," was prepared by the FBI.

Furthermore, the Department has stated that the chart in question was not prepared by or received from the FBI, but was merely a working document prepared in the Department's Security Office as a basis of further personnel investigations in 1946.

The Department has also stated that no persons purportedly identified on that chart as Communist "agents," "Communists" and the like are now employed by the Department except those whose loyalty has since been thoroughly checked, evaluated, and reviewed under the President's Loyalty Program.

Since the issuance of this statement to the press by the Department, on June 6, 1950, a thorough review of the chart and report in question, together with a careful inquiry into the circumstances of their preparation and the status of personnel involved, has been made by the Department.

The following analysis of Senator McCarthy's speech is based upon the facts developed by that study:

1. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"The Bureau (FBI) sent to the State Department on that date (May 15, 1946) a detailed statement listing what they considered as No. 1, Soviet agents; No. 2, Communists; No. 3, Communist sympathizers; and No. 4, suspects."

The Facts.—As previously stated by the Department, neither the chart itself nor the report of August 3, 1946, in which Senator McCarthy has cited a reference to the chart, was prepared by, or sent to the State Department by, the FBI, and this has been verified to the Department of State both by the Department of Justice and by the FBI. On the contrary, the chart and the report were prepared within the Department of State itself. The chart was prepared on May 15, 1946, and the report on August 3, 1946.

The Department of State itself, after consultation with the writer of the report, with the former Security Officer under whose direction and in whose office the chart was prepared, with certain of his then subordinates familiar with the chart, and with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and after reviewing working papers which are still in our file, has conclusively determined that the chart was not prepared or furnished by the FBI, but was prepared as an investigator's working document in the Department of State in 1946 and by employees of the Department of State. Interview with the writer of the report, who is still in the Department, and the Security Officer with whom he had a conversation about the chart established that the writer of the report drew from his conversation with the Security Officer the unintentionally erroneous conclusion that the chart was prepared in the FBI.

2. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"The function of the FBI is merely that of a fact-finding body. * * * This is the only time it has been brought to my attention that the FBI has departed from its function and said, 'We will evaluate our own evidence in our files and give it to the Department.' Apparently, the reason was that they must have been seriously disturbed by what they had in their files. * * *"

The Facts.—This statement is patently false. In the first place, as previously stated, the chart in question was not prepared or submitted by the FBI to begin with. Information from the FBI was included with information from other agencies—OSS, Civil Service, etc., in the files which the State Department personnel consulted in drawing up the chart; but there was no FBI evaluation of the State Department employees.

In the second place, since the FBI had nothing to do with the preparation of the chart, it obviously could not have talked to itself in the manner described by Senator McCarthy about the "evaluation" of "evidence" concerned. Since the issuance of the State Department's first statement in this connection, the FBI has verified to the Department the fact that it not only had nothing to do with the preparation of the chart but that it also had nothing to do with evaluating the personnel indicated on the chart as purported "Agents," "Communists," etc., or in any other way. Thus, Senator McCarthy's assertion that the FBI took unprecedented action in the matter is utterly unfounded, and his inference that the FBI took such action because it was "seriously disturbed" by the contents of its files is pure fantasy.

3. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"The submission of the list of Soviet Agents, Communists, and so forth, to the State Department by the FBI met with such little favorable activity on the part of the State Department that, so far as I know, the Bureau has never submitted a like chart since that date."

The Facts.—Though the chart in question had not been submitted to the Department by the FBI back in 1946 or at any other time it was, as a matter of fact, a working list of Departmental personnel on whom the Department's Security Officer at that time (May 15, 1946) had received allegations which, in the opinion of the Security Officers by whom the chart was prepared, warranted further investigation. Virtually the entire activity of the Security Officer and his top men at that time was directed toward the utilization and full development of the leads and information received from the FBI, from departmental investigation and other sources, particularly relating to the people listed on the 1946 chart. Moreover, on the basis of the findings and recommendations contained in the "Secret" report in which the chart was referred to, energetic steps were taken toward an improved Security set-up of the Department, including the successful direction of such investigations as that leading in 1946 to the firing, followed by trial and conviction, of Carl Marzani.

4. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"This (the language of the report) is not the language of McCarthy; it is the language of the State Department's top investigators."

The Facts.—The language was not the language of any one of the Department's "investigators"; it was the language of an administrative officer of the Department, assigned by Assistant Secretary Russell, in charge of the Department's security program, to undertake, on a highly confidential basis, a study in Washington of the operations of the Department's organization in 1946 for dealing with problems of personnel security.

5. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"The man who makes this report says in effect, 'The only way we are going to get rid of the other Communists is accidentally by a reduction in the force.' * * * From all the information we have been able to obtain, none of the men who were labeled by the FBI have been fired, but were allowed to resign * * *"

The Facts.—The writer of the report said no such thing directly or by implication. His report dated August 3, 1946, in fact was intended to, and did, explore the means for making existing security procedures more effective, especially against the penetration of foreign intelligence agencies into the Department of State. His reference to reduction in force as a factor in eliminating persons named on the chart was factual—but it did not exclude other methods. Such other methods, including resignation—which the Senator himself contradictorily names as the only method—and firing, where investigation supported this action, were effectively employed. No case today remains unresolved.

6. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"The FBI wisely refused to submit top secret information to the State Department on these dangerous individuals * * * apparently not trusting the State Department to that extent * * *"

The Facts.—The FBI has never refused to make available to appropriate officers of the State Department through established liaison channels information concerning State Department personnel.

7. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"At least three of those listed as Communist agents by the FBI three years ago are still holding high positions in the State Department * * * Those names are included among the 106 names that I gave to the (Tydings) committee * * * Those names I have checked and I know the persons are working in the State Department * * * I * * * have the proof that those men are working in the State Department as of this very moment."

The Facts.—This statement is absolutely false. The Department of State has in its possession the working chart itself dated May 15, 1946. Of the 20 persons hypothesized on the chart as "agents", there is only one who—after thorough reinvestigation including a full FBI investigation, and clearance under the Department's Loyalty and Security procedures—is still in the employ of the Department. That one does not hold a "high position"; his grade is GS-9. Furthermore, that one is not on the list of 106 Senator McCarthy gave the Tydings Subcommittee.

8. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"You will note that I am * * * only referring today to those who are listed as Communist agents. I hope to be able to give the Senate a complete picture of how many of the total of 106 agents, Communist sympathizers, and so forth, are still on the State Department's payroll * * *"

The Facts.—Any person among those listed on the old 1946 working chart referred to by Senator McCarthy who is still employed in the Department of State has been the subject of careful investigation and has been cleared for security after thorough study of his case either by the Division of Security, acting with the benefit of the FBI's information, or by the Loyalty Security Board of the Department. Each loyalty decision by the Department's Loyalty Board has been post-audited by the Loyalty Review Board, and in no case was the recommendation of the Department's Board changed.

9. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6.—"Take, for example, case No. 1, which I presented on the Senate floor, the name has not yet been made public, so we shall not use it now. The committee has the name. In that case the Loyalty Review Board made what is known as a post audit, and, after looking at the post audit, they said, 'We are not satisfied with the findings.' They sent it back to the State Department Loyalty Board, and that Board said 'The case is closed.' That man is still on the State Department payroll."

The Facts.—Once again, Senator McCarthy's alleged quotations are not quotations—they are typical misstatements. The Loyalty Review Board did not advise the Department of State that they were "not satisfied with the finding" in this case; they did make a procedural recommendation, and thereafter the case was not "closed." On the contrary, appropriate action was taken by the State Department Loyalty Security Board, and clearance in this case was again post-audited by the President's Loyalty Review Board. The Loyalty Review Board has in no way criticized or changed the final action and findings of the Department's Loyalty Security Board.

10. Senator McCarthy told the Senate on June 6—" * * * In the Office of War Information, Mr. Owen Lattimore * * * went to bat for one Communist * * * who had been officially turned down by the Loyalty Board * * * and another Chinese who had been rejected by one member of the board * * *"

The Facts—As the Department pointed out in its analysis of the Senator's Rochester, New York, speech on May 25, he now appears to be reduced to an attempt to divert attention with 1943 Civil Service Commission clearances for Office of War Information employment of two Chinese.

As for Mr. Owen Latimore, both Mr. Lattimore himself and the Department of State have repeatedly reiterated that he is not an employee of the Department.

At Wheeling, West Virginia, on February 9, 1950, Senator McCarthy asserted in a speech:

"* * * While I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as active members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205—a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department."

The next day, he said he had the names of "57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party" allegedly working in the Department. Later he talked in terms of a "big three" and of 81 security risks of various sorts. He told the Tydings Committee to investigate 106 cases. Eventually, he said he would stand or fall on his ability to prove that there was one "top Soviet espionage agent" in the State Department.

And then, on June 6, we hear of 106 names on a four-year-old working chart and three "agents" purportedly still at large in the Department of State.

But the record—the facts—speak for themselves: Senator McCarthy has utterly failed to show that there is a single Communist or pro-Communist in the State Department. His numbers change; his credibility does not.

The following document was received by the Foreign Relations Subcommittee from Mr. Seth W. Richardson, Chairman of the Loyalty Review Board:

previously been declared to come under the provisions of Executive Order No. 9830, issued February 5, 1943, entitled "Establishing the Interdepartmental Committee to Consider Cases of Subversive Activity on the Part of Federal Employees," and under other relevant authority.

As stated in my letter of November 24, the organizations heretofore named do not represent a complete or final tabulation. The study of investigative reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is a continuing one. The organizations named herein as coming within the scope of Executive Order No. 9835 are designated as a result of the same careful review of recommendations made by officials of this Department which has been outlined to you previously.

The organizations designated below are classified in accordance with the categories set forth in Section 3, Part III, of Executive Order No. 9835. As in the case of organizations previously submitted, the designation is predicated upon the dominant characteristics of each. It must be borne in mind, of course, that while an organization may fall within more than one of the specified categories, it is necessary for the purpose of the Executive Order to segregate them on the basis of dominant characteristics.

The organizations designated are:

Fascist:

- American Nationalist Party
- American National Labor Party
- American National Socialist League
- American National Socialist Party
- Committee for Nationalist Action
- National Blue Star Mothers of America

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., July 21, 1949.

Memorandum No. 44.

To All Executive Departments and Agencies.

Subject: Certain Organizations and Groups Connected with Organizations Previously Designated and Classified by the Attorney General under Section 3, Part III of Executive Order 9835.

In a letter dated July 20, 1949, the Attorney General has advised the Loyalty Review Board concerning the designation of certain organizations and groups which are affiliated with or otherwise connected with organizations which have been previously declared to come within the scope of Executive Order 9835.

The Attorney General states that the United Spanish Aid Committee, designated in his letter of April 21, 1949, as a Communist organization, is more properly referred to as the United American-Spanish Aid Committee, and that the previous listing is hereby changed to reflect the designation of the United American-Spanish Aid Committee.

The Attorney General also states that other groups which are affiliates of or otherwise related to organizations heretofore declared to come within Executive Order 9835 are hereby designated as follows:

Communist:

American Rescue Ship Mission (a project of the United American-Spanish Aid Committee)

Emergency Conference to Save Spanish Refugees (founding body of the North American-Spanish Aid Committee)

National Conference on American Policy in China and the Far East (a Conference called by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy)

The Attorney General states further that the designation of the Communist Party, U. S. A., and of the Communist Political Association includes, of course, all of the state and local branches and factions of the parent groups. Thus the Florida Press and Educational League bears the same designation as its parent body, the Communist Political Association. The Daily Worker Press Club and the Yiddisher Kultur Farband are also included in the designation of the Communist Party, U. S. A., within Executive Order 9835.

The above information furnished by the Department of Justice is transmitted to you in accordance with Part III of Executive Order 9835 which requires the Loyalty Review Board "to disseminate such information to all Departments and Agencies." This information is also being sent to each other Department and Agency of the Government.

In accordance with regular practice, this information will be published in the Federal Register, Title 5, Chapter II, Appendix A.

SETH W. RICHARDSON,
Chairman, Loyalty Review Board.

 UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., September 27, 1949.

Memorandum No. 49.

To All Executive Departments and Agencies.

Subject: Attorney General's Letter of September 26, 1949, Concerning Change in Name of an Organization Designated and Classified under Section 3, Part III, of Executive Order 9835

Part III of Executive Order 9835 prescribing procedures for the administration of an employee loyalty program in the Executive Branch of the Government requires the Department of Justice to furnish this Board with—

"the name of each foreign or domestic organization, association, movement, group or combination of persons which the Attorney General, after appropriate investigation and determination, designates as totalitarian, fascist, communist, or subversive, or as having adopted a policy of advocating or approving the commission of acts of force or violence to deny others their rights under the Constitution of the United States, or as seeking to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means."

In performance of said requirement the Department of Justice has furnished to this Board a supplemental letter from the Attorney General designating the Independent Socialist League, successor to the Workers Party, as coming within the same categories as the Workers Party.

Part III of said Executive Order also requires this Board "to disseminate such information to all Departments and Agencies." A copy of said letter dated September 26, 1949, from the Attorney General is accordingly enclosed, and a copy is also being sent to each other Department and Agency of the Government.

SETH W. RICHARDSON,
Chairman, Loyalty Review Board.

Enclosure.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 26, 1949.

Mr. SETH W. RICHARDSON,
Chairman, Loyalty Review Board, Civil Service Commission,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RICHARDSON: In the Department's letter to you of November 24, 1947, transmitting organizations declared to come under the purview of Part III, Section 3, of Executive Order No. 9835, there was included the organization known as Workers Party. In its official organ, Labor Action of April 1949, the Workers Party announced that at the fifth national convention it had voted to relinquish the name of the Workers Party and adopt the name of the Independent Socialist League. The new organization, Independent Socialist League, which represents but a change in name and is devoted to the same aims and purposes of its predecessor, the Workers Party, is therefore designated as coming within the same categories of Executive Order No. 9835 as the Workers Party itself.

Sincerely,

J. HOWARD McGRATH,
Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 23, 1950.

Mr. ROBERT L. HEALD,
Assistant Counsel, Foreign Relations Subcommittee,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. HEALD: It is understood that the Tydings subcommittee desires statistical figures of the work of the State Department Loyalty Security Board.

The most recent figures that have been compiled are those of May 1, 1950, which indicate that the Board since its inception to May 1, 1950, has received 304 cases from the Civil Service Commission. Of these 304 cases 230 have been cleared by the Board without preferring charges, or, in other words, without hearing. 37 of the cases have been cleared after the preferring of charges. In most of these cases there was an actual hearing but in several instances the employee elected to file a written statement and not to demand a hearing. In 3 of the 304 cases the employee was found by the Board to be a security risk, in each case, of course, after a hearing. In 7 of the 304 cases the employee resigned with charges pending. 4 of the 304 cases were lost to the jurisdiction of the Board by transfer to other Departments. The Board had on May 1st 23 cases pending on which no decision had been reached.

It will be noted that the above figures differ somewhat from the figures given by me in the hearing before the subcommittee, at which time I spoke of 246 cases decided by the Loyalty Security Board, of 30 loyalty hearings, of 2 cases found to be security risks, and 5 resignations with charges pending. The difference between these figures and the figures now given is due to the fact that I have now included in the computation not only the cases which were submitted to the Board as loyalty cases but also the cases which were submitted to the Board purely as cases involving security risk. Of course it will be noted that the present report is to May 1, while the previous report covered only to March 1.

Sincerely yours,

CONRAD E. SNOW,
Chairman, Loyalty Security Board.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am sending you herewith some material which I hope will be of use to the subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relation Committee in examining the charges which Senator McCarthy has made against my wife. The enclosures include:

1. A statement which I have written about myself;
2. A file of testimonial letters, most of which were written at my request, together with a copy of my request for the letters; and
3. A copy of the statement about me which was released by the Navy Department on March 13, 1950.

Respectfully yours,

STEPHEN BRUNAUER.

AFFIDAVIT OF STEPHEN BRUNAUER

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, TO WIT:

On this 11th day of May, 1950, before me, the subscriber, a Notary Public in and for the District aforesaid, personally appeared Stephen Braunauer, signed the attached declaration in my presence, and made oath in due form of law that said attached declaration is a true statement of the matters and facts set forth therein.

He has also initialed each page of said attached eight-paged declaration in my presence.

[SEAL]

HERBERT A. ENGLER, Notary Public.

My commission expires January 1, 1951.

I, Stephen Brunauer, residing at 3417 Quebec Street NW., Washington, D. C., make the following declaration because of certain statements and insinuations made by Senator Joseph McCarthy on March 13 and because of questions asked by Senator Bourke Hickenlooper on March 27 before the Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. This subcommittee was appointed under Senate Resolution 231 to investigate charges of disloyalty in the Department of State.

I am employed by the Department of the Navy as Chief Technical Administrator of Explosives Research and Development, Bureau of Ordnance. I have never been employed by the Department of State. My wife is a State Department employee, and in a previous appearance before the subcommittee has already dealt more than adequately with the statements and insinuations made about her. Since insinuations about me were used against my wife, I wish to show that they, too, are without basis in fact.

In support and corroboration of my declaration, I am attaching a file of testimonial letters, most of which I requested from the writers as a means of furnishing the subcommittee with detailed information about my work, character, loyalty and integrity.

I am a loyal American. I came to the United States from Hungary in 1921, at the age of 18, because I wanted to make my life in this country, which I considered the land of hope and freedom. I became a citizen on September 1, 1927. In 1942 I became an officer in the United States Naval Reserve and entered upon active duty on October 23 of that year, serving until November 13, 1946. I sought military service, although I could have continued my work as a civilian scientist throughout the war period, because I felt that I must participate wholeheartedly in the defense of the United States. I have remained in the Department of the Navy as a civilian employee because I believe that I have a contribution to make to the national defense through the development of more effective explosives. I am still a Reserve officer. I belong to Volunteer Ordnance Component W-1 of Washington, and attend its meetings regularly. At an appropriate place in this declaration I shall describe more fully some of the contributions which I have made and am now making to the national defense. The members of my immediate family are all in the United States. My mother has made her home with me in Washington since 1936; my brother and his wife arrived in this country on December 27, 1948, as political exiles from Communist-dominated Hungary; my wife and children are native Americans.

I am not a Communist. I am not a Communist sympathizer. On the contrary, I am bitterly opposed to communism. At one time in my life, more than 20 years ago, I was a member of the Hungarian Section of the Young Workers League in New York City, for a period of about 3 years, from 1923 or early 1924, to the end of 1926 or early 1927. Since dropping out of this organization I have not belonged to any organization listed as subversive by the Attorney General nor to any organization cited by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

In this declaration I am describing more fully certain aspects of my life and work which seem to me especially significant in refuting charges that I may be disloyal or a security risk.

First, I wish to summarize the evolution of my political opinions since coming to the United States.

From my arrival in New York in October 1921 until I moved to Washington in February 1928 I was occupied mainly in obtaining an education. I had graduated from high school in Budapest with the highest honors. In New York I studied at City College and at Columbia University and supported myself, and even sent money back to Hungary to help in the education of my younger brother. When I arrived in America I spoke no English. I was a lonely young man, and had few opportunities for personal contacts with native Americans. In the midst of my work and study it was not easy for me to gain an intimate and first-hand understanding of the culture and institutions of my new homeland. One illustration of the slowness with which a newcomer learns American customs was the fact that when, in June 1925, a few days before graduation from Columbia, I was notified that I had been elected to Phi Beta Kappa, I had no idea what this meant. I had to go to the University Library to look up the meaning of Phi Beta Kappa.

At the age of 20, I had spent two years in New York in new surroundings working and studying intensively, and I was starved for companionship. When I was sought out and befriended by some Hungarian Communists, my ignorance of the American way and my loneliness helped them to persuade me to join their group, the Hungarian Section of the Young Workers League. Social activities—dances, singing, and sports, especially soccer, which I had played as a boy in Hungary—occupied most of our time, and I was able to have some of the fun I had missed so badly during my first two years in America.

Thus, although the Young Workers League was an adjunct of the Workers Party (the forerunner of the present Communist Party), it was some time before I became critical of their ideas. The leaders of the League got me to write a few articles in the Hungarian Communist newspaper and to give some talks to Hungarians in New York and neighboring towns. I believe that I wrote five or six articles and I delivered a number of lectures. By this time I remember very few details of that period, because long ago I put my experience in the Young Workers League behind me and forgot it almost completely until 1947, when I discovered that this episode of my past had become an issue in connection with my security record.

Since Senator Hickenlooper asked a question of my wife about her belonging to the Young Workers League, I should like to state here that this question is probably based on mistaken identity. In 1926 I married Anna Friedmann, a Hungarian girl, in New York. She was a member of the Young Workers League and in fact she had been instrumental in bringing me into that organization. Her brother, about whom Senator Hickenlooper also inquired, also belonged to the Young Workers League. I understand that he is an active Communist, but I should like to state that I have not seen him for twenty-two years. My first wife and I were separated in 1928, and we were divorced in 1931. I married Esther Cankin, my present wife, in 1931.

In 1924 the Workers Party was in turmoil over the American Presidential election, the issue being whether to have their own candidate or to support La Follette. The Young Workers took part in the debate, though they were not permitted to vote at the Workers Party meetings. I wrote two articles for "Uj Elő" supporting the minority view, which was that La Follette should be supported. The majority, led by William Z. Foster, intended to run a Workers' Party candidate but, as we were given to understand, its decision was overruled by Moscow. Even though the side I had supported won, I felt disillusioned because I believe in majority rule. Also, I did not like the idea of Moscow directing the American Communists. As the months went by I found more and more to criticize in the ideas and methods of the Communists. At the end of 1926 or possibly early in 1927 I dropped out of the Young Workers League. I did not write a letter of resignation, but told them I was leaving, and stopped paying dues and attending meetings.

From 1927 to 1933 I went through a period of transition from Communist ideology to liberalism. In that period I still had some radical tendencies, but they played a very unimportant part in my life as compared with my scientific work and professional advancement. One of the instances I can recall of my increasingly critical attitude toward communism is that when I was at Johns Hopkins in 1931-32, I gave a talk to a group of students on Science in the Soviet Union. In it I condemned the Soviet attitude toward science, especially condemning Science at the Crossroads, a Russian book which had just been translated and published in New York.

The complete break came in 1933, when I spent almost a year in Germany doing postgraduate study. I was on leave of absence from the Department of Agriculture. My wife and I were vigorously opposed to the Nazi regime and when we observed the Communist tactics, which at times opposed the Nazis and at times supported them, I decided that I could no longer approve of any Communist ideas or methods but must oppose communism completely and actively. In common with many other Americans in the early 1930's I thought for a time that the Communist system might be all right for Russia, but as more information came out of the Soviet Union I came to the conclusion that this view was incorrect, also, and that communism was not working even there.

In her testimony before the subcommittee my wife explained how she came to substitute for me as a speaker before the Washington Chapter of the American Friends of the Soviet Union in 1934. I corroborate her statement and add that except for this event and except for attending the two meetings of the organization at which my wife presided, I had no relations with the organization.

I wish to quote here a passage from the testimonial letter of Dr. George Gamow, Professor of Physics at the George Washington University, who escaped from Soviet Russia and came to this country in 1934; and who has known me ever since his arrival in Washington:

"I can assure you that, as a man who came from Soviet Russia, I have a very good nose to scent communistic sympathies, and I am certain that neither Stephen nor his wife, Esther, fall into that category. As a matter of fact, Stephen told me many years ago that in his youth he was interested in that kind of ideas, but realized very soon that they lead to perish rather than to the benefit of humanity."

I repeat here that since 1927 I have not belonged to any organization which has been listed as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States or by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. I am a member of the American Chemical Society, the Washington Academy of Sciences, the Philosophical Society of Washington, Sigma Xi, and Phi Beta Kappa. From 1928 until 1930 or 1931 I belonged to the International Friendship Club sponsored by the Friends Meeting at 1811 Eye Street NW., in Washington. This was a local social club whose membership represented all political views as well as several nationalities and races. Since 1943 I have belonged to the Parent-Teachers Association of the Phoebe Hearst Elementary School, the school which my two daughters attend. This is the extent of my participation in organizations.

In addition to the foregoing description of my political evolution, I wish to answer the three questions which Senator McCarthy raised in his statement before the subcommittee on March 13, and then comment on his assertions regarding the views of various investigative agencies about me.

As to the questions:

(1) Have I been the subject of a constant investigation by Government agencies over a period of ten years? The answer is probably "Yes." I know I have been investigated several times, and the explanation is simple. I have held a number of different posts during the past ten years, for each of which an investigation was required. Early in 1941, while I was still in the Department of Agriculture, I was asked to become a consultant to the National Defense Research Committee, and was investigated. I was investigated again in 1942 before being commissioned an officer in the Naval Reserve. In 1945 I was cleared to the Manhattan District, but do not know whether a special investigation preceded the clearance. I was investigated again under the President's Loyalty Program as a civilian employee of the Navy Department. The result of all these investigations was stated in the announcement given out by the Navy on March 13 that I had been thoroughly investigated and was not charged with disloyalty. Among my testimonial letters there are many written by Naval officers who have worked with me and observed me closely. I quote here a paragraph from the letter of Vice Admiral G. F. Hussey, Jr., USN (Ret.) who was formerly Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department:

"On at least one occasion Commander Brunauer's loyalty was questioned. There were made available to me, as I recall it, all data in the possession of the Office of Naval Intelligence and, I believe, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation concerning Commander Brunauer. After considering these data, together with my own observations of him, and after discussing the situation with my Deputy Chief, I was satisfied in my own mind that Commander Brunauer's loyalty was above reproach. On that basis I continued him in his responsible position involving classified work and subsequent to the war approved of his being placed in a civil status to do similar work. I am not certain whether his transfer to a civil status was finally accomplished before my detachment from the Bureau in September 1947 or after it, but the step in any event had my approval."

(2) Was I a close friend and collaborator of Noel Field, "known Communist who recently and mysteriously disappeared behind the Iron Curtain"? The answer is "No." I was never a close friend of Mr. Field, although I knew him from 1928 through the early thirties. At that time he appeared to be a liberal in politics. In 1934 after I returned from Germany I met him at a social gathering and learned that he had become a radical in his views. He did not say that he had become a Communist, and I had no further knowledge of his political views until they were referred to in the press during the past year. The last time I saw Noel Field was at the end of 1945 or early 1946 during the visit that he and his wife made in Washington after the war. About 30 or 40 of their former friends and acquaintances gathered to hear about the relief work they had done in France and Switzerland during the war. There was no discussion of politics, and I exchanged only a few words with Noel Field during the entire evening. To the best of my recollection, that is the only time I have seen him since he went to Geneva to work for the League of Nations in 1935 or 1936. As to the term "collaborator," I have never collaborated with Noel Field on anything.

(3) Have I admitted to associates that I was a member of the Communist Party? I can answer this question by referring to the information contained in the testimonial letters. I have told some of my friends of my early connection with the Young Workers League. I described my relationship with the Communist movement to the Loyalty and Security Board of the Department of State when I appeared as a witness for my wife, on July 28, 1948; and I described it to the Navy after I became aware that my early Communist connections caused some questions as to my present loyalty.

However, until Senator McCarthy mentioned the findings of the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1947 and "a Senate Investigating Committee in 1941" I did not know that my political views had been the subject of congressional investigations. If I had known this, I would have sought to clarify my political views and would have taken whatever steps were possible to clear my record.

The account of my political development and the answers to Senator McCarthy's allegations should be looked at against the background of my scientific work and my efforts for the national defense which, together, have occupied by far the largest part of my time, energy, and thought for the last twenty-two years.

From 1928 to 1942 I did scientific work in the Department of Agriculture, concentrating upon fundamental research in physical chemistry. During the first five years most of my spare time was devoted to graduate study, and I obtained the M. S. degree at George Washington University in 1929 and the Ph. D. degree at Johns Hopkins University in 1933. In this period of 14½ years I made some scientific contributions and some practical contributions. The latter related to the production of artificial fertilizers; the former to the processes of catalysis and adsorption which are of fundamental scientific importance and which also play an important part in industry. I published about twenty scientific articles, several of which received considerable acclaim in scientific circles. I also wrote a book called Adsorption of Gases and Vapors, which was published by the Princeton University Press in 1943 and the Oxford University Press in 1944. For my scientific contributions in the Department of Agriculture the Chemical Society of Washington awarded me the Hillebrand Prize for 1945.

From October 1942 to August 1946 I was an officer in the Naval Reserve on active duty. I started as a Lieutenant and was assigned to the Research and Development Division of the Bureau of Ordnance. At that time Lieutenant (j. g.) W. E. Land and I were responsible for the work on explosives. Together we built up explosives research and development until, by the end of the war there were close to fifty men, officers and civilians, engaged in this work under my supervision. In addition, hundreds of men were collaborating with us in the National Defense Research Committee and within the services on the development of explosives. This work led to the development of new explosives which I recommended for adoption by the Navy, and the Navy accepted my recommendations. These new important explosives included one, which has been adopted for all underwater weapons of the Navy; another, which has been adopted for the anti-aircraft weapons of the Navy; and a third one, which has been adopted as a filler of bombs by the Army. A considerable number of the testimonial letters attached to this statement deal with my contributions during the war. I quote here two paragraphs from one of these letters, which I received from E. Brigh Wilson, Jr., Professor of Chemistry at Harvard University, who is Visiting Professor at Oxford University this year. Professor Wilson, whom I have known well since 1942, is recognized as one of the most brilliant scientists in the United States and is considered by those who are associated with him as an American of unquestionable loyalty and highest integrity. Immediately upon reading about Senator McCarthy's charges on March 17, in Oxford, he wrote to me:

"Knowing your wartime work as I do I can say that there was no more devoted, self-sacrificing, and sincere patriot in all Washington than you. The job you did was magnificent and deserves the undying gratitude of all Americans and not a treatment like this.

"Your mobilization of scientific assistance for the solution of problems connected with explosives was a highlight of my acquaintance with the services."

For my contributions to the Navy during the war I was awarded the Commendation Ribbon by the Secretary of the Navy and was decorated by the British Government with the Order of the British Empire.

Since September 9, 1946, I have held my present position in the Department of the Navy. When I joined the Navy in 1942 I expected to return to scientific research after the war. However, the Navy wanted me to stay as a civilian scientist, and I stayed because I thought I could make some useful contributions to the national security.

Before discussing my main work for the Navy since the war, I wish to mention my activities in Hungary in 1946, where I was on temporary duty on technical intelligence work. From May 10 to August 10 of that year I was assigned to the United States Naval Representative in the Allied Control Commission for Hungary. I believe I was able to make a unique contribution because of being a scientist and a Naval officer and also a native of Hungary. The attached testimonial letters in Group II give a fairly detailed account of those activities in which I engaged that were not highly classified. These letters show especially what impression I made on people who were very sensitive to political attitudes.

I quote here a brief description of part of my work in Hungary contained in the letter from Rear Admiral W. F. Dietrich, USN (Ret), who was my commanding officer at that time:

"In the years 1945-46, I was US Naval Member of the Allied Control Commission for Hungary, with headquarters at Budapest. During 1946, from about the latter part of May until early August, Commander Stephen Brunauer, then permanently attached to the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department—in which position he remained on in civil status—came to Budapest and served temporarily under me for a little more than two months. At this time the Office of Research and Inventions, Navy Department, was fostering a technical survey into developments during the past war in former enemy countries and the outstanding scientists in the various fields. Brunauer, born in Hungary, and had received his basic education there, knew not only the language but also had former colleagues of his youth in university, some of whom were well acquainted in the scientific advancements. Thus, Brunauer was particularly valuable in connection with taking the survey in Hungary, and in writing up the leading Hungarian Scientists, giving a biographical outline of their accomplishments, political behavior past and present, etc. As a result of this work, which had to be cleverly and expertly handled, so as not to arouse Soviet and Hungarian Communist opposition, several of these scientists are now in this country. Others, seeing that the West was interested in their welfare, also escaped the Iron Curtain and are today in Britain, France, Sweden, and Switzerland, even South America. Still others, encumbered by large families or parents well in years, stayed back, but are either now in Russia or living in constant fear that they will be transported there as research workers."

Most of the scientists referred to by Admiral Dietrich who are now in this country as a result of my activities came to the George Washington University to begin with; some stayed there and others went to such places as Johns Hopkins University, National Fireworks, Inc., etc. They are doing outstanding work and some of them are already making significant contributions to aspects of science which are today of great importance to America.

My main work since the war has been to maintain and build up on a peacetime basis the explosives research and development program of the Navy. There have been three phases of this work, the preparations for the testing of the atomic bomb against ships; the consolidation and reorganization of research on explosives, and the continuance of the development of explosives.

The Bureau of Ordnance participated actively in the Bikini tests in 1946, its main job being to prepare and apply the instruments for measuring the effects of the atomic explosions at Bikini. I was appointed by Admiral Hussey, who was then Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, as Officer in Charge of this work.

At about this time, the first legislation on the control of atomic energy was being considered by a special committee of the Senate. Senator Ball and I discussed this problem many evenings. When he drafted a bill on the subject I helped him. In February 1946 I was called before the Senate Committee on Atomic Energy to testify on the pending legislation. In my testimony I touched briefly on several points but I went into detail on only one point, which was closest to my heart and to my personal interests. I urged that the military should not be excluded from the control of atomic energy, since they have a vital interest in its use.

Parallel with my activities when I was head of the Bureau of Ordnance Instrumentation Group for the Bikini tests, and more intensively later, I worked on building up an adequate postwar research organization in the field of explosives for the Navy. I feel that I was instrumental in persuading a considerable number of the leading scientists in this field to come to the Navy or to continue their work for the Navy and the other services, and as a result the Navy and the National Military Establishment now have an adequate organization to carry on explosives research and development during peacetime.

While I cannot reveal the nature of my contributions to the field of explosives since the war, I can state that they are considered to be of major significance by those who are familiar with my work.

The foregoing account of my scientific work and military service is offered as positive evidence of my loyalty to America and my trustworthiness as an official of the United States Government. I hope that I have described my beliefs and my activities fully enough and that no doubt is left in anyone's mind about my loyalty and my security status.

STEPHEN BRUNAUER.

[Enclosure 2]

DEAR —: Please forgive me for writing a form letter to you. I am sending out close to a hundred of these letters, and it would be impossible to do it if I wrote a separate letter to each of you.

You doubtless read the charges Senator McCarthy made against my wife and me on the thirteenth of March. You doubtless have your own opinion on the subject. I do not know how good the press service is where you are at present, so I enclose here a copy of the official Navy press release about me. The Department of State made a similar statement about my wife.

I expect to be called before the Senate sometime next week to clear myself of Senator McCarthy's charges. (No definite date has been fixed as yet.) I should like to enlist your help in clearing myself.

Would you be willing to write a letter about me to Senator Tydings? The way I visualize it, the letter should contain the following information:

- (1) a brief statement of who you are and what sort of work you are engaged in at present;
- (2) how long you have known me; what sort of connections we had with each other;
- (3) what you think of my character, my loyalty, my reliability, and my contributions; and
- (4) anything else you wish to state.

The letter should be addressed to the Honorable Millard Tydings, United States Senate, Washington, D. C. However, I would appreciate it if you would mail it to me, together with a copy for myself. I would not like to swamp Senator Tydings with individual letters arriving at separate times. It would look like an attempt to exert pressure on him. What I should like to do is to collect all letters and hand them over to Senator Tydings at the time of my appearance before the Subcommittee.

I would deeply appreciate it if you would act urgently on this matter. However, even if your letter does not arrive prior to the hearings, I can still collect the late letters, and transmit them to the Subcommittee later.

With grateful thanks for your help, and with best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,

STEPHEN BRUNAUER,
3417 Quebec Street NW., Washington, D. C.

MARCH 17, 1950.

[Enclosure 3]

The Navy Department announces that Dr. Stephen Brumauer, who has been charged with being a Communist, served as a Commander, United States Naval Reserve, in the Bureau of Ordnance during the war, commencing in 1942. Subsequent to discharge, he was employed in the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, where he is now serving in a civilian capacity. As an employee of that Bureau, Dr. Brumauer has been thoroughly investigated, and as a result of this investigation, administrative decision was made that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant Dr. Brumauer's being charged with having been disloyal and for that reason his case has not been referred to the Loyalty Board.

While a commissioned officer during the war and later as an employee, Dr. Brumauer has made noteworthy contributions in the field of explosives. He is regarded as an eminent expert in that field and his ability in the field of research is highly regarded.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

WASHINGTON, July 6, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: You have asked me to inform your subcommittee concerning the circumstances of the appointment of Dr. Harlow Shapley to the United States National Commission for UNESCO. Dr. Shapley was designated by the Executive Committee of the American Association for the Advancement of Science on May 20, 1947, to serve out the unexpired term of Dr. James Bryant Conant as the representative of that association on the national committee. On June 27, 1947, he was again designated by the association and has now served out his term, which expired April 15, 1950; Dr. Shapley was not, under Public Law 565, seventy-ninth Congress, eligible for reappointment.

Section 3 of Public Law 565 provides, in part, "Such Commission [United States National Commission for UNESCO] shall be appointed by the Secretary of State and shall consist of (a) not more than sixty representative of principal national, voluntary organizations interested in educational, scientific, and cultural matters * * *." The Secretary of State has appointed to the National Commission in every instance the person designated by each such organization to serve on the Commission. This seems to be in accord with the intent of Congress as expressed in the legislative history of the act. In the course of debate concerning the legislation, Congressman Karl Mundt (Republican, South Dakota) said:

"* * * it seems to me if we are going to have an advisory commission that is worth its salt it should be an advisory commission that is not obligated to anybody, not obligated to the Secretary of State, not obligated to any political party, not obligated to any point of view, but one which reflects and represents the views of the organizations to which in turn these delegates are supposed to carry the inspiration and the message and the information of UNESCO.

"Consequently, I want people selected from these organizations in whom the organizations have confidence. I want the Secretary of State to choose the man nominated by these various organizations so that they can go to the advisory conferences, consult and advise with the Secretary of State, so that our Government officials may have the benefit of this great cross section of information."

Congressman Mundt, whose interest in and support of the principles of UNESCO extends over many years, sponsored H. Res. 215, introduced on April 9, 1945, and agreed to by the House of Representatives on May 22, 1945. This resolution urged the participation of the United States in the creation of an international framework within which educational and cultural relations could be considered and promoted in their various aspects.

It should be added that Dr. Shapley was appointed as a member of the United States Delegation to the Preparatory Conference for UNESCO at London in 1945 under former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes. His participation in the work of UNESCO has stemmed from the outset from his position as a scientist and member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. PEURIFOY,
Deputy Under Secretary.

The following letters were received by the Foreign Relations Subcommittee in response to its invitations to the persons publicly charged by Senator McCarthy to either appear before the subcommittee as a witness or else submit a statement of their position:

OLD WESTBURY, LONG ISLAND, N. Y., May 10, 1950.

EDWARD P. MORGAN, Esq.,

*Chief Counsel, Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MORGAN: I have your letter of May 4, 1950, acknowledging the receipt of the documents submitted to the subcommittee on March 30, 1950, and offering me the opportunity to reply to Senator McCarthy's charges in public. I appreciate your offer and the spirit in which this opportunity is afforded me.

You will recall that, in my letter of March 30, 1950, I explained to Senator Tydings the difficulty of my position. As a member of the United Nations Secretariat, I am required to observe the spirit and substance of article 100 of the United Nations Charter. That article reads in part:

"In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek nor receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization."

For the above reason, and because I must leave on May 17, 1950, for Italy and Switzerland on official United Nations business, I do not feel that I can take advantage of the opportunity offered me by the subcommittee. I expect to return to the United States in late July.

I should tell you that I have caused to be sent to Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, a copy of the letter and memorandum of March 30, 1950, which I sent to Senator Tydings. I have also sent a copy of that letter and memorandum to Mr. Willard Barber of the State Department. I am enclosing herewith a copy of the memorandum, in affidavit form, which I have subscribed, sworn to, and acknowledged before a notary public of the State of New York. I do this to indicate that that memorandum contains all the pertinent facts known to me and to show that I have no hesitation whatsoever in adhering to them under oath. I should be only too happy, of course, to answer any questions pertaining to, or make any additional statements in explanation of, the facts which I have given in the memorandum when and if you, Senator Tydings, or other members of the subcommittee request it.

Respectfully yours,

GUSTAVO DURAN.

MEMORANDUM TO SENATOR TYDINGS

On March 14, when I read the first reports on the charges made against me Senator McCarthy before the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee, I issued a statement denying the specific charges that had come to my attention and stating that I was not and never had been a Communist. I also said that I suspected that the so-called United States Army Intelligence Report on which Senator McCarthy was basing most of his allegations was nothing more than a literal translation of an article published in the April 9, 1946, issue of the Madrid newspaper Arriba which is the mouthpiece of the Falange Party of Franco Spain.

I have now had an opportunity to examine in detail the testimony of Senator McCarthy before the subcommittee, and my suspicions as to his sources have been fully confirmed.

I had thought that those accusations had long since been laid to rest. Both the charges and the exhibits which appeared to substantiate them were found to be entirely baseless and misleading by the State Department Security Committee in 1946. Even the House Committee on Un-American Activities, which had first given publicity to the charges, decided against pressing the matter any further.

You have before you the letter, dated September 14, 1946, of Mr. Donald Russell, then Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of Personnel Affairs, in which it is stated that the Security Committee, after reviewing the entire record as procured from all available sources, recommended favorably on me.

With only one or two easily refutable exceptions, Senator McCarthy has come forward with no new charges, and no additional material with which to support his accusations. I therefore cannot understand why the conclusions of the Security Committee and Mr. Donald Russell are not equally as valid today as they were in 1946. For the sake of clearing the record once and for all, and in the hope that these unfounded accusations will never again arise to disturb the peace to which my family and I are entitled, I wish to lay before you and the subcommittee the facts as they are known to me, and as they are known to the Security Committee and to all those responsible persons who have known me intimately for a period of many years. In this connection, I am attaching a biographical sketch of my family background and career.

The testimony of Senator McCarthy is based on (a) a United States Military Intelligence Report, dated June 4, 1946, which, in turn, is based on a report given the United States Military Attaché at Madrid by the A. C. of S., G-2, Spanish Central General Staff; (b) a report made by Mr. Indalecio Prieto on August 9, 1938, before the National Committee of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, and subsequently incorporated in a pamphlet entitled "How and Why I left the Ministry of National Defense"; (c) statements made by Lt. Edward J. Ruff, Assistant United States Military Attaché in the Dominican Republic; and (d) information allegedly obtained directly by Senator McCarthy or by his assistants.

(a) As I pointed out in my statement to the press, the Spanish Army Intelligence Report which was incorporated in the report of the United States Military Attaché was a literal reproduction of a scurrilous attack on me published in the April 9, 1946, issue of the Madrid newspaper Arriba, which is the mouthpiece of the Falange Party of Franco Spain.

The article in Arriba was published as part of the campaign of the Franco Government to counter disclosures that had been made by the United States State Department on the relations between Nazi Germany and Franco Spain during the last World War. These disclosures were actually excerpts from the captured records of the German Foreign Office, but the Franco Government broadcast the story in Madrid, first on February 28, 1946, and subsequently on March 3, 1946, that I had personally fabricated the disclosures. The Franco Government, which had paid no attention to me for seven years, suddenly undertook to make me an agent of Moscow and to smear my character in the vilest possible way.

A clipping of this article was forwarded to the United States Government by the United States Naval Attaché in Madrid, under Intelligence Report No. 135-46 dated April 15, 1946. I have a photostatic copy of the article in my possession, a copy and translation of which I am attaching hereto. Comparison of the article with the wording and very order of the Spanish Military Intelligence Report shows that both documents are identical.

When in May 1946 the United States Military Attaché requested information on me from the Intelligence Service of the Spanish Central General Staff, the Franco Government, feeling that at that moment it would serve its purposes to smear my character, and being unable to produce a single instance of substantial evidence, resorted to sending to the United States Military Attaché a literal copy of the Arriba article. Apparently the Military Attaché had no knowledge that the article had been already transmitted by the Naval Attaché at the time of its publication, and therefore accepted the Spanish Military Intelligence report as a bona fide document based on actual facts. Aside from the misrepresentations concerning my character and beliefs, the report contains such gross inaccuracies regarding easily ascertainable facts, such as my birthplace and residence, that had the Military Attaché taken the precaution of checking these facts, he would have questioned the validity of the report.

Having established the unreliable character of Senator McCarthy's chief source of information, I would like to examine the charges one by one.

1. The newspaper Arriba charged, and the so-called Intelligence Report repeated verbatim, that I came to Madrid "for the first time in the 1920's from the Canary Islands in the company of * * * Nestor." As stated in my biographical sketch, and as shown by the enclosed photostatic copy of my birth certificate dated April 3, 1940, which was extended by the very same government that six years later gave the Canary Islands as my birthplace, I was born in Barcelona. I resided with my family continuously in Madrid from 1910 till 1929. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has in its files a list of the various domiciles of my family. This information, which was provided by me, can be easily checked.

2. Arriba said, and the so-called Military Intelligence Report repeated verbatim, that "as a friend of Nestor" I became "employed as a pianist in the company of Antonia Mercé, the Argentinita." Actually, I was not employed by Antonia Mercé as a pianist, nor was I recommended to her by Mr. Nestor. Madame Mercé asked me to compose the score of a ballet, as she asked several other Spanish composers. My score was performed in various European capitals, and it was for the purpose of conducting it that I accompanied her during her tour of Germany in 1927.

Incidentally, the stage name of Antonia Mercé was actually "La Argentina," and "La Argentinita" was the stage name of a lesser dancer whose real name was Encarnación Lopez. Both dancers have appeared in New York. Had the report been prepared by a reliable official source, and not improvised by a journalist bent on libel, such confusion in identity could not have been made.

3. Arriba and the so-called Report go on to say that my "repulsive morals" caused me "to incur the fury of the Berlin police," that I was ousted from Germany, and that "similar trouble happened to me in other European capitals." Actually I have never been arrested at any time in any city on any charge, or ever been reprimanded by an officer of the law, except for once passing a stop sign in Mineola, Long Island.

As regards the loathsome immoral tendencies that Arriba and the so-called Report have attributed to me and that Senator McCarthy has echoed, I challenge Senator McCarthy or anyone to repeat that charge, not in classified reports or privileged statements, but to my face.

With respect to the charge that I was known under the name of "El Porcellana," the first time in my life that I had ever heard that appellation applied to me, or for that matter to anyone, was when I read the scurrilous Arriba attack. General Franco's pressmen who invented this particular piece of nonsense must feel proud to know that it has been picked up and echoed by a Senator of the United States of America.

4. Arriba, the so-called Military Intelligence Report, and Senator McCarthy charge that I returned to Madrid upon the Proclamation of the Spanish Republic (1931) under the cover of a representative of Paramount Pictures, but actually as an agent of the GPU. I returned to Spain in May 1934 from Paris, neither as an agent of the GPU nor as a representative of Paramount Pictures but simply as a person who returned home because the Spanish section of Paramount Pictures with which I had been working in Paris had been discontinued, as that company's records will show.

5. Arriba states, the so-called Report and Senator McCarthy repeat, that "such meetings took place in Duran's home at 104 or 106 Santa Engracia St., that the police had to make their appearance more than once." Any accurate police record would have given the correct number, which was 100, and would have mentioned the fact that that apartment was my father's home, and would have indicated that nothing took place at that address nor at any other place at which I or a member of my family has resided, which would call for police intervention.

6. Arriba, the so-called Report and Senator McCarthy charge that alleged records of the Madrid Police concerning me were probably destroyed "by his friend Serrano Poncela, Chief of Madrid Police, in October and November of 1936." The alleged police records on me never existed because I have never done anything that would call for an entry on any police record. In order to justify the lie that these records did exist a second lie had to be invented that they were destroyed. I have never met Mr. Serrano Poncela, nor any chief of the Madrid Police, nor any chief of police anywhere.

7. Arriba, the so-called Report and Senator McCarthy charge that I "formed part of the High Russian General Staff," that I "went to Moscow with a delegation of the male and female members of the Red Army," and that later I "was for some time in Paris." I was never a member of any Russian Staff; I have never been in Moscow or any Russian territory; and, after the Spanish Civil War, I did not go to Paris until eight years later, when, in 1947, I was sent there on official duty by the United Nations.

At the end of the Spanish Civil War, through the intervention of Messrs. Abington Gooden, the British Consul General at Valencia, Alexander Hanson Ballantyne, Third Secretary of the British Embassy at Valencia, and Woodruff Wallner, American Consul at Valencia, I was evacuated from Spain aboard the British Cruiser Galatea and the Hospital Ship Maine and transported to England.

8. With regard to the United States Military Attaché's comment at the end of his report, I never, in the entire course of the Spanish Civil War, held any command in any International Brigade. As for the statement of the Attaché's incognito informer, that I murdered two innocent persons, it is a complete lie.

(b) With regard to the allegations based on Mr. Prieto's statement of 1938, I first learned that this statement had been made when ex-Congressman J. Parnell Thomas made his charges against me before the House on March 28, 1946. In the eight years that elapsed between the dates of Mr. Prieto's and Mr. Thomas' statements, I saw Mr. Prieto on a number of occasions. He was a guest at my house and our relations were cordial. At no time did he ever give me any indication that any one of my actions, past or present, had come in for criticism by him.

Immediately after Mr. Thomas had made his statement before the House, I wrote to Mr. Prieto requesting an explanation of Mr. Thomas' remarks. Mr. Prieto cabled as follows:

"Letter 29 received yesterday answered it today as follows: 'I affirm that the statements of Mr. John Parnell Thomas are not founded on any words said by me to him, with whom I have had no contact, nor to any person whatever. I have never accused you of being agent of the Russian police nor member of the Comintern and I never said anything whatever to anyone which would give a basis for believing it.' Referring to your telegram of today I add that I have not given to the Committee, with which I have never had any contact, any information concerning you or any other person."

When I learned, however, that Mr. Prieto had actually referred to "a certain Duran" in a report he had made on August 9, 1938, before the National Committee of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, I wrote to him again asking whether I was supposed to be that person. Mr. Prieto replied on April 12 that while I was the person referred to in his report, his statement did not imply that I was an agent of the Secret Russian Police or a member of the Comintern. Concerning my supposed Communist leanings, he went on to say:

"The facts described in that part of the report demonstrated how certain pressures were brought to bear, against my will, on government officials working under me. * * * I myself had to endure pressures of that kind without sufficiently defending myself against them."

Subsequently, Mr. Prieto stated to Messrs. Robert Willson Wall, Jr., and Richard Godfrey, Attachés to the American Embassy at Mexico City, that he had appointed me as head of the Madrid Zone of the Military Intelligence Service (SIM) at the proposal of General Miaja, then Commander of the Army of Madrid; he then reiterated that he (Prieto), like others in the Government who were equally hostile to communism, had been subjected to Communist pressures.

The facts concerning my brief assignment to the Military Intelligence Service (SIM) are as follows:

As already stated, I was an officer of the regular army of Spain under a legally constituted Government recognized by all countries with the sole exceptions of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. A coalition of political parties—right wing republican, center republican, socialist, communist and others—composed that Government.

As a soldier, I had sworn allegiance to that Government. It was therefore my duty to follow instructions from my superior officers, and through them from the Minister of National Defense.

Approximately six weeks after the conclusion of the Battle of Brunete (July-August 1937) in which my unit had actively participated, I was ordered by my immediate military superior, Colonel Heredia, Chief of the XVIIth Army Corps, to report for instructions to General Miaja, Chief of the Army of Madrid. When I reported to General Miaja he told me that I had been appointed by the Minister of National Defense (Mr. Prieto) as head of the Madrid Zone of the Military Intelligence Service.

As General Miaja will confirm, I objected to the assignment because I felt that I might best serve the interests of the Spanish Republic in my capacity as a Division Commander on active duty at the front, and because I had a deeply rooted aversion towards the proposed type of activity. My objections were overridden and I was ordered to report to the Chief of the General Staff, General Vicente Rojo y Lluch, and to the Minister of National Defense (Mr. Prieto), at Valencia.

When, a few days later, I reported to the Chief of the General Staff at Valencia, I indicated again my objections to the assignment. The Chief of Staff told me that he had consented reluctantly to my appointment and only on condition that it be not considered permanent.

I then reported to Mr. Prieto and was instructed by him to receive technical advice and opinions from experts, for the organization of the Military Intelligence Service in the Madrid zone; these experts from whom I was to take advice would be designated by the Chief of the National Intelligence Service.

When I reported to the latter I was informed of the experts whose advice I was expected to follow.

I returned to Madrid at the beginning of October 1937 and, after a week of preliminary orientation, assumed my new duties. During the period of about two weeks of my actual tenure of office, a few temporary appointments were made at the recommendations of the experts. However, the operational stage of the service had not even begun when about the middle of October 1937, I was ordered by the Chief of the General Staff to report back to the XVIIIth Army Corps. The Chief of the General Staff, making preparations at that time for the Battle of Ternel (December 1937-January 1938), requested my return to active duty in order that I might reassume command of and reorganize my Division which was slated to participate at that Battle.

The decision was very much to my liking and seemed wholly logical to me. Mr. Prieto has asserted that he was subjected to various pressures and maneuvers to keep me in Madrid. I was completely unaware of such pressures and maneuvers and had no part of them. Whether justified or not, I had the reputation of being a successful military commander with a capacity for organization. This simple fact can explain why I was ordered to Madrid in the first instance, and why I was recalled to the active front when an important military operation was impending.

General Vicente Rojo y Lluch, Chief of the General Staff of the Army of the Spanish Republic, and now an Honorary Brigadier General of the Bolivian Army and a Professor of History of Strategy and Tactics at the Command and General Staff School of Bolivia, can verify the above account.

(c) Concerning the charges made and the opinions expressed by Lt. Edward J. Ruff, Assistant United States Military Attaché in the Dominican Republic, all of them are merely repetitions of the charges that have been previously answered in this memorandum.

The charges are said by Lieutenant Ruff to have been submitted "by a Spanish refugee who also served in Duran's promotion board in Spain." I do not know what is meant by this phrase. If it is meant that there was at any time a promotion board in all of the military units under my command, this part of the statement is as false as the rest. If the reference concerns the promotion board of the General Staff, my successive promotions in the Spanish Army were made exclusively at the recommendations of my immediate superior officers and for strictly military reasons.

(d) The statements made by Senator McCarthy based on information allegedly obtained by himself were (1) that I was taken into the State Department from my job "as a lieutenant-colonel in the Communist International Brigade"; (2) that I am "actually with the International Refugee Organization engaged in work having to do with screening refugees coming into this country"; (3) that my naturalization "took about six weeks"; and (4) that I obtained employment in the United Nations upon the recommendation of "a member of the present Presidential Cabinet."

(1) As stated in the attached biographical sketch, I was a reserve noncommissioned officer in the regular army of the Spanish Republic when the Civil War broke out, and consequently I served in the regular army throughout the war. I was never a member of any "International Brigade." During the years prior to my employment in the State Department, I resided in England for over a year. After arriving in the United States, I worked successively in the Museum of Modern Art of New York City, and in the Pan American Union, Washington, D. C.

(2) It is a matter of public record that I have never been employed by the International Refugee Organization nor have I had anything whatsoever to do with screening refugees coming into this or any other country. Had the Senator consulted the telephone directory of the United Nations, he would have found the Department and Section in which I work.

(3) As regards my naturalization, I arrived in this country on May 28, 1940 and resided here continuously for two and one-half years prior to attaining citizenship. I declared my intention to become an American citizen at the time I received my immigration visa on April 30, 1940. I fully complied with the period of residence required by the Naturalization Statute, contrary to Senator McCarthy who presumes to know that I obtained my naturalization in "about six weeks."

(4) Finally, in obtaining employment in the United Nations, I neither sought nor received any form of support from any official of the United States Government.

At no time have I hidden the fact that I actively participated in the Spanish Civil War. When in 1940 I was registered for the draft in the United States Army, I gave a detailed statement on my military career in Spain to the Local Draft Board #750, at Mamaroneck, New York. This period of my life has also been mentioned in every application I have filed for employment.

I would like to add that there are many people in responsible positions in this country, in England, in Spain, and in Latin America who have known me for many years and who can testify as to my moral integrity and beliefs with an authority that the sources quoted by Senator McCarthy do not possess.

Finally, I wish to state that I chose to become an American because I believe in and unreservedly adhere to the institutions and ideals of this country. My wife is an American citizen by birth. My children are American and are being brought up in accordance with the best American traditions. The obscene and false accusations that have been made against me harm not only myself but also my wife and children. I have faith that the sense of justice of the Senate of the United States will correct this situation once and for all and will allow me to live in the decency and privacy to which I am entitled.

Mr. EDWARD P. MORGAN,
Chief Counsel, Subcommittee Investigating the State Department,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR Mr. MORGAN: I thank you for your letter of May 4 and the subcommittee's kind offer to afford me an opportunity to reply in public to the charges by Senator Joseph McCarthy. Since I have never been on the payroll of the State Department, and since my activities seem to be wholly irrelevant to the current political attack on the Government, I have no desire to dignify the irresponsible slanders by appearing publicly in defense. I should be glad, however, to submit a statement, if the subcommittee would like, providing I can be informed as to the nature of the charges against me. When they were made 2 or 3 months ago they changed from hour to hour and day to day.

When I heard that the Loyalty Board proposed to examine again the records of all who had been named by Senator McCarthy, I wrote a letter to my acquaintance, Mr. Seth Richardson, Chairman of the Board, enclosing copies of two publicly issued statements. I enclose copies of both of these statements herewith.

Again with my thanks for the opportunity to reply publicly and in person.

Very sincerely yours,

HARLOW SHAPLEY.

Mr. SETH W. RICHARDSON,
The President's Loyalty Review Board,
White House Offices, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RICHARDSON: From a press report I learn that the President's Loyalty Review Board, or some similar agency, plans to look into the loyalty evidence of all the individuals named by Senator McCarthy during this past month or so of accusations. I enclose copies of statements I have made in reply to the McCarthy charges. Also a requested response to the attack by Mr. Ober, of Baltimore, of last spring. This item, "Flying Samovars," was printed in June in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin. It comments on the Waldorf Conference; but all phases of that "Cultural and Scientific Conference for World Peace" are presented in a pamphlet Speaking of Peace which is probably in your committee's possession. If not, and it could be of any service with respect to the various participants, I shall be glad to have a copy sent to you.

I believe that the nature of the Waldorf Conference was the chief subject matter at a small dinner we both attended in New York City a year ago.

Sincerely yours,

HARLOW SHAPLEY.

Mr. JOHN O. TOERNER,
Chairman, Catholic Activity Committee, St. Joseph Council,
521 West 207th Street, New York 34, N. Y.

DEAR MR. TOERNER: I am sincerely glad to have your letter and the enclosed pamphlet. I have no doubt but that you sent me your letter and this printed statement in complete good faith. I appreciate the quotation from the encyclical of Pope Pius XI. As the holder of the Pope Pius XI Prize for my scientific and civic contributions, I am naturally sensitive to the statement by this great leader.

I note that you say in your first sentence that I am "unfortunately listed with pro-Communist organizations." I agree with you. It is very unfortunate, since I do not belong to any pro-Communist organization. In the days when Russia was our ally I helped, as did a million of Americans, with Russian relief; and I helped sponsor American-Russian friendship, as did General Eisenhower and many other distinguished Americans. Also I have fought hard, and will continue to fight hard, for the defense of all antitotalitarian activities, and against the abuses of constitutional civil liberties and human rights in America. It is true that in these days of hysteria, and of overwhelming suspicion of our fellowmen, the abuses of civil rights have largely involved adherents to left-wing movements. Here in America the minority persecutors have not yet gone after the fascists or the extreme rightists.

The American-Russian Institute, of which I am a trustee, along with several distinguished Wall Street lawyers and other patriotic Americans, is not the slightest partisan or pro-Communist, but an educational organization of some twenty-three years' standing, serving to give information about Russian political, economic, and demographic affairs to American business, government, and educational groups (Reader's Digest, General Electric Company, and the like). In blind mistake it is listed by the Attorney General as suspect, but that does not force me to run to cover.

I had hoped, and still hope, that some organization such as yours would have something to say (and I mean this seriously and sincerely) in response to Drew Pearson's comments on the relation of Senator McCarthy's rather wild red and publicity hunt to Father Walsh of Georgetown. Perhaps it has been answered. But I really need to know the answer. I want to treat it fairly, and I hope it is published.

Certainly your organization is not very proud of the career, for the past two months, of Senator Joseph McCarthy. Americans like sportsmanship; bravery; honesty.

I enclose a copy of a statement that was printed about his attack on me.

Sincerely yours,

HARLOW SHAPLEY.

IN RESPONSE TO A HEADLINE ATTACK BY CLERK DORGAN AND STATE ASSEMBLYMAN MCCARTHY OF BOSTON, REQUESTING HARVARD UNIVERSITY TO DISCHARGE THE UNDERSIGNED AS ONE UNFIT TO HOLD A POST IN HARVARD UNIVERSITY

(The account published in the Harvard Crimson on March 22 was followed on March 23 with the following reply)

The attack on me by Mr. Dorgan and the two McCarthy's¹ is both tiresome and rather comic. Tiresome, because they parade the old allegations fabricated by J. Parnell Thomas² and his agents, which are as untrue and misleading today as they were a year ago. I have no desire to argue with Dorgan and the McCarthy's in the interest of their headlines. Comic, because all this noise is made about one who has never met an American Communist and knows only three or four Americans who have been at times defenders of all things Russian. (I know "scientifically" half a dozen European scientists who are said to be Communists.)

In spite of this hysterical nonsense, however, I shall not retreat from my willingness to work for humanitarian causes, and in the interest of preventing war and of maintaining civil rights and freedoms in America.

The first wild and roaring charges against me by Republican Senator McCarthy, a month ago, contained six misstatements in four sentences—perhaps the indoor record for mendacity. The only thing right was my name. He moderated the charges in the course of a few days to almost nothing, thus admitting his complete irresponsibility. It seems to me that his methods are a decided menace to the Republican Party, a dishonor to the United States Senate, and a positive danger to America at this critical time.

FLYING SAMOVARs

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BULLETIN:

It is simply a matter of survival. Shall we gamble away our western culture that generations of artists, scientists, and industrialists have helped to build? Shall we rely on peace through threat and force, the temporary peace of the bully, or shall we seek peace and survival through peaceful means? We hear of the greatest of all peacetime armies in Russia. We find our own country, already the mightiest Nation in the history of the world, officially boasting its atomic bombs, showing off its all-powerful Navy, strutting with its world-girdling air forces, striving to grow mightier and more deadly. Is it any wonder that some of us who have watched history, who have invested a bit in current civilization, who are willing to recognize hysteria as hysteria—is it surprising that we are willing to look for alternatives to the force method, that has such a sad record of futility?

As one involved in international scientific work and responsibilities, along with many others I feel some obligation to concern myself with the social crisis. If conferences on ways of attaining international good will should be a part of our contribution, we shall not hesitate to plan meetings for the study of peace, notwithstanding Mr. Ober's³ nervous displeasure or continued attacks by the defamatory section of the Press.

No matter how loudly Mr. Hearst and his kind shout that the New York conference was Communist planned or Communist operated, the statement is completely false. More than anyone else, I personally planned the conference (beginning two years ago) and presided at all the major meetings. By no feat of distortion can I be made out as communist, or fascist, or reactionary Republican. I am a member of no political party. No one could be more opposed than I to totalitarianism, whether it emanates from dictator, political bureau, or those who advocate minority-suppression legislation.

The peace conference fell on unfortunate times. We did not foresee a year ago that the Government would in March be selling the Atlantic Pact to a worried Europe and that a terrifically expensive armament program must be glamorized and justified. How to do it? Frighten the public. Scare the togas off the Congressmen. Smear all antimilitarists. In transparent ways, sometimes, ¹The other is Senator Joseph McCarthy, of Wisconsin.

²New Jersey Congressman, now in a federal prison in Connecticut.

³Mr. Ober, attorney of Baltimore, has asked Harvard to do something about Professors Child and Shapley. The University vigorously declines to do so.

built-up fears are employed. A Cabinet member publicly rumors a submarine off the coast—and Congress comes through with the big appropriations. Then no more of the submarine scare. Soon now more billions must be voted. What will be the panic technique this time—flying samovars?

Frankly, I am sorry that we had to witness the Government's deliberate stacking of the Conference with guests only from eastern Europe and the pulling down of an American iron curtain against western Europeans, thus thwarting a major goal of UNESCO, and setting the stage for red-baiting. I am sorry the National Manufacturers Association could not carry out its truly intelligent plan of showing America to the visiting communists. I am sorry that we must repeatedly point out what should be obvious—that all of our work in science and the arts—of the past, of the present and the future—will mean nothing at all if the trend toward war is not stopped or diverted.

In the opening address at the New York Conference for World Peace, I emphasized the fact that both Russia and America are so obsessed with each other's shortcomings that they overlook, or choose to ignore, their own shortcomings. I pointed out that racial discrimination in America is perhaps our most embarrassing social fault. The totalitarian curb on individual freedoms is, in the opinion of America, the primal curse of the Russian system. One country is said to export communistic social doctrines, the other economic imperialism. But why not both practice tolerance, seek adjustments, and turn our fighting instincts and our human wealth to war on the real enemies of all mankind—to war on poverty, disease, ignorance, and baseless suspicion.

The conference in New York, bravely sponsored by more than 500 leading American citizens, was impressive to those who took part. Serious, sincere, critical but friendly, all the meetings, from the initial dinner to the conclusion in Madison Square Garden, were oversubscribed, and hundreds sought to participate that could not be admitted. Much of the American public, however, obtained from press and radio the impression that something evil and dangerous was happening.

After the first World War, the minority persecution died down when the disgraceful furor, that had been whipped up largely by the Attorney General of that time, had become firesome. Perhaps we have now reached the crest of this unthinking hysteria.

If more tolerant times come again and international disaster is averted, notwithstanding the militarism of Russia and the United States, then the various American conference for world peace may be remembered as events that turned us toward thoughts of saving ourselves, instead of risking the destruction of civilization, through attempting to solve world problems with bombs and poison.

MR. EDWARD P. MORGAN,

*Chief Counsel, Subcommittee Investigating the State Department,
Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MORGAN: Thank you for your letter of May 4, which did not reach me until yesterday afternoon, May 8, due no doubt to current delays in postal deliveries. I appreciate your consideration, and that of the subcommittee, in offering me an opportunity to reply in public to the charges made against me by Senator Joseph McCarthy, or to submit a statement to the subcommittee. For personal reasons arising out of family problems and my teaching duties, I prefer to do the latter, as follows:

Senator McCarthy's allegation that I am, or have ever been, a Communist or Communist sympathizer is a falsehood. On March 14, 1950, upon reading of his accusation in the daily press, I released the following statement to AP, UP, NBC, and the New York Times:

Senator McCarthy is mistaken in supposing that I have ever held any post in the Department of State or the Foreign Service. He is perhaps confusing this with my lectures at the National War College, to which I was invited by Maj. Gen. L. L. Lemnitzer, Lt. Gen. H. R. Bull, and Vice Adm. H. W. Hill. I am as opposed to communism as is Senator McCarthy, but I do not believe we shall ever be in agreement as to the definition of "Communist-front organizations."

Senator McCarthy's references to various alleged "Communist-front organizations" to which he alleges that I belong, or once belonged, is a garbled and inaccurate rehash of accusations made against me by Martin Dies and by the House Committee on Un-American Activities early in 1943 when I was employed by the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission. These accusations were investigated at length by the Kerr committee, a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee. Senator Clinton P. Anderson, of New Mexico, former Secretary of Agriculture, and in 1943 a member of the House of Representatives, was a member of the Kerr committee. In referring recently to the McCarthy charges, he spoke favorably of my testimony (see the Congressional Record, March 27, 1950, p. 4162) and was quoted in the press of March 28, 1950, as saying:

If you were to sit down with Schuman for five or six hours, Joe (McCarthy), and talk to him, you would be convinced of his loyalty and intelligence. I think he's a fine American.

The stenographic transcript of the hearings before the Kerr committee was not published (except for those portions relating to three other individuals) but is, I presume, available in the files of the House Appropriations Committee, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session. In its first printed report of April 21, 1943, the Kerr committee asserted that in my case it had found no evidence of disloyalty or unfitness to hold Federal office.

My own evaluation of the motives and morals of Senator McCarthy need not here be set forth, since it is identical with the judgments already publicly expressed by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Mr. John Penrifoy, Dr. Philip Jessup, Judge Dorothy Kenyon, and Professor Owen Lattimore. I have no information which is relevant to the current inquiry into alleged disloyalty in the Department of State and the Foreign Service.

With gratitude for your fairness and courtesy (and that of the committee) which seem to me to be in the best American tradition, I am, Sir,

Very truly yours,

FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN,
Woodrow Wilson Professor of Government, Williams College.

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 15, 1950.

MR. EDWARD P. MORGAN,
Chief Counsel,

Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Investigating the State Department.

MY DEAR MR. MORGAN: Last Monday I received your letter dated May 4 but I have been and still am unable to reply thereto because of the absence from his office of my attorney, Mr. Clifford J. Durr, with whom I wish to consult by mail.

I wish now only to assure you that I appreciate the opportunity offered me by the subcommittee to reply to the charges made against me by Senator McCarthy, and that I shall communicate with you later after I have been able to get in touch with Mr. Durr.

Very truly yours,

MARY JANE KEENEY.

The subcommittee has never received any additional information from Mrs. Mary Jane Keeney.

The following letters were received by the Foreign Relations Subcommittee from Mr. Louis F. Budenz.

CRESTWOOD, TUCKAHOE, N. Y., May 3, 1950.

MR. EDWARD P. MORGAN,
*Counsel, Senate Subcommittee Investigating State Department,
Senate Committee on Foreign Relations,
U. S. Capitol, Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MORGAN: In connection with your investigation of the Amerasia case, it may be of value to your committee to know that according to my direct knowledge, Robert William Weiner, alias for Welwel Warzover, was involved at least in supervising the financial arrangements for the defense in that case.

When I state that this arises from my direct knowledge, I mean to indicate that I heard statements to that effect from Mr. Weiner and others on the Ninth Floor of the Communist Party headquarters during the discussions of the Amerasia case.

Mr. Weiner, as you may know, is an illegal alien, who has been for years in charge of the conspiratorial funds of the Communist Party.

Very truly yours,

LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ.

CRESTWOOD, TUCKAHOE, N. Y., May 5, 1950.

Mr. EDWARD P. MORGAN,
*Counsel, Subcommittee Investigating the State Department,
 Senate Foreign Relations Committee, United States Capitol,
 Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MORGAN: The involvement of Robert William Weiner, whose real name is Welwel Warzover, in the "arrangement" of the Amerasia case, as it came to my official attention when editor of the Daily Worker, was as follows:

As I testified in the open hearing connected with the charges against Owen J. Lattimore, there was a number of hurried but official conferences of subcommittees of the Politburo on the Amerasia affair during a number of weeks after the arrests occurred. I was called into several of these conferences, in order that I would be informed as editor of the Daily Worker as to the trend of these official discussions and decisions.

Later on, if the committee so desires, I shall be willing and ready to testify to each one of these conferences in which I participated. In one of them, specifically, Robert William Weiner was in the process of reporting on the financial aspects of the case and its "arrangement" when I entered the conference, which was held in Jack Stachel's room on the Ninth Floor of Communist Party headquarters. I had been called there by Stachel.

Weiner then said that he had and was assuming direction of the financial arrangements for the defense in this case and also the "specific financial arrangements for the settlement of the case satisfactorily."

It was the latter statement which struck me then and remained in my memory. Every financial transaction of any size had to be supervised by Weiner, if connected with the Communist Party activities. In that connection, I had known that he had paid certain ex-Communists—and one specifically—to refrain from giving information to the Federal Bureau of Investigation and to the Dies committee.

The other reports on the "settlement" of the case at this session expressed satisfaction that arrangements were being made through "Kate Mitchell's Uncle" and other sources, to assure a "settlement" such as the Communist Party desired. One active participant in these discussions was the late Joseph Brodsky, counsel for the Communist Party.

You will recall that I found it impossible to give this and other testimony on the conferences officially held by the Communist leaders on the Amerasia case because the executive session was finally subject to interruption. I was unable, on that account, to go into the matter of the reports on the activities of some of the participants in the affair which may be of importance, and to which I alluded in my open testimony.

For the same reason, I did not get time to introduce three exhibits which I had with me at the time of the executive session. These are being sent under separate cover by registered mail. They have to do with Communist praise or commendation of Owen J. Lattimore's writings and opinions.

The latest of these is taken from the Daily Worker of February 15, 1950. In a review by David Carpenter, whose underground activities have already received some attention, you will note the emphasis that is put on Mr. Lattimore's introductions to the two books reviewed. Those introductions are indeed viewed as more important than the books themselves. For several reasons pleasing to the Communists, you will note, Mr. Lattimore's observation on the Russian conquest of Outer Mongolia is given special consideration.

Another article is taken from Political Affairs, the official theoretical organ of the Communist Party, for November 1946. It is written by Frederick Vanderbilt Field, and you will note on page 995 that he commends Mr. Lattimore as "the well-known liberal writer" and also agrees with Mr. Lattimore's view that the United States had been "a hitch-hiking imperialist" in the Far East.

The third selection is taken from the July 1945, issue of Soviet Russia Today, written by Harriet Moore of the Institute of Pacific Relations and Amerasia. You will note the emphasis put on Mr. Lattimore's tribute to the "democracy" of Soviet Russia. You will also note the warm commendation given his book, Solution in Asia, by Trud, the Soviet publication. This is significant since the alleged supplement to that publication, known as New Times, is actually the Communist International magazine in disguise. It is designed to give directives to Communists throughout the world.

As stated in my wire to you, I shall be able within two weeks from today to submit to the Committee additional data of this character.

Very truly yours,

LOUIS FRANCIS BUDENZ.

The additional material, referred to by Mr. Budenz in his letter of May 5, 1950, has never been received by the subcommittee.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, June 22, 1950.

HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter dated June 15, 1950, in which you request to be advised whether the Federal Bureau of Investigation has interviewed Father James F. Kearney and, in the event the Federal Bureau of Investigation has conducted such an interview, whether any information has been received concerning the sources of Father Kearney's information.

Father Kearney was interviewed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation on January 20, 1950, and he advised that he had no direct knowledge of Lattimore's activities and that the principal source of his information had been Alfred Kohlberg of the American-China Policy Association in New York City, who, according to Father Kearney, had charged that Lattimore screened applicants for positions in the Far Eastern Division of the State Department.

If I can be of further assistance to you in this matter, please do not hesitate to communicate with me.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 26, 1950.

EDWARD P. MORGAN, Esq.,
*Chief Counsel, Subcommittee Investigating the State Department,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MORGAN: This will acknowledge your letter of May 17, 1950, to Mr. Ford transmitting copies of the transcript of testimony of Louis F. Budenz given at the public session of your subcommittee on April 20, 1950, and in executive session on April 25, 1950.

The testimony of Mr. Budenz before your subcommittee has been compared in the Criminal Division with the reports furnished by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of interviews with Mr. Budenz concerning Dr. Owen Lattimore. It appears that the information which Mr. Budenz has furnished to the Federal Bureau of Investigation is substantially similar to the testimony which he gave before your subcommittee.

Your cooperation in making the transcript of Mr. Budenz' testimony available is appreciated.

Respectfully,

JAMES M. MCINERNEY,
*Assistant Attorney General
(For the Attorney General).*

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 3, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: This refers to a telephone conversation between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Fisher in regard to the case of Mr. Haldore Hanson. According to a statement made by Senator McCarthy on June 2, 1950, Mr. Budenz is alleged to have given some testimony to your committee in executive session which, in the opinion of Senator McCarthy, "is to the effect that this man Hanson was an important part of the Communist organization in the United States" (Congressional Record, p. 8113).

For your information, Mr. Hanson was first thoroughly investigated and cleared by the Department, and then received a full field investigation by the FBI under the Loyalty Order. Mr. Hanson was cleared by the Loyalty Security Board of the Department on July 26, 1948, and his case has been post-audited. However, it will be appropriate for the Board to review the case in the light of the recent public hearing and concomitant developments. Therefore, in view of the fact that no such information as referred to by Senator McCarthy was available to the members of the Loyalty Security Board of the Department of State when it previously considered the case of Mr. Hanson, it is highly desirable that the relevant testimony on the part of Mr. Budenz be made available to the Department of State so that it can be determined whether Senator McCarthy's statement had any basis in fact. If it is possible to do this, please inform me so that I can indicate the name of the person qualified to inspect this transcript. Upon receipt of this information the authorities of the Department concerned will take whatever action appears to them to be appropriate.

Sincerely yours,

CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE,
Acting Deputy Under Secretary.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 15, 1950.

Senator MILLARD TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I have been requested by the persons whose signatures appear on the enclosed statement to forward this letter to you with the request that it be made part of the record of your hearings on the case of Mr. Owen Lattimore.

The persons named wish to make it clear to your committee that they have signed the statement in their personal capacities only and not on behalf of the institutions with which they are connected.

In addition to the original signatures, I am enclosing a typed list of the names arranged in alphabetical order. A copy of this list is also being sent to Mr. Lattimore and his legal representatives.

Sincerely yours,

W. L. HOLLAND.

Senator MILLARD TYDINGS
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: We the undersigned individuals are each professionally concerned with teaching scholarly research connected with Asiatic studies in the United States, and Owen Lattimore is known to us as a professional colleague in this field. Among us as individuals there is a diversity of personal opinion concerning American foreign policy, and as individual American specialists we also differ among ourselves in the degree to which we agree with Mr. Lattimore's personal views, but we are each fully convinced of his personal integrity as a scholar and his loyalty as an American citizen, and we deplore and condemn the irresponsible presentation to your committee of unsubstantiated charges against him. Both in our own professional work and in the development of a healthy public opinion on American foreign policy, we deeply believe in the vitality and strength of our democratic tradition of freedom of expression and diversity of opinion. We urge that your committee publicly affirm its belief in these principles, strive to reach a definite view as to Mr. Lattimore's loyalty as an American citizen and make this view widely known to the public.

EDWARD P. MORGAN, Esquire,
Chief Counsel, Subcommittee of Senate Foreign Relations Committee,

DEAR MR. Copies of that correspondence are enclosed for the Committee's files.

It is also requested that Dr. Lattimore supply to the Committee such correspondence as he engaged in in the matter of Dr. Walther Heissig. In response thereto, we are submitting on Dr. Lattimore's behalf the following:

Enclosures.

FEBRUARY 11, 1947.

His Excellency Ambassador N. V. NOVIKOV,
Embassy of the U. S. S. R., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: In view of the fact that there is no exchange of diplomatic representatives between the United States and the Mongolian People's Republic, I am taking the liberty of asking for your assistance in the following matter.

This summer, from June to September, I should like to travel and study in the Mongolian People's Republic, accompanied by my wife and my sixteen-year-old son. I have accordingly written to Marshal Choibalsang, asking if his Government will grant me the necessary permission. I enclose the original letter in English, together with my own rough translation into Mongol. I should be deeply grateful if your Embassy will do me the courtesy of transmitting these letters to the Mongol Ambassador in Moscow, so that they may be forwarded to Ulan Bator Khota.

The time is now somewhat short for arranging a visit to the Mongolian People's Republic for June-September of this year. As in any case I wish to continue my studies this summer, it would be well to have alternative plans in case I cannot go to Mongolia this summer. I therefore venture to add some further details and an alternative plan of travel and study for your consideration.

If I should not receive permission to visit the Mongolian People's Republic this summer, I wish to request from your Embassy a visa to travel, together with my wife and son, either to the Buryat-Mongolian ASSR or the Kazakh SSR. In making the journey, I suggest travelling by ship to Vladivostok, and from there by railway, or by air if it should be possible, in order to shorten the travelling time.

My reasons for my first plan of visiting the Mongolian People's Republic, and for my alternative plan of visiting the Buryat-Mongolian ASSR or the Kazakh SSR are as follows:

For twenty years I have been a student both of the history and of the contemporary problems of the Far East. My wife and I have travelled extensively in Manchuria, in Inner Mongolia, and in Sinkiang, in addition to living for many years in China. I am especially interested in the minority peoples both of China and of the Soviet Union.

I believe that one the one hand the Mongolian People's Republic, as an independent state which is politically and economically of an intermediate character, may have an important part to play in stabilizing normal, peaceful, and mutually profitable relations between neighboring Far Eastern states, although the governments of these states differ widely from each other. On the other hand, I believe that the national minority policies of the Soviet Union may contain many valuable lessons which could be applied, mutatis mutandis, in solving the national minority problems of China and also in working out solutions for similar problems in a number of colonial countries in Asia.

Unfortunately the necessary material, for the use of historians and social scientists, is little known and not sufficiently studied in this country. I should therefore like to contribute to the study and discussion of all these problems on the basis of personal travel and observation.

I believe that my published writings, over a period of twenty years, will show that my methods are scientific and objective; that is, that I study both the historical data of the processes of change, and the contemporary evidence of things as they actually exist, before expressing personal opinions. Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of Solution in Asia, my most recent book (which is written in popular rather than in academically scholarly style) in which I have marked passages referring to the Mongolian People's Republic and to the national minority policies of the Soviet Union.

I have twice visited the Soviet Union. Once was in 1945, when I accompanied Vice President Wallace. The other time was in 1936, when I travelled via Siberia from China to Europe. At that time I was editor of Pacific Affairs, published by the Institute of Pacific Relations. I spent about ten days in Moscow and Leningrad, and had a number of meetings with Soviet specialists on the Far East and Central Asia, arranged for me by Dr. V. E. Motylev, who was at that time the representative of the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and also Director of the Institute of the Great Soviet World Atlas.

Both my wife and I speak Chinese fluently. In addition, I speak and read the Mongol language fairly well, though I am not an advanced scholar in that language. I read Russian fluently, and with a little practice should be able to speak satisfactorily. My son has already begun the study of Russian, and would assist me both as photographer and as secretary.

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy in helping me to send my letter to Marshal Choibalsang.

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

FEBRUARY 11, 1947.

His Excellency Marshal CHOIBALSANG,

Ulan Bator Khota, Mongolian People's Republic.

DEAR MARSHAL CHOIBALSANG: In July 1945 when I was accompanying Vice President Wallace, I had the honor of meeting you in Ulan Bator Khota.

For twenty years I have been studying the history and problems of China, Mongolia, and Central Asia. I have travelled a great deal in Manchuria, Inner Mongolia, and Sinkiang, but have not been in the Mongolian People's Republic except for the two days that I was there in 1945 with Vice President Wallace.

In view of the fact that the Mongolian People's Republic is an important country in Eastern Asia, and in view of the fact that people in America know very little about the Mongolian People's Republic, I should like to spend several months in the Mongolian People's Republic studying its history, political and economic organization, education, and cultural life.

If your Government will grant me permission I should like to spend the months from June to September in the Mongolian People's Republic accompanied by my wife and sixteen-year-old son.

In view of the lack of exchange of diplomatic representatives between our two countries I am sending this letter to you through the courtesy of the Soviet Ambassador in Washington, to be delivered to the Mongol Ambassador in Moscow.

Hoping to receive your permission to visit your country and to have the pleasure of meeting you again,

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

FU-JEN UNIVERSITY,
Peiping, 7th February 1946.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University, North Charles Street, Baltimore, Maryland, U. S. A.

DEAR SIR: I hope you have already returned safely to the United States. On the very day after our pleasant conversation—for which I wish to thank you once more—I plunged into the business of purchasing books and have already been able to accumulate a small number. At the moment, however, the book market offers a rather meager assortment, because booksellers are holding back until the Chinese New Year festivals are over.

On the 22nd of January I mailed you the first two parcels of books through the kindness of a friend. Their contents you will find on the attached book list. Meantime I have got together, partly through purchases and partly from duplicates in my possession, a complete series of publications appearing in Kailu (given out under the direction of Bökekesik). These I shall dispatch within the next few days. I was also able to lay hands on an extremely rare Kōke sudur edition of thirteen volumes, with 1985 pages. Since these Kailu publications, collectively and individually, were printed in very small editions, they are very scarce and their prices accordingly high. At the next mailing opportunity I shall also send you a set of the Mongolian monthly periodical, Kōketuy (Blue Banner), which was published in Manchuria, as well as a few political propaganda magazines from Inner Mongolia.

The purchase and supply of Mongolian prints from Inner Mongolia is complicated and very slow, since this region is still occupied by the Communists and it will be some weeks before direct contact can be made. However, even then it will be difficult to procure successive series of all Mongolian publications, since the Kalgan Press has been dissolved and many books burned.

I have also obtained a big number of new Japanese publications for you and have already included a few small ones in the first two parcels.

I would greatly appreciate it if you could send me some money as soon as possible, since I am now hardly able to cope with the continually increasing book prices with my own small capital. I have made inquiries here and have been given to understand that you can send me any amount of U. S. currency by means of traveller cheques. Please do not send any money through the bank, because then I shall only receive for one American dollar C. N. C. $500.— instead of the official Peking exchange rate of approximately 1300.—.

It would also be of great advantage if you were to confirm, by letter, the fact that you have commissioned me to purchase books for the Johns Hopkins University on this and that scientific field in the Mongolian, Chinese, and Japanese languages. Such a confirmation would not only minimize difficulties when purchasing bigger amounts of books from Japanese, but would also facilitate mailing them and would, likewise, have a certain helpful significance for me.

Many years ago you began the printing of bibliographies in Pacific Affairs with the "Personal Chronicle of the First Manchu Emperor" by Fuchs. May I now contribute thereto with a "Bibliography of Mongolian Publications in Japanese Occupied Areas from 1939-1945," which is on the verge of completion and will be sent you in the near future. It not only contains dry titles, but also brief, historical introductions to every section.

Of those books already sent you, I would like to recommend to your special attention the last chapter in Mongʻol un nʻsaryatan kiged teike sudur about the autonomic development of Inner and Outer Mongolia, because therein the Japanese viewpoints are clearly recognizable. Also of interest is the Japanese propaganda magazine, "Tabin on-u qoyinaki mongʻol ayimagtan" (The Mongol Tribes after Fifty Years), wherein valuable material for a history on Japanese politics in Mongolia and their plans is contained.

Once again my very best thanks for the interesting conversation in the Hotel de Wagon Lits. Please acknowledge receipt of the first two parcels of books.

In the hope of hearing from you shortly, I remain, dear Sir,

Yours respectfully,

W. HEISSIG.

DR. WALTHER HEISSIG,

Fu-čen University, Peiping, China.

DEAR DR. HEISSIG: Your letter of 7 February and the first shipment of Mongol books have safely arrived. I have already sent an acknowledgement to Lt. Walton, but did not enclose a letter to you because I was not sure whether he would still be in China or might already have returned to this country. I am now writing to tell you how much I appreciate your energy and promptness in sending me such interesting material immediately. I am arranging to send you U. S. $200 through Col. William Mayer, who is an officer on the Headquarters Staff of General Wedemeyer in Shanghai * * * I am not quite sure when this will reach you. I understand that the air mail is now subject to many delays, owing to shortage of crews to fly the planes, and therefore am sure that it is better to wait until I hear of someone who is actually going to Shanghai. I am also suggesting to Colonel Mayer that he make inquiries to see whether a request can properly be made that you not be deported from China. * * *

In addition to the initial sum of $200 which I am sending I shall of course be prepared to send further funds for book purchases as soon as you let me know the amount you need. The first shipment is excellent in character and shows that you fully understood the range of my interests. I am just as much interested in material of a propaganda character as I am in historical and literary material, since one of my purposes is to attempt to reconstruct as far as possible the Japanese propaganda and political approach toward the Mongols. I am also interested in any statistical and factual material on population, economics, trade, etc.

I enclose herewith a letter certifying that you are empowered to act as my agent for purchases of books and manuscripts.

With regard to bibliographical articles in Pacific Affairs I shall be glad to recommend your "Bibliography of Mongolian Publications in Japanese Occupied Areas 1939-1945" to the present editor of Pacific Affairs. I myself have had no connection with Pacific Affairs since 1941, but of course I am still closely in touch with the Institute of Pacific Relations and I think I can assure you that the present editor will be interested in your material.

Please give my respects to Dr. Fuhs.

Thank you again most cordially for your promptness and energy.

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATIMORE.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that Dr. Walther Heissig is fully empowered to act as my agent in the purchase of Chinese, Japanese, Mongol, Manchu, and other books and manuscripts.

12 FANG CHIA HUTUNG,
AN TING MEN NEI,
Peiping, June 6, 1946.

DEAR PROFESSOR LATTIMORE: May we ask for your assistance in an urgent matter which concerns all scholars of the Far East. Dr. Walter Fuchs and Dr. Walther Heissig have been ordered deported to Germany and will be interned on June 10, prior to their departure. Local foreign and Chinese scholars are doing everything in their power to have their deportation at least delayed. But after careful investigation we have found that the final decision will in some curious way rest with our State Department.

Both Dr. Fuchs and Dr. Heissig have been appointed to professorships at Yenching University: Dr. Fuchs, Professor of Manchu and Dr. Heissig, Professor of Mongol. President Leighton Stuart has personally appealed to the Chinese authorities to retain both men here.

We have been authoritatively informed that the future careers of these men and their continued usefulness for Far Eastern studies depend upon the opinion which American scholars express to the State Department. We have cabled Dr. William Hung, who is at present at Harvard, and we hope he has already communicated with you. Dr. Hung is fully acquainted with the local situation, and before leaving China in the spring did all he could to help these men. Dr. Stuart's support of them should be ample proof that they in every way deserve the support of American scholars.

We hope that you will intercede immediately with the State Department to forestall this deportation which would deprive us of two outstanding experts. Their inclusion in the deportation list can be based only on oversight or faulty information. It is up to us, their American colleagues, to correct that mistake before it is too late. We have good reason to believe that the State Department will attach great weight to your opinion in this matter, owing to the Department's increased interest in the development of Far Eastern studies.

We are writing on this matter to Professors Goodrich, Lessing, Hummel and Gardner. If you know of other scholars willing to appeal to the State Department in this matter, we should be very grateful to you for sending this information to them.

Yours truly,

ARTHUR F. WRIGHT,
MARY CLABAUGH WRIGHT.

HARVARD—YENCHING INSTITUTE,
Cambridge, Mass., June 19, 1946.

Professor OWEN LATTIMORE,

Walter Hines Page School, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR PROFESSOR LATTIMORE: I arrived in Cambridge about two weeks ago and shortly after my arrival I received a cablegram from Mr. Arthur F. Wright in Peiping. It was stated that Dr. Walter Fuchs and Dr. Walter Heissig were in danger of immediate deportation from Peiping to Germany. It was suggested that American scholars interested in Far Eastern studies be mobilized to intercede with the American Department of State on the behalf of these two scholars.

Dr. C. S. Gardner, to whom I have shown the cablegram, expresses his kind interest in the matter and has already written to the Secretary of State and will probably communicate with you as well as other American scholars interested in Chinese studies.

I have now received a letter from Mr. Wright dated June sixth, in which he gives more detail about the matter. It seems that Dr. Fuchs and Dr. Heissig were to be interned on June tenth, to be shipped to Tangu and then to Shanghai, until they were to leave China. Chinese and foreign scholars in Peiping have been doing everything in their power to have their deportation at least delayed, "But after investigation," says Mr. Wright, "We have found that the final decision will in some curious way rest with our State Department."

When I was in Peiping I had already heard rumors about the possible internment of Drs. Fuchs and Heissig. I tried to get some of the Chinese authorities interested in these two scholars and I thought they would be safe from then on. The new turn of events is indeed a surprise to me.

I may state that to the best of my knowledge these two scholars had more or less nominal connections with the Nazi Party, but their interests and activities during the period they have been in China were confined only to scholarly pursuits. Dr. Fuchs is a German sinologist especially gifted in Manchu literature. Dr. Heissig is an Austrian Mongolist. He is probably not as well known as Dr. Fuchs. His recent papers are mostly published in Monumenta Serica. According to Mr. Wright's letter, Dr. Heissig's long book on the Genkhis Khan Epic appeared on the fourth of June. Of course, I have not seen the book.

Mr. Wright is a Fellow of the Harvard-Yenching Institute. He and his wife were both interned by the Japanese in Weihsien. They were not released until after the Japanese had surrendered.

Dr. Gardner is of the opinion that it would be perhaps better not to have an organized petition to the State Department. It would be better for each scholar interested in the question to write individually to the State Department. I am inclined to agree with Dr. Gardner, and it is my hope that you may do something to help.

With kindest regards,

Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM HUNG.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,

Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I enclose a letter I wrote to Mr. Vincent which I hope is self-explanatory. I wonder whether you would join the group of American scholars who are trying to stave off the worst from these two men. I learned today that the repatriation has been postponed for some time so it would not be too late to take action on their behalf.

I understand that you have inquired after Dr. Heissig. All I know about him is contained in the enclosed letter. If you wish to have a list of his publications I can supply it. Today I received a volume of several hundred pages published by him (it is just off the press), entitled "Bolus Erike." It is a Mongolian chronicle of the 18th century. I am preparing a review of it for the JAOS. Professor Boodberg authorizes me to state that he shares my views regarding the scholarship of both Dr. Fuchs and Dr. Heissig.

I hope that you, Mrs. Lattimore and David are enjoying the best of health. It would be pleasant to have some news of you.

I am scheduled to give a series of lectures for the Lowell Institute in the last half of October and the first two weeks in November. Following the lectures I plan to go to China on the first ship sailing after November 15th. I will stay in China until August or September of 1947 at which time I shall resume my duties at this University. I am looking forward to the trip to China and hope that the political situation will not interfere with my work there.

With kindest regards to you and all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

F. D. LESSING.

Mr. JOHN CARTER VINCENT,

*Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, State Department,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. VINCENT: My colleague, Dr. Woodbridge Bingham, has permitted me to use his name in introducing myself to you.

I have just received a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Wright, dated Peiping, June 6, to the effect that two scholars, Dr. Walter Fuchs, a German, and Dr. Walther Heissig, an Austrian, residents of Peiping, China, are going to be repatriated within a few days. I am anxious to join the group of American and English scholars who have appealed or will appeal to the State Department on behalf of these two men.

I have known Dr. Fuchs for twenty-two years and I have not the slightest doubt as to his scholarly and personal qualifications. I met him first in 1924 when he was an assistant in the Far Eastern Department of the Museum für Völkerkunde in Berlin, where he had a very fine record. Since that time I have followed his scholarly development with growing respect. I have read his many contributions in the field of Sino-Manchu studies and I share the admiration of my American colleagues who have had an opportunity to use these works. Among these persons I wish to cite Professor Knight Biggerstaff, of Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, whose sound judgment can be relied upon.

My personal relations with Dr. Fuchs have been merely sporadic, but I have always regretted that a closer contact was not possible. As to his political activities I cannot make a statement based on personal observation, but I have indirect evidence which leads me to believe that he has never harbored pro-Nazi views. I base this opinion also on my acquaintance with his family. I have reason to believe that his antecedents would have prevented him from siding with the enemy.

I do not know Dr. Heissig personally, but I have received several letters and reprints of his articles from him since December of last year. The letters furnish me with a clear picture of his scholarly achievements and projects so far, and the reprints give me a clear insight into his methods. I am impressed with the soundness and erudition as demonstrated by his writings, and I am sure that we can expect from him many important contributions in a much neglected field. He is about thirty-five years old now. People who know him speak very highly about his moral character and personality.

To send these people back to what was formerly Germany and Austria would be tantamount to wrecking their scholarly careers and depriving American and international scholarship of the results of a highly specialized but very important work in a field in which they are generally recognized authorities. I understand that very few, if any, collections of Oriental books and manuscripts are left in Central Europe for the pursuance of research, and it is imperative for the continuance of their research that they have access to original sources.

I wonder whether it would not be better to secure, in some form or other, their cooperation in the development of Oriental studies in this country, or in an American institution in the Orient. I feel that the problems of the postwar period especially in Orientology are so pressing and the scarcity of experienced workers is so great that no honest, well-trained worker can be spared, and we just cannot afford to waste the life work of anyone qualified and ready to work with us. The very fact that judicious Dr. Leighton Stuart has singled out these two men and appointed them professors at Yenching University should vouchsafe for their reliability and capability.

I trust that it will be possible for you to take immediate action on behalf of these two men.

Very sincerely yours,

FERDINAND D. LESSING,
Agassiz Professor of Oriental Languages.

Mr. JOHN KULLGREN

2800 Woodley Road, N. W., Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN: We are on our way through to Nova Scotia, and yesterday in Bangor we picked up a batch of mail, in which was your letter, mentioning

Torgny's MS and also Heissig and Fuchs. I was very much relieved to hear the Obergers had got the money I sent them, and I hope I shall be able to find a publisher for the MS, though on a thing like that you never know. I very much appreciate your taking the trouble to bring the MS.

You must have had a fascinatingly interesting time, staying in Peiping as much as three weeks. I was there only three days, and wasn't nearly satisfied!

About Heissig and Fuchs, I'll write to the State Department. I don't feel that I can give a carte blanche recommendation for the clearance of men when I don't know yet whether the military have cleared them. However, in the case of Heissig I had already cabled Chu Chia-hua, Minister of Education. The Chinese certainly need scholars in Manchu and Mongol; and if Yenching is willing to offer them jobs, so much the better, as their work will also be available to American scholarship.

We'll be back in Baltimore about August 1.

With regards to both you and your wife,

Very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

MUSQUASH LAKE, MAINE, 21 June 1946.

Mr. JOHN CARTER VINCENT,

Division of Far Eastern Affairs,

Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN CARTER: We are on our way through to Nova Scotia, and in Bangor yesterday a batch of mail caught up with us. In it were letters from John Kullgren, who is, I believe, still a civilian employee of the War Department, and from Arthur F. Wright, writing from 12 Fang Chia Hutung, An Ting men nei, Peiping—both writing about the cases of Walther Fuchs and Walther Heissig, the first a German scholar in Manchu (and in several other languages), and the second a German scholar in Mongol.

Both men have been accused of Nazi intelligence activities in the part of China occupied by the Japanese, where they spent the war years. Fuchs, however, has now been offered a professorship in Manchu at Yenching University, and Heissig a professorship in Mongol. President Leighton Stuart of Yenching has interested himself on behalf of both men.

Fuchs and Heissig are, however, both liable to deportation from China by the Chinese Government. The question is whether American scholars should show an interest on their behalf, and express their interest to the Department of State.

My feeling is that political clearance of these men depends primarily on the opinion of them formed by the Army's investigators in China. Without knowledge of their views, I should certainly not recommend the admittance of either man to America. On the other hand, I can see good reasons why both men should be allowed to stay in China. The Chinese are seriously short of men trained in the Manchu and Mongol languages. If these two men can be employed at Yenching, their work will be accessible to American scholarship also.

Since Leighton Stuart has already interested himself in their behalf, I believe that a favorable expression of interest on the part of the American Embassy would be appropriate.

Regards to Betty. We'll be back about August 1.

Sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Ambassador LEIGHTON STUART,

American Embassy, Nanking, China.

DEAR Mr. AMBASSADOR: A friend has shown me a clipping from a Shanghai paper, already several months old, indicating that at that time Walter Heissig had not yet been either cleared or sentenced as a Nazi. This news was a surprise to me, as I had earlier heard that he had already been repatriated to Austria. Because I believed he was no longer in China, I had taken no further steps to help him; but if he is still in China, and if you should think that he deserves help, I should be glad to do anything further in my power.

My attitude in the matter is that I do not want to do anything to help any man who was a genuine Nazi. I do not, however, believe in persecuting people who merely because they were in a position where they were under the control of Nazis complied enough to "get by." The newspaper clipping which I saw indicated that you were sufficiently convinced of Heissig's good character to offer him a position at Yenchiang.

I am glad to have this opportunity to tell you how much I admire the teamwork between you and General Marshall. I am convinced that we may yet see a coalition Government in China in which "coalition" does not consist of the appointment of powerless men who are only nominally not members of one dominating party, and does consist of the grant of proportionate power as well as proportionate representation to all major political movements and regional interests in China.

Wishing you every success.

Yours very sincerely,

Walter Hines Page School of International Relations,

The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I have your letter and am writing at once to explain that I had made active efforts on behalf of Walter Heissig before coming into my present post. This was based on what I had known of him and had learned from others who knew him better. When, however, the American military authorities demanded his detention for investigation because of information they had, there seemed nothing more that I could do. I understand that the inquiry was as thorough and impartial as would be expected under these circumstances, but I have no inside knowledge as to the evidence against him.

Thanks for your kind words about what General Marshall and I have been attempting. It was no slight compensation in all these difficulties to have the opportunity to know him at close quarters. I wish it were possible to discuss these problems with you and in the light of the latest developments benefit by your opinions.

With warm personal regards,

Very sincerely yours,

LEIGHTON STUART.

STUART LETTER ASKING HEISSIG STAY, IN COURT

(Shanghai, Dec. 30, 1946)

* * * * *

Dr. J. Leighton Stuart's letter to the Chinese repatriation authorities, asking Walter Heissig's exemption from repatriation, was submitted as evidence to the four-man United States military commission trying the Ehrhardt case at the Ward Road Jail yesterday.

Stuart, in his capacity as dean of Yenchiang University, stated in his correspondence dated June 6, 1946, that Heissig had been appointed adviser to the new University library for frontier studies and asked for his exemption.

Defense Counsel Paul Premet also brought out the point that Owen Lattimore, American expert on Far Eastern affairs, had commissioned Heissig as his agent for purchasing available materials on Mongolia.

MUELLER TAKES STAND

Dr. Herbert Mueller, another one of the accused, took the stand yesterday, denying that his office had any connection with Bureau Ehrhardt, and had not engaged in propaganda work between May 8 and August 15, 1945.

The accused further stated that he had no military status, and was not a Nazi party member. He claimed that he did not conduct intelligence work either before or after the German surrender.

After VE-day, Colonel Hidaka, Japanese intelligence officer in Peiping, told Felix Altenburg, a codefendant in this case, that he would convoke newspapermen's meetings, and also mentioned Mueller's name as he was a DNB correspondent, he told the court.

The so-called press conferences, sponsored by Colonel Hidaka, were described by Mueller as a kind of debate club where American magazines and newspapers were provided. During the gatherings, topics discussed were purely academical, the defendant alleged.

AN "OLD CHINA HAND"

The 61-year-old German suspect often ran his fingers over his face and tugged at his moustache. He said he first came to China in 1912, and came back again in 1924 as a correspondent of a German paper, Frankfurter Zeitung, which, he said, was similar to the Christian Science Monitor in the United States.

Mueller became a correspondent of the DNB (Deutsches-Nachrichten-Bureau) since January 1, 1924, when the German news agency first came into existence, he told the Commission, adding that DNB was amalgamated from Wolf-Telegraf and Telegraf-Union.

The accused recounted that he liquidated his agency bureau in Peiping after May 1, 1945. He also said that he had paid off his staff members with 3 months' salary. After the German capitulation, he started a new office, he continued, but the news reports he issued were censored by a bogus Chinese Government office controlled by the Japanese.

Mueller will be examined again today at 8 a. m.

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Mr. FLOYD E. MASTEN,
American Embassy, Rome, Italy.

DEAR MR. MASTEN: Many thanks for your letter of December 27. I am delighted to have this opportunity of thanking you for the Mongolian books which you mailed to me on behalf of Dr. Walter Heissig. I am also glad to know that you are going back to China again. Since you have imperiled yourself by making the offer, I shall almost certainly pester you with requests of one kind or another. After the great difficulty of publishing books and research work during the war in China, a number of good publications are beginning to come out, and I am anxious to get hold of those which deal with Sinkiang, Mongolia, and Manchuria.

I should appreciate it very much if you would write me your frank opinion of Dr. Heissig. He made a very favorable personal impression on me on the one occasion on which I saw him; but it is always possible to be fooled. I have tried to help him as far as I could on the question of being repatriated from China. My feeling is that as a German he was in a position where he had to comply with requests for reports when these were demanded of him. On the other hand, the volume of scholarly work which he produced while in China would indicate that he did not have much time left over for spying. My attitude in such matters is that I see no need for persecuting people whose choice was between martyrdom and stringing along with the Nazis who had control over them. I like to be cautious, however, because I decidedly am not interested in helping to save the skins of people who really believed in the Nazi cause and really worked to make it succeed.

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

DEAR PROFESSOR LATTIMORE: Shortly before I left Peiping last spring, I mailed you some Mongolian books, ones which Dr. Walter Heissig said he had purchased for you. The books were mailed through the APO on April 5. Naturally I'm curious to learn if the same ever reached you. I'm returning to China next Spring (May). If there are some contacts I can make for you, I would be happy to help you.

American Zone, Germany.

DEAR DR. HEISSIG: Your letter of June 9 has reached me safely and I am delighted to be in touch with you again. I am particularly encouraged to know that in spite of all difficulties you are able to some extent to keep up your Mongol studies. I shall of course continue to keep in touch with your case, though I must frankly say that my influence is extremely limited.

I am writing this from the country, where I am working for the summer. Consequently, I do not have most of my Mongol books with me. The Japanese book about Old Stone Monuments in Manchuria may be with some other Japanese books which I lent to a colleague who reads Japanese. I am writing to Baltimore to see if he can identify the book. If so, I shall ask him to have photostats made of the two inscriptions which you need. Otherwise, this may have to wait until I get back to Baltimore at the end of August.

I was out in California 2 weeks ago, and there had a very pleasant visit with Arthur and Mary Wright.

Yours very sincerely,

DR. OWEN LATTIMORE,

Baltimore.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: Thank you so much for your kind letter which I received the other day. I am very thankful that the interest you have shown on my behalf and I sincerely hope that your efforts will prove successful.

I was greatly relieved by your information that you received all books purchased formerly at Peking. That I could not finish my biography of all the Mongol modern publications published during the war makes me feel sorry. But there remained many other things I could not finish. But Lowenthal's information is right: I am able to keep my knowledge intact. I am working in a very limited way during my leisure on the biography of the lamaist missionary Neyici toyin who was in the seventeenth century the great adversary of Shamanism in Eastern Mongolia. I have with me the Peiping xylograph of his Mongol biography and am transcribing and editing it, as well as preparing an English translation. The problems arising from it are fascinating: it is the only Mongol authentic source which tells us about the ways in which the subjugation as well as amalgamation of Shamanism has been done. But as long as I am here nothing final is to be expected.

It might be of some interest to you that Messrs. Roever, Reel and Donovan, Attorn., Boston, Pemberton-House, Pemberton Square, will file or have already filed a habeas corpus writ for the whole case in which I am involved. Besides that it was sent to Judge Sears, International Institute of Buffalo, 610 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo 2, N. Y., Judge of the Appellate Court of the State of New York and a former presiding judge at Nuremberg, an elaborate statement about the particular phase of the Peiping group. I do not know what Judge Sears undertook, as we have no answer. It may interest you to contact Judge Sears and obtain the brief for further information.

In the last paragraph of your letter you proclaimed your willingness to do something for me. My chief aim is to leave my present whereabouts in order to proceed in my research work. The present ratio of nourishment in Germany does not help to remain fit for work, however. I may ask you in the next weeks to help me in obtaining some material concerning the seventeenth century in Mongolia.

Very sincerely yours,

WALTHER HEISSIG.

P. S.—Amongst the books I have purchased for you was also a small booklet in Japanese language about Old Stone Monuments in Manchuria. It deals about two stone inscriptions concerning early Lama missionaries in Mandju, Mongol-Tibet, dated 1638 and 1658. Of the text of these two inscriptions I urgently would need fotostats. Could you kindly arrange that for me?

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I feel ashamed that I trouble you again with a letter within such a short time. Yet I think it necessary to inform you about the present state of my affairs because you showed all the time such friendly interest in my fate.

Developments here in Germany were the following:

(1) Few weeks ago a Reviewing Board under Judge H. Pitchford, of the Judge Advocate Office, Munich, reviewed the Nanking Case by order of the War Department as well as of the Judge Advocate General, Heidelberg. The results of this review were: (a) All prisoners convicted in the Nanking case (amongst them I) are not guilty; (b) did not commit any war crime; (c) would not have committed a war crime even assuming all facts charges with were true.

(2) Result of this review were handed over to JAG Heidelberg, where a Colonel Fleischer is the officer in charge of this case. He promised to deal with this case within the next weeks. Colonel Fleischer informed at March 3d, 49, a spokesman of the Evangelical Churches, that General Clay does not intend to intervene in the form of clemency and that instead of it the outcome of our procedures before the Circuit Court of Washington concerning habeas corpus will be waited for.

Development in U. S. A. were the following now:

(1) Our lawyer, Mr. Frank Reel (Roever, Reel, and Donovan, Boston, Pemberton House), filed an appeal against the denial of habeas corpus with the Washington Court of Appeal. There was already one session, in which the president of the court declared that he was much more bothered about the legal situation uncovered there than he had ever expected to be. Final decision is still pending.

(2) In the cause of this procedure our lawyer had to publish all legal material pertaining the question of jurisdiction, etc. Amongst them were some very peculiar documents from the side of the respondents, i. e., Mr. Royall, Forrestal, etc. From these documents, held until now as restricted or secret material, but uncovered now by the course of legal procedure, the following things could be detracted: (a) the trial at Shanghai was held for purely political reasons. Telegram, April 19, 1946, sent by the China Command to Washington asking permission to start a trial against Germans, has the following passus: "Local political situation makes trial by United States military commission in China strongly advisable" (cf. Respondents Exhibit No. 3).

(b) Upon this telegram granted Washington, War Department, with telegram, July 6, 1946, authority to the United States Forces, China Theater, to try "violations of the laws and customs of war and German soldiers, civilians * * * who are charged with violation of the German surrender terms" (cf. Respondents Exhibit No. 4). Authority was granted to try the Germans "provided the Chinese Government acquiesces."

(c) The Chinese Government acquiesced not earlier than November 26, 1946, to try before an American Military Commission war criminals only who had committed crimes against Americans. At that time I and the other men of the Nanking case were already arrested by the American authorities for several months, served with charges, and the prosecution had at that time already nearly finished their part. When at the beginning of the trial in the early days of October a Chinese defense counsel, Mr. Yang, of Shanghai, asked for dismissal of the accused on the basis that no authorization by the Chinese Government could be shown, the court ruled against him, although at that time existed in reality no such authorization. I, furthermore, have to point out, that Washington had made distinct discrimination between "the violations of the laws and war" and "violation of the German surrender terms," and that the Chinese Government at November 26, '46, acquiesced only to trial of war criminals. Yet we were charged with violation of surrender terms, for which no authorization was given by the Chinese and which constitutes no war crime.

(3) When Mr. Frank Reel, our American lawyer, inquired with the War Department about the finding of the Munich Reviewing Board, he was answered that "although action is being considered, probably in the nature of clemency, as yet no final action had been taken," (letter of Mr. Reel, February 16, 1949). To this Mr. Reel gives the following commentary: "My guess is that the opinion to that effect, that the prisoners did not commit a war crime, even assuming all facts charged were true, may never be published, and that instead clemency will be granted so that the habeas corpus remedy ceases to exist."

In spite of the fact that we legally are already for nearly three years imprisoned innocently and unjustified, nobody seems now willing to take the responsibility for set us free. Public opinion seems to be stronger than justice.

I wrote all this in details to you because I think it is now the time to do something about. Already many Senators and leading people took an interest in this case. It will over a long be impossible to prevent leaking the truth out.

The turning point seems to be that the same person who as Judge Advocate of the China Theater conducted the trial in Shanghai, is today in an responsible position in the War Crimes Section of the War Department. But is it justified that the face of somebody is saved for the price of the fate of 18 men who according to the finding of all law experts are not guilty and no war criminals.

It might interest you, that a professor of the Law School of the University of Chicago, Mr. Ernest W. Puttkammer, working on his own about this case, came to the same opinion as the Reviewing Board at Munich. Now Mr. P. has offered his services, as well as that of some colleagues of him of the University of Chicago, to the Judge Advocate General in Heidelberg for making an expert's opinion about the legal situation.

Thus things from the legal point are clear but nobody wants to take the responsibility—and I am still here and wonder how long that shall continue although it is now black on white that I am not guilty and no war criminal.

The facts I presented to you are no allegations; you can find them printed in the booklets presenting the exhibits for the proceedings before the appellate court. Mr. Reel, of Roever, Reel and Donovan, Boston, Pemberton House, will gladly give you access to this.

I beg you to understand me why I wrote you in such a length. I sincerely hope that there is a way to bring this stagnant situation to a solution. To create a legal scandal is in nobody's interest; there must be a way to solve all this mix up.

I hope you received my letter as well as the paper about Nayici toyin. Please let me know what you think about. Once more, forgive me for stealing so much of your valuable time with this my letter.

Sincerely yours,

WALTHER HEISSIG.

APRIL 14, 1949.

Mr. FRANK REEL,
Roever, Reel, and Donovan,
Pemberton House, Boston, Mass.

DEAR MR. REEL: I have received a letter from Mr. Walther Heissig, of Hindenburg 12 Landsberg (Lech) Germany, informing me that you have been representing him in an appeal against his sentence by a Military Court in Shanghai. I knew Mr. Heissig slightly in China, and have intermittently been in correspondence with him since. Naturally, not having seen any of the official documents, I, of course, know his side of the case only and his protestations that he is innocent.

If you have satisfied yourself that he is innocent, and if you think there is anything I can do to help see that justice is done, please let me know.

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE, Director.

LANDSBERG (LECH), HINDENBURGING 12.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University,
Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: Thank you so much for your kind letter of April 20th. I am very much delighted about the news that you shall bring my Neyici Toyin edition to print. I hope it can be done. As already announced in my previous letter, I shall forward to you the final manuscript (which contains only minor changes) within the next few weeks. I am, of course, well aware of the fact that my notes—i. e., the English of my notes—need to be brushed up. But I hope that will make not too great a difficulty.

I have to thank you too for your quick consent to the translations of your two books by Mr. Albricht and me. Would you kindly let me know soon of the results of your inquiry about the copyright situation, as I should like to convey this to the interested German publishers. I hope that the copyright situation will not make insurmountable difficulties, because I have learned that in many cases of translations of American books the copyright situation made no difficulties at all.

Your consent for having the books translated by Mr. Albricht and me is for us a good asset in further negotiations with the publishers. In case it should be necessary, I perhaps shall have to ask for a more explicit authorization to do the translations, yet I do not think it necessary.

In the meantime I think you will have heard from my attorney, Mr. Reel, about my legal situation. Since my previous letter I have learned that a Senate committee, consisting of the Senators Mr. Richard B. Russell, Estes Kefauver, and with Raymond E. Baldwin as a chairman, is going to investigate the legal situation of the whole China case.

And now I want to beg you for the favour to get a copy of your newest book—Situation in Asia—which was due for (Ea ar).

Once more, thank you very much for all your kindness, and I hope you will let me know soon more about the possibility of having the Neyic Toyin Monogr. published.

Finally I send you my congratulation to the enlivening of Mongol Studies at your University, which doubtlessly is due to your efforts.

I remain, yours very

Sincerely,

WALTHER HEISSIG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 22, 1950.

Mr. EDWARD P. MORGAN,
Chief Counsel, Foreign Relations Subcommittee,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. MORGAN: I understand that some question has been raised as to what part the Department of State has taken in financing three Mongolian scholars at Johns Hopkins University. As stated in Mr. Peurifoy's letter to Senator Tydings of April 17, 1950, the Department has paid $3,200 to Johns Hopkins University pursuant to a contract, a copy of which is attached, entered into with the University under authority of P. L. 724 (79th Congress). No other payments have been made by the Department. As stated in Mr. Peurifoy's letter, it is understood that the Mongols referred to work on this project, and that the Department's $3,200 supplement much larger sums made available by the American Council of Learned Societies and the Carnegie Foundation.

Sincerely yours,

ADRIAN S. FISHER,
The Legal Adviser.

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE
JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

Memorandum of Agreement made as of the 14th day of March 1949, between the United States of America (hereinafter referred to as the Government) acting by the Assistant Secretary of State of the Department of State (hereinafter referred to as the Department) executing this agreement; and the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, acting by the Provost of the University (hereinafter referred to as the University).

WITNESSETH:

WHEREAS the Congress of the United States has vested in the Secretary of State the authority to make grants or furnish such other gratuitous assistance as he may deem necessary or desirable to nonprofit institutions cooperating with the Foreign Service Institute in any of the programs conducted by the Institute to achieve its objectives, to wit: to furnish training and instruction to officers and employees of the Foreign Service and the Department and to other officers and employees of the Government for whom training and instruction in the field of foreign relations is necessary, and to promote and foster programs of study incidental to such training.

WHEREAS the University has been organized and is now operating on a non-profit basis, and is cooperating with the Institute in its language training program.

WHEREAS it has been found that the making of a grant or contribution to the University pursuant to the terms hereof and for the specific purposes of obtaining for the Foreign Service Institute adequate teaching materials in the Mongolian language of such a nature that they can be used both in the Institute and in field posts abroad; permitting the assignment of an employee of the Foreign Service, now detailed to the Institute, to the University to work with native Mongolian speakers and a linguistic scientist to acquire the ability to instruct other Foreign Service personnel in Mongolian; assisting the University to develop the Mongolian language project to the point that it will be able to obtain private grants to carry on the work beyond the present year and thus prolong an activity of continuing value to the Department through the Foreign Service Institute; and furthering the progress of instruction in linguistic science in this country along lines of value to the Institute in its language training programs, is a project of both immediate and future value to the Government and is within the authority granted by the Congress of the United States in Section 703 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946.

Now, therefore, for and in consideration of the premises and of the mutual agreements herein contained, it is mutually understood and agreed that:

ARTICLE I

The Government does hereby make a grant or contribution of three thousand two hundred dollars ($3,200) to the University to be used by said Institution for the purposes hereinabove specified, provided, however, that the Department and the University may agree to the expenditure by the University of the sum made available hereby for related purposes if the University shall in writing demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Department that it would be preferable and advisable to make such expenditure in lieu of the one originally contemplated.

ARTICLE II

Payment of the sum specified above in Article I hereof shall be made to the University immediately following the execution of the contract.

ARTICLE III

The University undertakes to carry out diligently the activities designed to effect the purposes of this agreement, summarized as follows:

1. To maintain and make available at the University two native speakers of Mongolian for a sufficient period of time to enable linguistic scientists to make a descriptive analysis of the Mongolian language and develop teaching materials in spoken Mongolian.
2. To develop and make available to the Foreign Service Institute comprehensive teaching materials in Mongolian, including a descriptive grammar of the Mongolian language and instructional materials in the form of notes, mimeographed text materials and recordings.
3. To furnish to an employee assigned by the Institute full access to facilities involved in the project sufficient to enable said employee to acquire the ability to instruct other personnel in the Mongolian language.
4. To assist the University in developing the project to such a point that private grants may be obtained to continue the work beyond the present year and thus continue to be of value to the Department through the Institute's language training activities.
5. To further the progress of instruction in linguistic science along lines of actual and potential value to the Institute in its language training program.

ARTICLE IV

The activities of the University under this agreement shall be subject to such reasonable supervision by the Department, through the Institute, as the Department may desire to exercise.

ARTICLE V

The University shall make reports to the Department, through the Institute, for administrative purposes at such times and in such detail as the Department may require.

ARTICLE VI

The University shall return to the Government on or before September 30, 1949, any balance of the sum made available hereby to the University unused and unobligated prior to June 30, 1949, and shall also return at the earliest possible date any additional balance which may subsequently be found to be not needed to liquidate outstanding obligations, provided, however, that if the University shall demonstrate in writing to the Department that an extension of time for the expenditure of the sum made available hereby is necessary or desirable, such extension may be granted by the Department and provided further that, to the extent the University is authorized to use the sum made available hereby for administrative purposes, the University may, notwithstanding the terms of this article, retain sufficient funds for administrative expenses to permit it to render a final report and accounting to the Department.

ARTICLE VII

If the Department deems it in the best interests of the Government to terminate this agreement, the Department may terminate it by giving the University sixty days' notice in writing, and if for any reason beyond the control of the University, the University is unable to perform all of the conditions of this agreement, the University may terminate it by giving the Department sixty days' notice in writing. In the event that this agreement is terminated, under this provision, the University shall return to the Government any balance of funds received from the Government which is unused and not obligated under contracts made by the University. It shall also return at the earliest possible date any additional balance which may subsequently be found to be not needed to liquidate outstanding obligations.

ARTICLE VIII

No member of or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner, shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract or to any benefit that may arise therefrom, unless it be made with a corporation for its general benefit.

ARTICLE IX

The Contractor warrants that he has not employed any person to solicit or secure this contract upon any agreement for a commission, percentage, brokerage, or contingent fee. Breach of this warranty shall give the Government the right to annul the agreement, or in its discretion to deduct from the contract price or consideration the amount of such commission, percentage, brokerage, or contingent fees. This warranty shall not apply to commissions payable by contractors upon agreement or sales secured or made through bona fide established commercial or selling agencies maintained by the Contractor for the purpose of securing business.

ARTICLE XI

If any dispute shall arise in the execution of the terms of this agreement, it shall be subject to appeal within thirty days to the Secretary of State or to his duly authorized representative, whose decision thereon shall be final on the parties concerned.

ARTICLE XII

When the nature of this contract is such that it is subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, 49 Stat. 2036 or the Eight Hour Labor Law, 37 Stat., 137 the Contractor agrees to be bound by these laws.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the Government and the University have executed this agreement as of the day and your first above written.

MARCH 1949.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington.

HONORABLE MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter dated June 14, 1950, in which you request that the Subcommittee Investigating the State Department be furnished copies or the contents of certain documents which Senator Joseph R. McCarthy stated on March 30, 1950, on the floor of the Senate that he was turning over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Senator McCarthy referred on page 4437, column 2 of the Congressional Record for March 30, 1950, to a document, the original of which he was turning over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This document is quoted in full except for signature and date in the Congressional Record on page 4437, columns 2 and 3.

Your next reference is another statement which Senator McCarthy indicated may have likewise been turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This reference appears on page 4437. Another statement with regard to same incident appears on page 4440, column 2, paragraph 3. Both these statements are to the same effect, that the two persons making the statements were house guests of the Lattimores during the month of June 1945. They were introduced by Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore to John S. Service, an official of the State Department, and Lt. Andrew Roth and a girl whose name was not remembered. After these two people arrived at the Lattimores' home, Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and their house guests John S. Service and Andrew Roth spent considerable time by themselves discussing what appeared to be a manuscript. One of the house guests making the statement was upstairs in the Lattimore home and upon leaving Mrs. Lattimore's bedroom saw Roth fastening a briefcase at the entrance to the next bedroom. This person was under the impression that she was followed upstairs by Roth. The next day she learned that John S. Service and Andrew Roth were arrested by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The other house guest who made the statement to Senator McCarthy stated that he recalled these facts substantially as set forth except for the episode wherein the other house guest was upstairs in the Lattimore home, at which time she saw Mr. Roth. In addition, the second house guest sometime later learned that Lattimore's explanation of the arrest of Service and Roth was that they had been declassifying documents in favor of their friends and that this was a common Washington practice and they were arrested because of some feud with persons in Washington.

The third reference appearing in your letter is one to a statement on page 4440, column 2 of the Congressional Record. This apparently refers to the letter dated June 15, 1943, from Owen Lattimore to Mr. Joseph Barnes of the OWI. It is my understanding that you have a copy of this letter.

Your next reference is to the affidavit of a former General in the Red Army, which reference appears at page 4445, column 3. This former General in the Red Army is purported to have stated to an investigator for Senator McCarthy that he had a conversation during the middle 1930's with a high official in Soviet Intelligence in which they discussed the difficulty in getting good intelligence information from Mongolia and the Far East. The high official in Soviet Intelligence told the General that they had had excellent success through the Institute of Pacific Relations which Soviet Intelligence, through Communists in the United States, had taken over. In particular the high official mentioned Owen Lattimore and one Joseph Barnes as Soviet men connected with the Institute.

Your next reference is the one appearing on page 4446, column 1 of the Congressional Record in which Senator McCarthy mentions an affidavit of the editor of a Chinese newspaper, the original of which was to be handed to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The pertinent portions of this statement are as follows:

"As a result of early Russian offers to China, i. e., to give back everything the Czar had taken from China, this made a hit with Chinese students. Lattimore was one of the young 'white men' that went along with Chinese students. There were several student uprisings, in which Lattimore was involved. He enjoyed a kind of leadership therein.

"These Mongolian contacts gave him a close contact with Buddhism and with Mongol lamas on the Chinese Russian border. Chinese lamas are notorious homosexual and was the kind of company he seemed naturally to tend to.

"There were always a number of Russians back and forth on the Russo-Chinese border.

"The I. P. R. was started by men who were sincerely interested in China's welfare. I belonged to the organization but left it when it was obviously an organ of Jap. propaganda.

"My first unpleasant contact with Lattimore was in the late '30's when it was obvious the I. P. R. became infiltrated with Communists. L. was among the group that began to turn 'Asia' magazine into first a pro-Jap propaganda sheet. It had been founded by Willard Straight, American Consul General, in Manchuria, in 1912, thereabouts. 'Asia' magazine was carried by son Willard, Jr. & later of 'Amerasia.' Lattimore had written for the old 'Asia,' very much for 'Amerasia.' 'Amerasia' from the start backed the 'Moscow-line.' There was the combination of Willard Straight Jr.'s mother's money, Pearl Buck's editorship & writing ability & Lattimore's political shrewdness. Straight is a confessed 'card carrying' Communist. Vanderbilt Field came in as an angel for 'Amerasia' & I. P. R.

"In this group Lattimore was probably the 'mastermind' that built the group that formulated the pro Chinese-Communist policy that took over, infiltrated, and gradually dominated the far eastern division of the State Department. In this group are included Alger Hiss, Service brothers, Jessup, Lattimore, etc.

* * * * *

"Later on Dec. '41 or Jan. '42 Lattimore arrived in San F. on way to China. I was N. B. C. specialist on Orient. I didn't trust him but inasmuch as he was special envoy to Chiang Kai-shek I invited him to appear on network. I heard of banquet to be given him by I. P. R. The hostess was Anita Whitney a well-known 'big-wig' among San Francisco Communists. I raised question, over phone, of his being entertained by Anita Whitney & other Communists & he became angry & as a result refused to broadcast.

"I understood that Lattimore was sent to China by F. D. R. upon recommendation of Mrs. Roosevelt & Wallace.

"I had a report back from Chinese officials indicating Chiang was displeased & Chiang to dismiss L. smoothly appointed him a Chinese official & sent him to Roosevelt.

"On an occasion when L. came through San F. on way to China, the radio doors was closed to us & given over to the left-wing crowd. Hornbeck was 'kicked upstairs' by being made ambassador to Holland.

"This crowd indoctrinated Stilwell against Chiang. (This story is told by the Alsop's.)

"In the Spring of 1942 I persuaded the N. B. C. to put on the 'Pacific Story.' I chose as producer Arnold Marquis, of Hollywood & the writers Siffield & Warren Lewis. The scripts written from my books. After the first few programs a strange influence caused us to discontinue. A few weeks later the program was reestablished under Owen Lattimore under same producer who carried it on for one to two years with who carried the Chinese Communist line.

"(Dates should be verified.)

"These facts to the best of my memory."

If I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to communicate with me.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

The following material has been inserted in the record at the request of Mrs. Freda Utley:

1717-20 STREET, N. W.,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: My attention has been drawn to certain statements you made about me in the Senate, on page 7056 of the Congressional Record for May 12th. You therein falsely stated:

(1) "That Freda Utley points to the fact that Dr. Lattimore failed to follow the Moscow line as proof that he is a Communist." You further stated that I was "trying to prove * * * that Dr. Lattimore * * * is a Communist because he did not follow the party line."

Evidently you never read my testimony and must have been misled by whoever it was who wrote your speech. If you will look at my testimony I said the exact opposite of what you aver. I prefaced my series of extracts from Lattimore's writings by saying that they showed that he did follow the Communist Party line. Nowhere in my testimony did I ever say, or imply, or in any way indicate, as you asserted, that "Lattimore is a Communist because he did not follow the Party line."

(2) You also asserted that I had "swallowed the Nazi line," asserting as proof that I had referred to "the outbreak of hostilities after the Nazi-Soviet Pact in 1941 as the time when Russia attacked Germany." This again is untrue. I attach herewith a copy of the transcript of my testimony from which you will see that in the pages referring to Lattimore's switch (in conformity with the Communist Party line) following Germany's attack on Russia, I refer no less than five times to "Germany's attack on Russia," or to "Hitler's attack on Russia." The references are underlined in red pencil. In the final reference to this event, at the bottom of page 744 of the official transcript of my testimony, the recorder made what is obviously a typographical error, when he wrote "after Germany attacked Russia." I have already taken steps to correct this error, together with a number of other typographical errors in the transcript, such as the misspelling of Ludden's name and the word "million" instead of "billion" twice on page 760 of my testimony.

Concerning the recorder's error of which you have made use, I cannot conceive that anyone, who was not wilfully trying to misrepresent my views, could have made the assertion in the speech which you gave on the Senate floor. Five references in a few short pages to "Germany's attack on Russia" are sufficient evidence that I did not, as you assert, say that Russia attacked Germany. To anyone not deliberately intent on misrepresenting my views, the sixth reference to Russia's involvement in the war must have appeared as an obvious typing error.

I shall await your apology and your correction of your errors concerning my testimony in the Lattimore's case on both counts. I am in the meantime sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Morgan, the Counsel of the Tydings committee, to Senator Brewster, and to the press.

Yours truly,

FREDA UTLEY.

COPY OF OFFICIAL TRANSCRIPT OF PAGES 742 TO 745 OF FREDA UTLEY'S TESTIMONY BEFORE THE FOREIGN RELATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE, ON MAY 1, 1950.

Page 742: Nor is this the only evidence that Lattimore followed the Party line in denouncing the war in Europe prior to Germany's attack on Russia, as an imperialist struggle in which both sides were equally guilty.

While Lattimore was one of the editors of Amerasia, in 1939 and 1940, following the Stalin-Hitler Pact, it published articles directly echoing the Communist Party Line, for which Mr. Lattimore must assume partial, at least, responsibility.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you know whether or not they published at the same time any articles that showed a contrary point of view?

Mrs. UTLEY. No, I will state that almost categorically, but in the time at my disposal, I have had no time to read every article in Amerasia.

It abused Italy and France and urged America not to be drawn into the European war, while urging that it take action against Japan. Following Germany's attack on Russia, in June 1941, it switched over to the opposite side, like all Communist organs, and urged American participation in the war against Germany.

I have here several pages of extracts from Amerasia and I feel that my testimony will be far too long if I read them all.

Senator TYDINGS. Put them in the record at this time.

I would like to ask a couple of questions.

Does this appear over Mr. Lattimore's signature?

Mrs. UTLEY. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Did they appear over anybody's signature?

Mrs. UTLEY. Yes. The particular articles I have mentioned, one was by William Brandt, entitled "The Embargo Threat—a Diplomatic Maneuver," was published in the March 1940 issue of Amerasia.

Senator TYDINGS. Read the others and identify them.

Mrs. UTLEY. Next is one by Harry Paxton Howard which explained and justified the Stalin-Hitler Pact. I don't want to impose on your time by reading it all.

Senator TYDINGS. Don't read it, but let me ask you another question. During the period to which you refer, evidently you have had some opportunity to read these magazines, is that right?

Mrs. UTLEY. During what period?

Senator TYDINGS. Have they been handed to you, or did you read them yourself, Mrs. Utley?

Mrs. UTLEY. I have been looking them up now, in the last few days.

Senator TYDINGS. Looking them up in the Amerasia Magazine?

Mrs. UTLEY. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. Have you found any articles in there that were published by people other than Mr. Lattimore, that presented any contrary view?

Mrs. UTLEY. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Nothing in the magazine at all except articles of one kind during this period?

Mrs. UTLEY. Yes.

Senator TYDINGS. How many of these articles to which you refer were over the signature, or over the masthead of the editor of the magazine, who, as I understand it, was then Mr. Lattimore, is that correct?

Mrs. UTLEY. Mr. Lattimore was only one. The managing editor was Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Senator TYDINGS. Who was the managing editor?

Mrs. UTLEY. I think that was Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

Senator TYDINGS. How many other editors were there I have not read it.

Mrs. UTLEY. About half a dozen. I cannot recall all their names. One was Lillian Peffer, wife of a professor at Columbia University—

Senator TYDINGS. Why attribute all of that to Mr. Lattimore if he was only one of six, and wasn't the managing editor?

Mrs. UTLEY. Senator Tydings, if you are on the board of a magazine that continually publishes only one view—actually Mr. Lattimore got off the board in 1941, when he took up Government service.

Senator TYDINGS. Why give him the responsibility when you say there were six on the board? Do you know whether or not they approved these articles? Do you know whether or not they disapproved these articles? Do you know whether or not he saw the articles before they were published; because if he was only one of seven editors it would appear to me that in getting up a newspaper or magazine like Amerasia, or the Saturday Evening Post, that some of the articles could be published in there that might not be known to all of the editors on the board, and I am asking as to information—whether or not you can show any connection between this Mr. Lattimore and these particular articles, or do you just surmise it?

Mrs. UTLEY. Senator Tydings, I have already read out an article in Mr. Lattimore's own—

Senator TYDINGS. I am not asking about that.

Mrs. UTLEY. Which says the same kind of things as Amerasia—

Senator TYDINGS. There is only one fact I want to ask you now, whether or not you know that Mr. Lattimore sponsored, directly or indirectly, these articles for publication in Amerasia?

We have had a lot of opinion evidence here. I would like to get a few facts woven into it.

Mrs. UTLEY. The point I am making, Senator Tydings, is that Amerasia echoed almost exactly the same language I read you from Mr. Lattimore's writings.

Secondly, surely, if one is in disagreement with the total line of a magazine, it is the duty of one to get off the editorial board.

Senator TYDINGS. I don't think that always follows, but your observation can stand.

Mrs. UTLEY. I would say that if Mr. Lattimore, in Amerasia, had continued to write along these lines following Hitler's attack on Russia, his views could really be considered honest and consistent. But, once the Soviet Union was at war with Germany, you could find no more articles by Mr. Lattimore, saying that the war in Europe was one between two lots of master races, as he said previous to Germany's attack on Russia.

Senator TYDINGS. Of course, I don't want to take advantage of your opportunity to testify, but let me point out, Mrs. Utley, that even in our Congress, when Britain and France were at war with the Fascists, the Axis, and when Russia was invaded, we had Lend-Lease even before we got into the struggle, to give our money and substance to Russia and all the other countries, so that everybody who then took that particular side of the controversy would not necessarily be a Communist, because a good many of my colleagues in the Senate would be under very serious charges if that were true.

Mrs. UTLEY. May I make very clear, on that point, Senator Tydings, that I personally was against American intervention in the European war, because I considered it would lead to the domination of Stalin. I want to make clear, I want to make a clear distinction, and one which I think the Attorney General made several years ago, and which was to the effect that you could tell a Communist as distinguished from an isolationist, or whatever word you use, non-interventionist, by his attitude before and after Germany attacked Russia. The people who went on consistently opposing American intervention, and kept on saying the usual things about the European war, and people who did not change their line after Germany attacked Russia can be perfectly honest people and are perfectly entitled to that opinion; but, those who switched directly the moment that Russia was involved in the war, the Attorney General said, he thought you could spot them as Communists.

POLITICAL SCIENCE QUARTERLY, DECEMBER 1950. REVIEW OF THE HIGH COST OF VENGEANCE. REVIEW WRITTEN BY GEORGE N. SHUSTER, PRESIDENT OF HUNTER COLLEGE

Freda Utley has scattered pieces of her heart over many a page. She is an economic historian with a warm soul, a passion for social crusades, and a gift for becoming very rational at unexpected moments. Accordingly she has at regular intervals troubled the slumbers of the more progressive sections of our population. Years ago, when communism was the ikon in many an intellectual's bedchamber, she announced that Stalin was not her candidate for the job of universal YMCA director. Today when the same sections are still pretty smug about Germany, she fires some fairly angry cannon at them.

One must discount a part of what Mrs. Utley says. Her motherly soul, having caught a whiff of democracy as meted out to Teutonic survivors of the most recent version of Armageddon, confers virtue on nearly every German and vice on a good many other people. The prostitutes of the fatherland are at least, neat, clean, and feminine. General Taylor, who was given the impossible assignment of wearing undertakers' gloves in Nuremberg with a genuine West Pointer nonchalance, is dubbed a "Communist sympathiser." The French as she sees them are overdone crepe suzette dripping with diluted sauternes. It would be fearfully easy to point out these matronly shortcomings and pass on.

The trouble is that Mrs. Utley is dead right about the important things. She has found out that "democracy" was sold down the river in Germany by a platoon of experts in ideological hocus-pocus, while the American people thought they were financing peace, freedom, brotherly love, and other comparable commodities. She also does a first-rate report on the dismantlement program. It is of course not a systematic study—which would probably be dull as well as premature—but it is a very able and conscientious analysis of typical cases. I suppose that for many Americans dismantlement may have something to do with German fireplaces, for all they care. But when we read that Social Democracy in the Western Zones has just faken a fearful beating at the polls, and go on to wonder whether nationalism may not be rearing its ugly head in Germany again, it will help to let Mrs. Utley tell us that the explanation of what has happened is that the Social Democrat clung to his devoted admiration of the British Labor party way past the point of German endurance. Four years ago the British had an unparalleled opportunity in Germany. They could have held in their hands the power that in all probability might have made Westphalia the cornerstone of a new and pacific West European Federation. But the heirs to the crown of Winston Churchill played for pennies and now have only holes in their pockets. Mrs. Utley's indictment of them (and to be sure, also of the United States) on charges of gross stupidity and bad ethics is complete and devastating. Here are offenses against humanity which no brave new world can live down, and it is high time we had a look at them.

Mrs. Utley also has her say about the Nuremberg trials. These grandiose experiments in how to coat your defeated enemy with justice no longer rate the empty spaces in the educational supplement, and I am not sure that this book makes any very startlingly novel statements. But what it does offer is a pretty effective survey of the way in which German public opinion has responded to the advertising copy which the trials and the denazification proceedings were expected to produce. This survey is not very exhilarating, but I believe that on every topic of real importance it is correct.

There is enough truth in this book to make it worth staying up with. I believe it will be followed by many another in similar character. At any rate, Mrs. Utley has earned her laurels as a pioneer, and the subject with which she deals is of the utmost importance.

GEORGE N. SHUSTER.

THE HIGH COST OF VENGEANCE

(By Freda Utley, Henry Regnery Co. Reviewed by W. L. White)

Freda Utley has written both a very angry book and a very important one. To put her thesis in simple terms, she is very angry because she does not like Nazis, and is therefore horrified to find that the present Allied Occupation of Germany which was supposed to stamp out National Socialism, has nevertheless adopted policies the inevitable result of which has been to convince an increasing number of Germans that maybe after all Hitler was right, and that his only mistake was that he lost the war.

While the study of human behaviour is not yet an exact science, nevertheless its basic principles are beginning to be understood. We know that if certain pressures are put, either on an individual or a nation, its behaviour will then fall into an easily predictable pattern. The frightening memory of the almost incredibly vast Nazi crimes against humanity should be preserved, not as a measure of the vengeance we should take against the German people, but as a measure of the gravity of the mass-schizophrenia which has gripped a once civilized nation, a disease which clearly had its origin in our treatment of that nation after the Treaty of Versailles, and which it is now our task to cure.

It is one which calls not for mawkish "forgiveness" but for cool, scientific understanding; not for a sentimental turning of the other cheek but for self-discipline and detachment, which will enable us to perform the most badly needed job of "social engineering" of our time.

How are we measuring up? Well, Miss Utley, in this badly needed volume of Western democratic self-criticism, points out sadly that—

"the very same people who would insist at home in America that juvenile delinquency and adult crime are the result either of being underprivileged or of an unhappy childhood, and that criminals should be psychoanalyzed and reformed, not starved, reviled, and imprisoned, want to continue punishing the whole German people for their past."

Possibly the most valuable chapter in Miss Utley's book is her first, in which she points out that "the tragedy of modern history is that the Germans have always been kicked around when they were pacifically minded," so that inevitably "the apostles of violence have again won leadership * * * following the failure of the democrats and the anti-militarists to win a fair deal."

But her well-documented chapters on Western Germany today are scarcely less vital. In spite of the fact that production per acre in Germany is already 50 per cent higher than in the United States, Western Germany can never produce according to our E. C. A. experts, more than 50 per cent of the food it needs. And to get the rest Western Germany must export at least two billion dollars worth of manufactured goods annually. Yet we make this impossible by limiting her production of steel, which deprives Europe and the world of vitally needed machinery and construction materials. Instead we expect Germany to produce for export only such things as textiles and ceramics, flooding the world with German toys at a time when it needs German locomotives and steel girders.

* * * * *

After its final Chapter, the American reader puts down Miss Utley's important work of democratic self-criticism with a feeling of regret and shame on two scores. The first is that we seem now to be abandoning our original "goat-pasture" policy not so much because we are ashamed of it, as we should be, but because we see that stone-age vengeance is a spiritual luxury whose cost in dollars is too great even for a nation so rich as ours. Secondly we seem, at last, we seem to be seriously tackling the job of reconstructing a truly democratic Germany largely from the somewhat sordid motive that, if we fail at our task of "social engineering" the Soviet Union certainly will succeed with their competitive brand.

Of course the sum of all Allied mistakes in Germany cannot for an instant be compared to the coldly calculated Nazi crimes against humanity during the war. The difference is however that our cruel stupidities are not being perpetrated in the name of our peoples by a dictatorship. They are the acts of free and democratic governments, for which every citizen is directly responsible. So we can never say—as did the Germans in 1945 and with some reason—"We did not know," or "This was not our doing."

CANDED SHOTS—EX-COMMUNIST UNDAUNTED IN FIGHT FOR UNFASHIONABLE CAUSE

(Paul Jones in Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, April 7, 1950)

The last time Freda Utley was in Philadelphia, we sat next to her at dinner. The occasion was a meeting of the local branch of the Centralverein, before whose members she gave an address later in opposition to the dismantling policy in Germany. The Centralverein is a liberal organization of German-American origins, now a century old. Its ancient hail near 5th and Gerard, is hung with pictures of Bishop von Kettler and other worthies whose views on social reform we recognize best in the Revolution of 1848. Since that glorious failure determined a great deal of the early German immigration to the United States, it stands for something very solid and real in their tradition.

Miss Utley, whose name came up recently in connection with the Senate investigation of the charges against State Department personnel, had just returned from occupied Germany, after a visit which made another of her interesting books.

For some reason, talented women are able to give a much better first-hand picture of what a place is like and what it feels to live in it than their masculine opposite numbers. * * * In the same way, when we told Freda Utley that we had read the story of her life in Russia and she asked us what we thought of it, we said at once: "The best thing since Emma Goldman." It is fact that "Lost Illusion" is far and away the most interesting book by an ex-Communist we have seen. This is because Freda was neither a tourist nor a wide-eyed innocent. She had a good job in the Soviet bureaucracy; she had married a Soviet citizen, who was later spirited away by the secret police, never to be heard of again; she had a baby to care for, and a house to keep. She was not, therefore, free to wrap herself in clouds of heavy thought, to the exclusion of common sense.

We suppose that the mechanics of food distribution, or the wonders of Soviet housing, look a little different to the woman who has to cope with these things. The café theorist can comfort himself with propaganda pictures and with the reflection that everything will be straightened out by 2250 A. D. His wife has to stand in line or take her chances in the maternity ward of 1950.

Miss Utley is a handsome woman with almost limitless energy marked by a dauntless determination not to be downed. In spite of a life more than usually unlucky, we could see no sign that she was ready to give in on any point that engaged her integrity.

We say she was unlucky, because she was an active and open Communist long before it was fashionable to be even pink. At just about the time when she threw over the philosophy of Lenin, the Soviets began to be accepted, under the Popular Front idea, as really splendid chaps. Her forthright views about her erstwhile associates and the things she said and wrote about her experiences in Russia and China were not calculated to make her a popular writer.

Now that the tide has turned, as far as Russia is concerned, she is wrapped up in another minority crusade, the effort to show that a revengeful peace policy can only defeat its own ends. "The High Cost of Vengeance," a basically sound book, founded upon personal observations among Germans, rather than on bull sessions at the Press Club, has got her in wrong again, though not with the thoughtful reader.

However we must say that she seems to thrive on adversity, and when last we saw her, was as stout-hearted as ever in defense of what she believes to be right.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman of the Subcommittee,
United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations,
Subcommittee Appointed Under Senate Resolution 231,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: You may recall that during the course of Mr. Service's testimony before your Committee in public session, he made reference to the fact that the possibility of American landings on the coast of China was a subject of widespread interest and discussion in the spring of 1945. In that connection, as an example of general public interest in and discussion of this possibility, he referred (Transcript of Proceedings, June 22, 1950, p. 2086) to a press conference at which Admiral Nimitz was reported to have mentioned the possibility of such landings. In order to complete your record on this particular point, I should like to refer you to the publication in which Admiral Nimitz was so quoted, with the request that you include this letter in the record of the Committee's proceedings.

This press conference was referred to in the magazine The China Monthly for April 1945, at p. 25, and the account of Admiral Nimitz' press conference is as follows:

"ADMIRAL NIMITZ SUGGESTS LANDING ON CHINA COAST

"Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, who recently came to Washington for important strategy conferences, intimated on March 8, 1945, that a China coast landing may precede the invasion of Japan proper. In a press conference he said:

"I believe that we should plan the war against Japan in such a manner that our chances of success are greatest and our casualties least. In planning the final assault on the empire, we will need more than one position from which to attack. We will need a number of positions. It well may be that some of these positions will be in China."

Respectfully yours,

C. E. RHETTS.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman of the Subcommittee,
United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations,
Subcommittee Appointed Under Senate Resolution 231,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: You will recall that during the course of the hearing in executive session before your Subcommittee yesterday, June 26, Senator McMahon requested, and you directed, Mr. Service to supply to the Committee for inclusion in the record of the Committee's proceedings, certain excerpts from published materials reflecting General Hurley's views (1) as to the desirability of effecting a unification of the forces of the Chinese Central Government with those of the Chinese Communist party, and (2) as to whether he personally agreed with the views expressed to him by Marshal Stalin and Molotov that the Chinese Communists are not really Communists and that the Soviet Union was not interested in the Chinese Communists.

I enclose herewith material bearing on the questions, consisting of certain extracts from the so-called China White Paper, extracts from the transcript of the minutes of a press and radio news conference held by General Hurley on April 2, 1945, and certain excerpts from the transcript of testimony taken before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on December 5, 6, 7, and 10, 1945.

Respectfully yours,

C. E. RHETTS.

The following are extracts from United States Relations With China, published as Department of State Publication 3573, Far Eastern Series 30, Released August, 1949 (pp. 563-564):

Secretary Hull to the Ambassador in China (Gauss)

S93.00/8-3144

WASHINGTON, SEPTEMBER 9, 1944.

1. Careful consideration has been accorded to your messages by the President and by me, and we are in agreement with you that at the present time, a frank, friendly, and positive approach should be made to Chiang Kai Shek on the matters of governmental and related military conditions in China.

* * * * *

4. Further, we note with approval that you utilized the opportunity afforded by conversation with Chiang to mention your idea of a coalition council as described by you. Please tell Chiang that the President and I feel your suggestion is timely as well as practical, and worthy of careful consideration; that we are concerned not alone with reference to nonsettlement with the Chinese Communists but also with regard to reports of dissidence and dissatisfaction among non-Communist Chinese in other areas of the country; that we are not concerned with Chinese Communists or other dissident elements as such, but are anxious, on behalf of the United Nations and on our own behalf, and also on behalf of China, that, under the leadership of a strong but tolerant and representative government, the people of China develop and use the spiritual and physical resources at their command to carry on the war and to establish a lasting democratic peace, and to achieve this, factional differences can, and should be, settled and merged by intelligent cooperation and conciliation. It is our belief that a most effective means to achieve this end would be a council or some body which represents all influential elements in China, with full powers, under the leadership of Chiang Kai Shek. However, we recognize that Chiang may have in mind some means of achieving the same result which would be equally or more effective.

Further, you may make use as you wish of such portions of the cogent arguments expressed in your telegrams, as coming from us, and also the views which were well expressed by Acheson on August ninth in his conversation with Sun Fo.

Kindly inform General Hurley, General Stilwell, and Mr. Nelson with regard to the matter. You are authorized to invite one or more of them to go with you to call upon Chiang if you feel that it would serve a useful purpose.

HULL.

II. THE EFFORT AT MEDIATION

Initial steps

Upon arriving at Chungking in September, General Hurley came to the conclusion that the success of his mission to unify all the military forces in China for the purpose of defeating Japan was dependent on the negotiations already under way for the unification of Chinese military forces. Accordingly, shortly after his arrival he undertook active measures of mediation between the Chinese National Government and the Chinese Communist Party.

In December 1944 General Hurley commented as follows regarding his early efforts at reconciliation:

"At the time I came here Chiang Kai-shek believed that the Communist party in China was an instrument of the Soviet Government in Russia. He is now convinced that the Russian Government does not recognize the Chinese Communist Party as Communist at all and that (1) Russia is not supporting the Communist Party in China, (2) Russia does not want dissensions or civil war in China, and (3) Russia desires more harmonious relations with China.

"These facts have gone far toward convincing Chiang Kai-shek that the Communist Party in China is not an agent of the Soviet Government. He now feels that he can reach a settlement with the Communist Party as a Chinese political party without foreign entanglements. When I first arrived, it was thought that civil war after the close of the present war or perhaps before that time was inevitable. Chiang Kai-shek is now convinced that by agreement with the Communist Party of China he can (1) unite the military forces of China against Japan, and (2) avoid civil strife in China."

With respect to specific steps taken by him, General Hurley reported in December 1944 that with the consent, advice and direction of the Generalissimo and members of his Cabinet and on the invitation of leaders of the Communist Party, he had begun discussions with the Communist Party and Communist military leaders for the purpose of effecting an agreement to regroup, coordinate and unite the military forces of China for the defeat of Japan. He continued: "The defeat of Japan is, of course, the primary objective, but we should all understand that if an agreement is not reached between the two great military establishments of China, civil war will in all probability ensue."

The five-point draft agreement, November 10, 1944

Following discussions with Chinese Government and Chinese Communist representatives in Chungking, General Hurley on November 7, 1944, flew to Yen-an for a two-day conference with Mao Tse-tung, the Chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the Chinese Communist Party. The Communist leaders were impressed by the fact that General Hurley had taken the initiative in making this flight and cordial relations were established at once. As a result of these discussions there was evolved at Yen-an a five-point draft, entitled "Agreement Between the National Government of China, the Kuomintang of China and the Communist Party of China," which was signed by Mao Tse-tung as Chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the Chinese Communist Party * * * and by General Hurley as a witness. This important agreement read as follows:

"(1) The Government of China, the Kuomintang of China and the Communist Party of China will work together for the unification of all military forces in China for the immediate defeat of Japan and the reconstruction of China.

"(2) The present National Government is to be reorganized into a coalition National Government embracing representatives of all anti-Japanese parties and nonpartisan political bodies. A new democratic policy providing for reform in military, political, economic and cultural affairs shall be promulgated and made effective. At the same time the National Military Council is to be reorganized into the United National Military Council consisting of representatives of all anti-Japanese armies.

"(3) The coalition National Government will support the principles of Sun Yat-sen for the establishment in China of a government of the people, for the people and by the people. The coalition National Government will pursue policies designed to promote progress and democracy and to establish justice, freedom of conscience, freedom of press, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and association, the right to petition the government for the redress of grievances, the right of writ of habeas corpus and the right of residence. The coalition National Government will also pursue policies intended to make effective the two rights defined as freedom from fear and freedom from want.

"(4) All anti-Japanese forces will observe and carry out the orders of the coalition National Government and its United National Military Council and will be recognized by the Government and the Military Council. The supplies acquired from foreign powers will be equitably distributed.

"(5) The coalition National Government of China recognizes the legality of the Kuomintang of China, the Chinese Communist Party and all anti-Japanese parties."

The three-point plan

General Hurley felt that this Five-Point Draft Agreement, which he promptly submitted to the National Government, offered a practical plan for settlement with the Communists. National Government leaders, however, said that the Communist plan was not acceptable (pp. 73-75).

* * * * *

General Hurley reported that he was conferring daily with the Generalissimo and members of his cabinet "endeavoring to liberalize the counterproposal. We are having some success. The Generalissimo states that he is anxious that the military forces of the Communist Party in China and those of the National Government be united to drive the invaders from China. The Communist leaders declare this is also their objective. I have persuaded Chiang that in order to unite the military forces in China and prevent civil conflict it will be necessary for him and the Kuomintang and the National Government to make liberal political concessions to the Communist Party and to give them adequate representation in the National Government" (p. 76).

* * * * *

Mr. Harriman feared that Ambassador Hurley might give Chiang Kai-shek an "overoptimistic account of his conversations with Stalin" and he thought it might be advisable to suggest to General Hurley that he should be careful "not to arouse unfounded expectations." On April 23 Secretary Stettinius instructed Ambassador Hurley as follows:

"I attach great importance to Marshal Stalin's endorsement at the present time of our program for furthering the political and military unity of China under Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. However, at the same time I feel, as I have no doubt you do also, the necessity of facing the probability that Marshal Stalin's offer is given in direct relation to circumstances that are existing now and that may not long continue. The U. S. S. R. is at present preoccupied in Europe and the basis for her position in Asia following the war is not yet affected by the Communist-Kuomintang issue to an appreciable degree. In view of these circumstances I can well appreciate the logic of Marshal Stalin's readiness to defer to our leadership and to support American efforts directed toward military and political unification which could scarcely fail to be acceptable to the U. S. S. R. * * * Consequently I believe that it is of the utmost importance that when informing Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek of the statements made by Marshal Stalin you take special pains to convey to him the general thought expressed in the preceding paragraph in order that the urgency of the situation may be fully realized by him. Please impress upon Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek the necessity for early military and political unification in order not only to bring about the successful conclusion of the Japanese war but also to establish a basis upon which relations between China and the Soviet Union may eventually become one of mutual respect and permanent friendship" (p. 98).

The following are excerpts from the transcript of minutes prepared by the State Department of a Press and Radio News Conference, Monday, April 2, 1945, held by General Hurley:

"A. * * * You gentlemen should know though—I believe you all do know, that it is a matter of common knowledge that the Communist Party of China supports the principles of Dr. Sun Yat-sen. That was generally referred to as the people's three principles of China. The three principles are government of the people, by the people, and for the people. All the demands that the Communist Party has been making have been on a democratic basis. That has led to the statement that the Communist party in China are not, in fact, real Communists. The Communist Party of China is supporting exactly the same principles as those promulgated by the National Government of China and conceded to be objectives also of the National Government.

"Q. Sir, I am not sure that I understood that last sentence. You said the Communist Party is supporting the same principles as the National Government of China.

"A. Yes.

"Q. Could you tell us what is the divergence between them? How do they differ?

"A. Well, as a matter of fact, the divergence between the parties in China seems to be not in the objective desired because they both assert that they are for the establishment of a government in China that will decentralize authority and conduct itself along democratic lines, employing democratic processes. The divergence between them is the procedure by which they can be achieved. To go a little further, the Communist Party would like for the National Government to inaugurate certain reforms immediately and to do this, they have suggested a bipartisan coalition government. The National Government, that is, the Kuomintang Party, has stated that it has a program outlined by the liberator of China, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, whereby the authority of the government of China is to be returned to the people of China under a constitution and not to an aggregation of political parties. The National Government of China contends that it is now in the process of a meeting being held on the 5th of next month, a program whereby it will return control of the government to the people. The National Government claims that it would not be justified in turning over the authority of government to any organizations or political parties, or any coalition of politicians but that it is the attitude of the National Government to return the control of China to the people and let the people select their own leaders.

"Q. General, what is the real difference between the Chinese Communists in China and the Communists in America, Britain, and elsewhere?

"A. Well, I know the difference between the Republicans and Democrats in Oklahoma, but you are getting too deep for me when you are trying to make me outline the difference between foreign political parties."

"Q. Is this Communist delegate who has been appointed to the Chinese delegation really a Communist as far as you know?

"A. I think he is. I do know that he was their representative at Chungking and that he is now in Yenan and I have had many conferences with him. Now, to say whether he is a real Communist as you understand Communism. I would not say that. I don't know because there is a question whether any of the Chinese Communists are real Communists, but I do say this: that he does belong to the Communist Party and does cooperate with and serve that Party. Now, to determine what is the degree of Communism and what kind of Communism it is, I could not give you a definition of that."

The following are excerpts from the transcript of testimony taken before the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Investigation of Far Eastern Policy, December 5, 6, 7, and 10, 1945:

"General HURLEY. At that time our policy in China was clearly defined and could be stated roughly as follows: (1) To unify all anti-Japanese military forces in China, and (2) to support the aspirations of the Chinese people to establish for themselves a free, united, democratic government." (p. 32).

* * * * *

Senator CONNALLY. It was part of your instructions, was it not, also to try to get union between the so-called 'communists' and the Chiang Government, so they could both fight the Japanese?

"General HURLEY. Yes, sir" (p. 39).

* * * * *

"Senator CONNALLY. Did General Stilwell ever tell you that his purpose in advocating the arming and unification of the Communists and Chiang Kai-shek's forces was to destroy the Government of China? Did he ever tell you that?"

"General HURLEY. No, sir (p. 44).

"Senator CONNALLY. I was talking about the deviation of opinion between General Stilwell and yourself. It was rather sharp, was it not?"

"General HURLEY. It was not.

"Senator CONNALLY. It was not sharp?"

"General HURLEY. No, sir (p. 46) * * *

"Senator CONNALLY. What did they (Stilwell and Chiang) disagree about, if you do not mind stating—about the Communist army, or not?"

"General HURLEY. AS I recall, at that time General Stilwell and I were not in disagreement in regard to the Chinese Communist armies. * * * So far as I know, General Stilwell and I are not at odds about the issue, and we have never had a controversial word between us (p. 47). * * *

"Senator CONNALLY. General Stilwell did advocate, however, the unification of the Communists with the Central Government in fighting, making a united front against the Japanese?"

"General HURLEY. He had been advocating that for two and a half years and, so far as I know, had not gone to the Communists as I had done. I think that he advocated everything that I advocated in that connection. * * * I think he was in favor of unification of the forces. I certainly was, and we had no controversy on that" (p. 90).

* * * * *

"General HURLEY. If the Chinese Communists had been armed at that time, if they had been armed by us or by Russia or by Great Britain, it would in my opinion have made the collapse of the National Government inevitable, and the documents I have asked the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to obtain I think will prove that the object was to arm the belligerents and withdraw support from the Government, which in my opinion was contrary to the American policy (p. 130).

"Senator Bridges. Whose objective was that, General Hurley? (p. 130).

"General HURLEY. I have stated that it was the objective of the Communists, the Communist armed party, and please distinguish between them and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, because they are different. * * * Russia is not supporting the Chinese Communist Party. * * *" (p. 130).

* * * * *

"Senator CONNALLY. If you had succeeded in your unification program, you would have been willing to arm the Communists, then, would you not? (p. 184).

"General HURLEY. Oh, yes. (p. 185).

"Senator CONNALLY. If they were going to fight with you?"

"General HURLEY. Oh, yes, yes.

"Senator CONNALLY. Yes.

"General HURLEY. Through their own government.

"Senator CONNALLY. Why, certainly, certainly.

"General HURLEY. I certainly was willing to arm them through their own government. Any time the National Government wished to arm the Communists I would have been in favor of it, but I was not in favor of arming a belligerent against the government that we were committed to uphold" (p. 185).

* * * * *

"General HURLEY. * * * very early in our negotiations I had an understanding with the Russian Government in regard to a rapprochement between China and the Soviet. Russia has said from the beginning that the Chinese Communists are not in fact Communists at all, that Russia does support the National Government of the Republic of China and the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek, that Russia desires closer and more harmonious relations with China. This attitude of Russia was finally solemnized in the Sino-Soviet Pact last summer" (p. 31).

* * * * *

"General HURLEY. Both the Communist armed party and the National Government have adopted the slogan which represents their objective—a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.' Both the Communists and the National Government state that their objective is to make effective in China all the rights of man enumerated in the Constitution of the United States. All the parties of China contend that their purpose is to make democratic processes effective throughout China" (p. 33).

* * * * *

"General HURLEY. * * * Marshal Stalin and Mr. Molotov * * * indicated to me that they do not consider the Chinese Communists as Communists at all. Oh, yes—there are some of them who are Communists, but the general rank and file of the Communist Party, the heads of the Soviet Government do not consider as Communists. Two: They advised me at that time that they were not aiding the Communist Party in China against the Republic of China. Three: That they would support the National Government of the Republic of China, and, a little further than we had agreed to go, the leadership of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Finally: that Russia desired closer and more harmonious relations with China (p. 40L).

"Senator CONNALLY. I believe you stated a while ago that you thought that Russia was observing and living up to its treaty with China.

"General HURLEY. I do (p. 40N).

"Senator AUSTIN. * * * This Chinese armed party occupies a large area in China, does it not? (p. 72).

"General HURLEY. It claims to.

"Senator AUSTIN. As a matter of fact, are there not segments of this armed party scattered over all of northern China as far down as the Yellow River?

"General HURLEY. Yes, sir"

* * * * *

"Senator AUSTIN. And are they unified so that the Army of this Chinese armed party would be a great threat to the unification of China under the Republic?

"General HURLEY. Yes, sir. That is true even if we do not arm them with lend-lease, and if they are successful in getting some of the Japanese arms. But without aid from Russia, aid from the United States, aid from Britain, or the acquisition of Japanese arms, they are not an insurmountable threat.

"Senator AUSTIN. Is it your opinion that they are getting financial aid from any of these sources that you have just mentioned? (p. 73).

"General HURLEY. I would have to answer that question in the negative" (p. 74).

* * * * *

"General HURLEY. * * * please distinguish between them and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, because they are different, and all of this time Marshal Stalin and Commissar Molotov had been telling me, and throughout the entire period of the vicissitudes through which we passed so far as I know they have kept their word to me, that, as I stated yesterday, Russia—and this is my own analysis, it is not a quotation—does not recognize the Chinese armed Communist party as Communist at all. Russia is not supporting the Chinese Communist Party. Russia does not desire civil war in China. Russia does not desire the division of China and the setting up of two governments. Russia desires closer and more harmonious relations with China (p. 130).

* * * * *

"* * * I have read that the Soviet has transgressed certain matters that involve the territorial integrity and the independent sovereignty of China, but frankly I have no evidence that would convince me that that is true. I believe that the United States and Russia are still together on policy in China" (p. 131).

* * * * *

"Senator WILEY. It is your judgment—from what you testified this morning I gained it—that American and Russia are both playing on the level in the Far East? (p. 164).

"General HURLEY. Yes, sir. * * * Our Government saw some time ago the possibility of a victory in Europe before a victory over Japan. Consequently it was the purpose of our Government to try to find an amicable basis, in our next point of contact with Russia, which is Manchuria; and that amicable basis was worked out I think satisfactorily in the Sino-Soviet Agreement and in the exchange of letters that accompanied it; * * * " (p. 164-165).

* * * * *
 "Senator CONNALLY. * * * Now, as I understand it, there is a popular theory going around over the country that Russia is supporting the so-called Communists in China. You view is that that is not true? (p. 177).

"General HURLEY. I would say this, in answer to that question, Senator—that I have the word of both Marshal Stalin and Commissar Molotov that they are not (pp. 177-178).

"Senator CONNALLY. * * * Anyway, so far as you know, the Russians are not cooperating with the so-called Communists in China—as far as you know?

"General HURLEY. That is as far as I know" (p. 178).

* * * * *
 "Secretary BYRNES. * * * During the war the immediate goal of the United States in China was to promote a military union of the several political factions in order to bring their combined power to bear upon our common enemy, Japan. Our longer-range goal, then as now, and a goal of at least equal importance, is the development of a strong, united and democratic China" (p. 189).

* * * * *
 "Secretary BYRNES. * * * We believe, as we have long believed and consistently demonstrated, that the government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek affords the most satisfactory base for a developing democracy. But we also believe that it must be broadened to include the representatives of those large and well organized groups who are now without any voice in the Government of China" (pp. 189-190).

* * * * *
 "Secretary BYRNES. * * * To the extent that our influence is factor, success will depend upon our capacity to exercise that influence in the light of shifting conditions in such a way as to encourage concessions by the Central Government, by the so-called Communists, and by the other factions" (p. 190).

* * * * *
 "Secretary BYRNES. If I understand correctly what Ambassador Hurley has stated to me, and subsequently to the press and to this Committee, he entertains no disagreement with this conception of our policy" (p. 190).

[A carbon copy of the following memorandum was recovered in the offices of Amerasia]

THE STILWELL AFFAIR AND HURLEY'S APPOINTMENT

This information, classified as Top Secret ("Eyes Only"), is supplied by John S. Service. Especial caution must be shown in the use of the two White House messages to Chiang Kai-shek, whose text is given below.

* * * * *
 Early in July 1944 the U. S. Command in Chungking received a Top Secret message from the White House to be conveyed to Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. The message was taken to Chiang by Brig. Gen. Ferris. For fear that the text might be garbled by Chiang's own translator, John Service accompanied Ferris as interpreter. On arrival at Chiang's place, the two Americans asked Chiang to exclude all others from the room. Chiang listened in silence, and later said he would transmit his reply to the White House through his own channels. The message, as paraphrased by Service on May 19, 1945, was:

The situation in China is desperate and calls for drastic steps.

The President, therefore, suggests that all armies in China, including those of the Communists, be placed under an American commander. Although the President knows of Chiang's dislike for General Stilwell, he nevertheless believes that Stilwell's experience and record make him the best man for the job. The President would give Stilwell the necessary rank—make him a four-star general.

Chiang's reply was apparently transmitted through H. H. Kung, who was then attending the Bretton Woods conference. About ten days after the President's first message, another message arrived in Chungking. It gives a fair indication of Chiang's reply to the White House. The second message, also transmitted to Chiang by Ferris and Service, said in essence:

I am glad that you are in principle agreed to my suggestion for an American commander over all the forces in the China theater. Although, as you say, there are political factors which must be considered and there is also the important question of timing, I believe that the situation is so urgent that we should not delay; the political questions can certainly be solved. I agree with your suggestion for a high ranking political representative who can discuss these military and political matters, and I am looking now to find such a man who can have your complete confidence. [Service's words are apparently garbled in transcription from shorthand.]

Service is not sure who was responsible for the choice of Hurley, but believes that Harry Hopkins, as FDR's chief adviser, had his hand in the selection. Hurley arrived in Chungking in September—a few weeks after Stilwell became a four-star general. At first Hurley was friendly with Stilwell, but eventually went over to the Chinese view that Stilwell must be fired for the sake of Sin-American amity. Stilwell today believes that Hurley stabbed him in the back by strongly urging the President to recall Stilwell.

Asked for some of the reasons for the Stilwell-Chiang rift, Service listed these:

(a) At various times, Stilwell recommended to Chiang a drastic reshuffle of the Chinese command. All these suggestions were invariably ignored. Stilwell regarded Ho Ying-chin as one of the main obstacles to army reform advocated by the U. S. Stilwell also thought badly of Gen. Tu Li-ming [Service is unsure of this name], who was in command on the Salween front, and once, in anger, Stilwell suggested to Chiang that the best thing to do with Tu is to shoot him.

(b) There were a number of controversies dealing with orders issued by Stilwell or Chiang. The Chinese divisions in Burma, for instance, were receiving order from Chiang of which Stilwell knew nothing, or which were in direct conflict with the orders issued by Stilwell. This completely muddled up the military picture in Burma. One controversy dealt with Chiang's insistence that the battle for Burma be fought not by the Chinese but by the Allies, landing at Rangoon. Stilwell's efforts to explain that he had nothing to do with the formulation of the campaign plans for Burma remained fruitless.

(c) Chiang continually complained to Hurley that "his subordinate" was not carrying out his orders.

(d) Chiang insisted that before the Communist armies were given any aid, or put under an American commander, a political settlement had to be arrived at. Chiang, however, made any such settlement impossible.

(e) A sharp conflict developed over the use of lend-lease, Stilwell insisting on retaining control over the supplies and arguing that there was no sense in spreading these precious supplies thin among the untrained Chinese troops. Stilwell's point was that the Chinese armies have to be carefully weeded and trained before U. S. equipment is given to them. Wedemeyer, incidentally, has managed to retain control of the lend-lease supplies.

There is nothing new in these points, but they give confirmation to the reports already published in this country. At present, Service says, there is some improvement in the Chinese army, for some units had been given "diluted training." Troops thus trained, of course, do not come up to the standard of the divisions trained at Rangar (?), India, where the Chinese were given regular GI training. Every Chinese division now is accompanied by a team of U. S. advisers and instructors—perhaps ten to a division. Unless I am mistaken, Service said that the Mars Force has been disbanded, and split into teams assigned to instruct Chinese units.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, June 19, 1950.

Hon. MULLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is in response to your letter of June 7, 1950, requesting advice concerning the nature and preparation of the chart which Senator McCarthy referred to in his address upon the Senate floor on June 6, 1950.

You are advised that the document referred to by Senator McCarthy was not prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It may be that the State Department will be in a position to furnish your committee information concerning this document. This Department does not have a copy in its possession.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 28, 1950.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: When I appeared before your subcommittee on June 21, 1950, you requested a copy of the report entitled "Survey of Departmental Personnel Security Investigations," which was prepared by Mr. Samuel Klaus on August 3, 1946. A copy of this report is attached for your information. The names of the persons who were either employed by the Department, or were applicants for positions, as well as the names of the informants, have been eliminated from the report, in accordance with our understanding.

This report was prepared after Mr. Klaus, who was then assigned to the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Administration, had conducted a survey of the departmental personnel security investigations. You will note that the statements on pages 1 and 2 point out specific limitations of the survey and the report. Subsequent to this report and in early 1947 the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at my request, conducted a much more thorough and complete survey of the Department's Division of Security and Investigations. The completed FBI report was submitted to me on April 28, 1947. You will remember that when I appeared before your subcommittee on June 21 I stated that the FBI report, together with statements of actions taken on their recommendations, had been furnished to Senator Lodge. It is my understanding that Senator Lodge will make all of the information available to your subcommittee.

The conditions mentioned by Mr. Klaus do not exist today. Corrective action has been taken through a realignment of the security responsibilities of the Department, a reorganized Division of Security, and the establishment of loyalty and security standards. The details of these actions have previously been made available to your subcommittee. You will observe that on pages 29 and 30 of the Klaus report reference is made to a chart alleged to have been prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. No such chart was ever received by the Department of State from the FBI, nor was such a chart ever prepared by the FBI. After consultation with the writer of the report, with the former Security Officer, under whose direction and whose office the chart was prepared, with certain of his then subordinates familiar with the chart, and with the FBI, and after reviewing working papers which are still in our file, we have conclusively determined that the chart was not prepared or furnished by the FBI, but was prepared as an investigator's working document in the Department of State in 1946 and by employees of the Department of State. The interview with the writer of the report and the Security Officer with whom he had a conversation about the chart, established that the writer of the report drew from his conversation with the Security Officer the unintentional, erroneous conclusion that the chart was prepared by the FBI.

Furthermore, on June 14, 1950, Mr. Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, advised the Department by letter that the FBI did not send any such chart to the State Department and made no evaluation of information as was indicated in the Klaus report. While the letter from the FBI was made available for the record when I appeared before your subcommittee on June 21, a copy of that letter is attached for your convenience.

With respect to the persons indicated on the chart and in the report as "agents," "communists," "sympathizers," and "suspects," the FBI, as indicated above, made no such evaluation. It should be emphasized that the chart was prepared by the Department's Security Officers merely for working purposes. The chart showed the names of employees on whom the Security Officers had, in May 1946, received allegations which, in their opinion warranted further investigations. You are assured that none of these persons are now employed by the Department, except those who have since been investigated and who have been checked and evaluated under the Loyalty Program.

Copies of the Department's Press Releases of June 6 and June 9, 1950, pertaining to the report, are attached for your information.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. PEURIFOY,
Deputy Under Secretary.

Attachments: As stated.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1950.

By special messenger,

HON. JAMES E. WEBB,

*Under Secretary of State, Department of State,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. WEBB: Recent newspaper articles have come to my attention containing statements made by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, wherein he quoted excerpts from the State Department report prepared by Mr. Samuel Klaus of your Department which referred particularly to an alleged "FBI Chart."

The comments made by Mr. Klaus in his report concerning this alleged "FBI Chart," as they appeared in the newspapers, were completely erroneous. This Bureau did not send any such chart to the State Department, and, of course, made no evaluation of information as was indicated in the report. The author of the report took occasion to criticize the FBI in this report. This Bureau does not claim to be infallible; however, it appears that, if the State Department had any questions concerning the report, the matter should have been discussed with us at that time. I want to point out that the erroneous statements made by Mr. Klaus were highly embarrassing and prejudicial to the FBI.

As you are aware, this Bureau cooperates fully with your Department through established liaison channels. I thought you would be interested in knowing the true facts in this matter, and they are being furnished to you for whatever action you may deem desirable.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN EDGAR HOOVER, Director.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, June 13, 1950.

Mark Gayn's residence, Apartment 16 B, 302 West Twelfth Street, New York City, was entered April 5, 1945; April 27, 1945; April 29, 1945; May 30, 1945; the night of June 4-5, 1945, and June 6, 1945. On this last date Gayn was arrested.

The apartment of Kate Louise Mitchell, 127 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York City, was entered on March 31, 1945, and April 2, 1945.

The apartment of Philip Jaffe, 49 East Ninth Street, New York City, was entered on April 2, 1945, and April 6, 1945. The apartment of Eummanuel Sigurd Larsen, No. 207, 1650 Harvard Street NW, Washington, D. C., was entered April 6, 1945.

Apartment 227 at 1650 Harvard Street NW, Washington, D. C., was entered prior to June 4, 1945, on which date Larsen moved into that apartment, and also on June 6, 1945, when Larsen was arrested.

The residence of Andrew Roth in Arlington, Va., was never entered. An examination of his effects which were being transported from Arlington, Va., to New York City was made on June 1 and 2, 1945. Andrew Roth was arrested on the street in Washington, D. C., June 6, 1945.

The residence of John Stewart Service was entered June 6, 1945, when he was arrested there.

In response to your question concerning a conversation between Philip Jaffe and John Service in a Washington, D. C., hotel (Question No. 5), the conversation was overheard through facilities of a technical installation in Jaffe's hotel room, May 8, 1945.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

OFFICE MEMORANDUM—UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Date, April 18, 1945.

To: The Director.
From: D. M. Ladd.
Subject: Phillip Jaffe; Espionage (C).

Mr. Gurnea and the writer attended a conference at the office of General Holmes, which was attended also by Major Matt Correa and Fred Lyon, at which time Mr. Gurnea discussed developments in the above-entitled case with these gentlemen. We advised the conference that you had instructed that they be brought up to date on the developments and that the question of policy with reference to the future handling of the matter be determined.

After the discussion, Major Correa and General Holmes both stated that they were of the opinion that the investigation should be continued for the next two months or so for the following reasons:

1. In order that any other persons in either the State, Navy, or other Government defendants who might be involved could be determined.

2. In order that continued check might be made in New York for the purpose of endeavoring to determine whether, in fact, Jaffe is obtaining this material for the use of the Russian Government.

3. If information is developed as suggested under item 2, even though it might not be possible to utilize this in any prosecution, it would still be of tremendous value in any diplomatic dealings between this country and Russia.

Both General Holmes and Major Correa requested that, at such time as it is deemed feasible to break this case, they both be advised in advance, in order that they may properly notify other departmental officials who will have to know of developments, inasmuch as they have not been discussing the details of this matter with their superiors. Major Correa stated that Admiral Thebaud of ONI has not in any way been advised of developments in this matter, and that he felt it would be necessary that some notice be given to him just immediately prior to any arrests. The gentlemen were assured by Mr. Gurnea and myself that they would be appropriately informed prior to taking any such steps.

General Holmes and Major Correa both stated that, in the event developments in the case at any time indicated a necessity for immediate action, of course, the Bureau had blanket authority from both of them to act in such an emergency provided they were immediately notified prior to making any arrests.

Both of these gentlemen expressed complete satisfaction with the developments to date and appeared to be following this case with considerable interest.

CAHILL, GORDON, ZACHRY & REINDEL,
(COTTON & FRANKLIN),
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1950.

EDWARD P. MORGAN, Esq.,
*Counsel, Subcommittee of Senate Foreign Relations Committee Investigating Loyalty of State Department Employees,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MORGAN: In response to your request I enclose herewith on behalf of the executors of the estate a photographic copy of a portion of Mr. Forrestal's personal papers together with an affidavit of Eugene S. Dufield who has custody of various of Mr. Forrestal's personal papers at the present time.

Very truly yours,

MATHIAS F. CORREA.

STATE OF OHIO.

Hamilton County, ss.:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, in and for Hamilton County, Ohio, Eugene S. Duffield, who, being duly sworn, deposes:

I currently hold, on behalf of the executors of the late James Forrestal, various of his personal papers in order to arrange them for possible publication. Among them is a page headed, "28 May 1945—Lieutenant Andrew Roth."

A photographic copy of this page is attached. Among the papers temporarily in my possession, this page contains the only reference to the case mentioned therein that I have discovered. My careful reading has covered everything through September 1945 and I have scanned the balance of that year.

I understand that, at the request of the Department of Justice, a typed copy of this page has previously been furnished to that Department.

EUGENE S. DUFFIELD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 10th day of June 1950.

[SEAL]

MARIE F. WINGFIELD,

Notary Public, within and for Hamilton County, Ohio.

28 MAY 1945

LIEUTENANT ANDREW ROTH

Major Correa reported to me that the Department of Justice has evidence to the effect that Lieutenant Andrew Roth has been furnishing confidential and secret documents to a man named Jaffe, head of a publication named "Amerasia" in New York City. Jaffe has had intimate relationship with the Russian Consul in New York.

Other Departments of Government involved are the Office of Strategic Services, the Department of State, and the Foreign Economic Administration.

Major Correa reported that it was proposed that Lieutenant Roth should be taken into surveillance Wednesday. He said that the FBI thought that unless speedy action were taken important evidence would be dissipated, lost and destroyed. I pointed out that the inevitable consequence of such action now would be to greatly embarrass the President in his current conversations with Stalin, because of the anti-Russian play-up the incident would receive out of proportion to its importance, particularly in view of the fact that the people involved were members of the American Communist Party.

I asked Captain Vardaman to see to it that the President was informed in this matter and then I called Mr. Edgar Hoover and suggested that he advise Mr. Tom Clark and have him also see that the President is in full information of all of the facts in the matter as well as their implications.

The staff of the subcommittee interviewed certain persons and submitted the following memoranda on the results of those interviews:

MAY 19, 1950.

MEMORANDUM RE INTERVIEW WITH JOSEPH W. BALLENTINE

On Friday, May 19, 1950, I interviewed Mr. Joseph W. Ballentine, at the Brookings Institute, where he is now employed. At the time of the Amerasia arrests Mr. Ballentine was Director of the Far Eastern Division of the State Department and Larsen was employed in that Division.

Mr. Ballentine stated that he had no information about the Amerasia case and that as a matter of fact he was in San Francisco at the time the arrests were made. He also stated that he knew very little about Mr. Larsen since Mr. Larsen had first been employed under an independent section and had later been transferred to the Far Eastern Division. For this reason Mr. Ballentine stated he had not made the customary check into the employees background.

I specifically asked Mr. Ballentine about Larsen's story about going to him with statements about Jaffe and both of them subsequently going to see Acting Secretary Grew. Ballentine stated he could never remember any incident of this character and it sounded to him of sufficient importance that if it had happened he would have remembered.

Ballentine added that to the best of his recollection he had never heard of Jaffe or Larsen's association with him prior to the arrests. I also asked Ballentine about the Far Eastern Division and whether it was divided into pro-Chinese Communist cliques and pro-Chiang cliques. Ballentine stated that to the best of his knowledge there were no such cliques that senior officers in the Division were all in accord. He did state that some of the junior officers were divided as to who would make the most effective fighting force in China to help us in the fight against the Japanese, but the entire emphasis was on who would help us most against the Japs and not who should be supported in China.

MEMORANDUM RE INTERVIEW WITH ROBERT BANNERMAN

Mr. Robert Bannerman was interviewed with a request that he advise of the knowledge and information which he personally has concerning the Amerasia case since allegedly he had participated in some investigation thereof in the State Department.

Mr. Bannerman advised that he had been employed in the office of the Chief Special Agent on work not relating in any way to the Amerasia case. On June 21, 1945, he was appointed Security Officer of the State Department and was assistant to the Director of the Office of Controls. Bannerman thought that this was done about three days after the arrests in the Amerasia case but it is to be noted that the arrests were made June 6, 1945. According to Bannerman, he had a desk but no staff, no files, and no office set-up.

The title Assistant to the Director of Office of Controls was merely a title because the Office of Controls had not yet been set up. Until February of 1946, as Security Officer, Bannerman had no staff except those individuals which he borrowed from other offices. During this period, most of his work was screening, with a committee, the approximately 4,000 individuals who had been taken into the State Department from wartime agencies such as FEA, Research and Analysis of OSS, etc. As Security Officer for the Department of State, Bannerman at that time had no personnel security work within his jurisdiction. As a matter of practical fact, Bannerman was working under Fred Lyon.

Bannerman had no knowledge of the Amerasia case until the arrests and no official knowledge of it until after the arrests when until sometime during the fall of 1945, he assisted the FBI agents in running down the documents in the State Department. The documents which were found in connection with the case and which seemed to have emanated from the State Department, were checked by the FBI to determine their validity if they were originals and to locate the originals where copies were seized. Bannerman assisted the FBI agents in doing this by making arrangements with the proper personnel in the appropriate division of the State Department. Bannerman had nothing to do with the action to be taken against the personnel or the policy to be followed by the Department of State in connection with the case. In other words, Bannerman has no first-hand knowledge of the case and conducted no investigation of the facts of the case. Insofar as Bannerman knows, the State Department in no wise conducted an investigation of the case but the case was duly investigated by the FBI. According to Bannerman, Assistant Secretary for Administration, Julius Holmes, took an active interest in the case and would be the former State Department official with direct knowledge as to the State Department position and handling of it.

Bannerman has no personal desire to appear as a witness and does not feel that he has any information or knowledge to which he can personally testify which would be of value.

Bannerman is presently with the Central Intelligence Agency and is located in Room 200, 2210 E St. NW.

MEMORANDUM RE WILLIAM J. DONOVAN

We interviewed Gen. Donovan at his apartment, 4 Sutton Place. I informed Gen. Donovan that the subcommittee understood that he was leaving shortly and was anxious to obtain, before his departure, information from him concerning his knowledge of the Amerasia case.

Gen. Donovan asked if we had talked with Archbold VanBuren and when we replied in the affirmative, he indicated that his information was no more than that which VanBuren probably gave us. Gen. Donovan verified VanBuren's story concerning the events during which VanBuren and Major Monigan took to Gen. Donovan the documents which Bielaski had brought in from the Amerasia office. Gen. Donovan advised that he took the matter up with Stettinius at Stettinius's apartment at which time Assistant Secretary of State Holmes, VanBuren, and Major Monigan were also present. Gen. Donovan advised that he knew nothing of the case thereafter except that he kept after them (the State Department and Fred Lyon) to do something about the matter.

Gen. Donovan discussed his belief at the time that "John Doe" warrants should have been obtained and statements under oath gotten from the principals. He indicated that he felt that the matter was incorrectly handled because when any agency conducts an investigation, the matter does not remain confidential and opportunity to cover up, etc., arises.

Gen. Donovan mentioned that in discussing the matter with Fred Lyon he asked if the State Department had any idea who might have been responsible for this material emanating from the State Department. When he pressed Mr. Lyon for some suggestions or suspicions, Mr. Lyon suggested that it might have been John Carter Vincent. Gen. Donovan then queried us as to whether Vincent did not have a wife who was a Communist.

Gen. Donovan suggested that we should see Pat Hurley. Shortly after the discovery of the Amerasia case, Gen. Donovan went to London and he met Pat Hurley at the airport there, Hurley being on his way to Moscow and China. Donovan told Hurley what Fred Lyon had said about Vincent because he knew that Hurley thought Vincent was "his boy."

Gen. Donovan advised that he was going to call Fred Lyon to tell him that he, Gen. Donovan, had told us about Lyon's suspicion about John Carter Vincent.

Gen. Donovan suggested very clearly that he thought we should talk to Gen. Hurley, and that the committee should call as witnesses Fred Lyon and John Carter Vincent.

MEMORANDUM RE FREDERICK B. LYON

I interviewed Frederick B. Lyon, Foreign Service Officer, now with the Foreign Service Inspection Division of the State Department. I informed Mr. Lyon that his name, as he probably knew, had been prominently mentioned in the press as one of those who should be called as a witness and who reportedly could furnish testimony concerning the Amerasia case. I informed Mr. Lyon that on behalf of the subcommittee, I desired to determine from him the nature of any testimony that he would be able to give and to determine the extent of his personal knowledge of the facts of the matter.

Mr. Lyon advised me that upon returning recently from Manila, P. I., he saw stories in the press about the Amerasia case and naturally was interested therein. He stated that he had seen a column by Sokolosky in which he, Lyon, had been mentioned as a witness who could give testimony. Mr. Lyon told me that he was shocked to see himself so considered. Mr. Lyon furnished the following information to me concerning his part and pointed out that he couldn't see where he could furnish any information of pertinent value.

Because of the indirect interest in the investigation of the case and the lapse of time, Mr. Lyon's recollections are described by him as vague and unclear. He understood that Gen. Donovan had come to see Secretary of State Stettinius and turned over to Stettinius certain papers which OSS had gotten hold of, that apparently emanated from the State Department. Secretary of State Stettinius called Assistant Secretary Julius C. Holmes and turned over the material to Holmes and either Stettinius or Holmes decided that the matter should be referred to the FBI for immediate investigation. At this time, Mr. Lyon was in the departmental service and was in charge of the Foreign Activity Correlation Division which handled liaison with the various intelligence agencies, such as FBI, OSS, G-2, ONI, etc. Additionally, since Assistant Secretary Holmes had only recently returned to the department after some years absence, Mr. Lyon had an office across the hall of Mr. Holmes in order to serve as a sort of informal adviser to Mr. Holmes on procedures and policies than in effect relating to the administration of the State Department. For these reasons, Mr. Lyon believes that he served to facilitate Assistant Secretary Holmes' action in turning the matter over to the FBI for investigation. Mr. Lyon could not recall exactly, but he thinks that he may have accompanied Mr. Holmes to the FBI to introduce him to Director Hoover.

Thereafter, of course, Mr. Lyon as liaison officer of the State Department with the FBI, facilitated and assisted the FBI investigation within the State Department by making proper arrangements for them to interview individuals and review material. In no sense did Mr. Lyon conduct any of the investigations within the State Department. Any results of the investigation were results produced and obtained by the FBI and would therefore be in the possession of the FBI and not of Mr. Lyon, or, insofar as he knows, in the possession of the State Department. As a matter of personal knowledge Mr. Lyon is unable to testify to any of the facts in this case. He conducted no interviews, he reviewed no material, he took no action on behalf of the State Department and was only connected with the case as liaison with the investigating officers, namely the FBI agents. Mr. Lyon, of course, would be reluctant and feels that he is unauthorized to testify to the procedures used by the FBI and feels strongly that any information in this regard should come from the FBI itself.

In discussing the matter with Mr. Lyon, it was quite clear that he is not a primary witness to any evidentiary fact relative to the activities of the subjects or the handling of the prosecution of the case or the handling of the personnel from an administrative point of view.

It appears that since Mr. Lyon was liaison with the FBI and would have been in constant touch with the FBI on any of the investigations within the State Department, that there has been some confusion leading to the presumption that Mr. Lyon would have conducted or participated in the conducting of the investigation. Such a presumption is erroneous. How Mr. Lyon came into the picture is unknown to him except to the extent that we surmise it occurred as above suggested.

MAY 10, 1950.

MEMORANDUM RE INTERVIEW WITH JUDGE PROCTOR

I talked to Judge Proctor on Wednesday, May 10, 1950, concerning proceedings held before him in the District Court when Jaffe and Larsen were fined. I pointed out to Judge Proctor that there had been some indication in the case that the Justice Department had not disclosed to him all the facts in the case. I specifically wanted to know whether the attorneys in the case had ever had any informal meeting with him and discussed facts other than those shown on the transcript of the proceedings.

Judge Proctor stated that he had no independent recollection of the case. His records did show that on the day before, he was contacted by Mr. McInerney of the Justice Department. However, he does not recall what was discussed, but he is reasonably sure that the facts of the case were not discussed since he has no record of Mr. Jaffe's attorney being present. Judge Proctor did state that as far as he recalls, therefore, he had no information concerning the case other than that given him in open court.

Judge Proctor also pointed out that there had been nothing special about the Saturday morning hearing. He stated that he was on duty that morning and would therefore be the judge who would handle the case. The only possible need for the prior meeting would be to make arrangements to bring the case up out of order since it was not calendared for hearing on that date. Judge Proctor stated that it was his practice to hold hearings on Saturday morning in cases in which it would accommodate the attorneys or the parties in the case if it were possible.

Judge Proctor also indicated that while he hoped the Committee would not find it necessary to call him, he would be willing to appear if needed and would testify substantially as set out in this memorandum.

ROBERT L. HEALD.

Information on the following people, who were believed to be Washington contacts of Philip Jacob Jaffe, was developed by the staff of the subcommittee:

Alvin Barber

Alvin Barber was born February 6, 1905, at Newburg, New York, of American parents. From October 1942 through the Amerasia investigation he was employed by the Foreign Economic Administration and its predecessor the Board of Economic Warfare. At the time of the investigation he was Chief of the Supply Adjustment Section in the office of Economic Programs of FEA. He is known to have been a contributor to Amerasia and from February 1935 to December 1941 he was a research associate for the Institute of Pacific Relations. He was a personal contact of Philip Jaffe on Jaffe's visits to Washington, D. C.

Joseph Bernstein

Bernstein at one time was listed as an employee of Amerasia. At the time of the FBI investigation he was a writer of official publications for the Communist Party.

Thomas Arthur Bisson

Thomas Arthur Bisson was born in New York City November 8, 1900. He first went to the Orient in 1924 as a Presbyterian missionary. Since 1929, however, he has been identified in this country with the Foreign Political Association and with the Institute of Pacific Relations. He was employed by the Board of Economic Warfare in January 1942 but resigned from that organization subsequent to investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Civil Service Commission. He is a very close associate of Philip Jaffe and was formerly on the editorial board of Amerasia.

Chao Ting Chi

At the time of the Amerasia investigation Chao Ting Chi was Secretary General of the Foreign Exchange Control Commission of the Chinese Ministry of Finance, and director of economic research for the Central Bank of China. His permanent residence is New York City. He was married to Harriet Levine, a cousin of Philip Jaffe and apparently was successful in concealing from the Chungking government the fact that he, like Jaffe, was connected with the Communist activities in this country. Jaffe is known to have corresponded with Chi under an alias of Phillips.

Philip C. Curtis

Philip C. Curtis is a native-born citizen of the United States, born May 26, 1907. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he resided in Washington, D. C. He was a telephone contact of Philip Jacob Jaffe. An FBI check at the time of the Amerasia investigation indicated that Curtis' most recent employment had been with the Office of Strategic Services.

Frederick Vanderbilt Field

Field, who has been prominent in numerous Communist organizations, was a founder with Jaffe of Amerasia, Inc., and prior to dissolution of the corporation in 1944 owned 50 percent of the stock. He was President of the corporation and apparently frequently advised with Jaffe concerning the contents of publication. Field, like Jaffe was a lecturer at the "Jefferson School of Social Science" and also a director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

John Thomas Find

John Thomas Find was reportedly born July 15, 1896, in Cleveland, Ohio. There is no birth record in Cleveland, however, which can be verified. His father was an American citizen of Dutch and Chinese descent. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he was employed as a Chinese translator in the Office of Naval Intelligence, Washington, D. C., and had been so employed since February 1942. He spent several years in China and is well acquainted with Thomas Arthur Bisson of the Institute of Pacific Relations who was formerly on the editorial board of Amerasia and who is a close associate of Philip Jacob Jaffe. Find was a known contact of Emmanuel Larsen, Lt. Andrew Roth, and Kate Louise Mitchell. Official documents bearing routing to Find were found in Jaffe's office.

Irving S. Friedman

Irving S. Friedman is known to have been a contact in the Treasury Department of both Jaffe and Chao Ting Chi who is married to Jaffe's cousin Harriet Levine. Friedman was born January 31, 1915, is a United States citizen and was formerly a member of the International Secretariat of the Institute of Pacific Relations. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he was an economic analyst in the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

Julian Richard Friedman

Julian Friedman was born June 2, 1920, in New York City. Immediately upon graduation from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy he was hired by the State Department in 1943 as a junior divisional assistant in international economic affairs. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he held the rating of divisional assistant in the office of John Carter Vincent, chief of the division of Chinese affairs of the office of Far Eastern affairs of the United States Department of State. Friedman was a known contact of Lt. Andrew Roth and it was through Friedman that Roth was able to first introduce John Service to Jaffe. Friedman had an active interest in the affairs of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Donald Porter Geddes

At the time of the Amerasia investigation Geddes was described as a former writer and lecturer employed as editor of Pocket Book, Inc., and formerly employed by Columbia University Press. He was a contact of Philip Jaffe, Kate Mitchell, Mark Gayn, and also of Joe Bernstein, a known Communist writer.

Randall Gould

Gould during the Amerasia investigation was publishing a weekly newspaper in New York known as the Shanghai Evening Post. Prior to the Japanese conquest of Shanghai this newspaper had been published in that city. Mr. Gould was also active in the insurance business of New York. Mr. Gould was a contact of Jaffe and apparently quoted from and referred to Amerasia articles in his newspaper.

Michael Greenburg

Michael Greenburg, alias Menahem Greenburg, was identified as a telephone contact of Philip Jaffe. At the time of the Amerasia investigation Greenburg resided in Arlington, Virginia, and was employed by the Foreign Economic Administration. He was born in Manchester, England, November 28, 1914, of Russian parents and came to the United States at the outbreak of the war in Europe in 1939. His sister, Esther, at the time of the Amerasia investigation was the organizer for the Lancashire district of the Communist Party of Great Britain. Prior to entering the employ of the United States government in 1942 Greenburg was connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Chew Sick Hong

Chew Sick Hong was born December 10, 1910, in China and entered the United States in 1920 as the son of a native-born American. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he was assistant news editor in the overseas branch of the Office of War Information in New York City and was so employed since December 1941. He is well recognized in Chinese circles in New York as a Communist and met at the home of Philip Jaffe in New York City on April 22, 1945, with Earl Browder, president of the Communist Political Association; Y. Y. Hsu, of the Institute of Pacific Relations; and Tong Pi Wu, Chinese Communist delegate to the United Nations Conference on International Organization.

Y. Y. Hsu

Y. Y. Hsu is a citizen of China born in China May 1, 1902. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he was connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Kate Louise Mitchell

Kate Louise Mitchell, coeditor of Amerasia, is a native-born citizen of the United States, born in Buffalo, New York, September 1, 1908. She was affiliated with the Institute of Pacific Relations since 1933. She is reportedly wealthy, and has lectured at the School for Democracy in New York City which reportedly was Communist-sponsored. Kate Louise Mitchell did most of the actual writing of the articles which appeared in Amerasia. Miss Mitchell was apprehended at the time the FBI made its arrests in the Amerasia case but was "no-billed" by the grand jury.

Obaidur Rahman

Obaidur Rahman was a secretary in the Indian Agency General of the Embassy of Great Britain in Washington, D. C. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he had been a contact of Jaffe for a considerable period of time. When he was transferred from Washington to India by way of London early in 1945 it was indicated that he might carry material of a secret nature for Jaffe. Rahman is Anti-British.

Alix Simon Reuther

Alix Simon Reuther was a contact of Philip Jaffe both in New York and Washington. At the time of the Amerasia investigation she was news editor in the domestic branch, Foreign News Bureau, Office of War Information, Washington, D. C. She was born in Frankfort Main, Germany, in 1903, and was naturalized in this country in May 1940. Between 1936 and 1939 she was employed by the Spanish (Loyalist) Information Bureau in New York City.

Lawrence Kacler Rossinger aka Larry Rossinger

Left-wing Rossinger has been employed as a teacher, research worker, and writer in New York City. At one time he was employed by the Indian Government Trade Commission and was also affiliated with the Foreign Policy Association. He is reported to have leftist inclinations. Rossinger was a contact of Jaffe.

Howard Salsam, also known as Howard Selsam and Paul Salter

Salsam was director and instructor of the "Jefferson School of Social Science," an organization sponsored by the Communist Party in New York.

Charles Nelson Spinks (USNR)

Charles Nelson Spinks was born in Berkeley, California, May 14, 1906. He went to Japan as an instructor in English at Tokyo University of Commerce in 1936. He returned to the United States in 1941 and was commissioned Lieutenant (j. g.), USNR, January 19, 1942. At the time of the Amerasia investigation he was assistant to the head of the Japanese section of the Far East Division of the Office of Naval Intelligence. Spinks was on the Far East Committee of the State, War, Navy Control Commission, and was loaned to the Department of State on a part-time basis to prepare studies on far-eastern questions to be brought before the State, War, Navy Control Commission. Spinks was a contact of Lt. Andrew Roth, and on April 18, 1945, Philip Jaffe instructed Larsen, in whose office at the State Department Spinks shared space, to obtain notes of the meetings of the State, War, Navy Control Commission, and furnish them to Jaffe. Larsen introduced Spinks to Jaffe.

Tung Pi Wu

At the time of the Amerasia investigation Tung Pi Wu was an elderly Chinese who had long been a member of the Communist Party of China. He came to the United States in April 1945 to attend the United Nations Conference on International Organization. Arrangements were made through Y. Y. Hsu for Tung Pi Wu to meet with Earl Browder and Philip Jaffe at the latter's residence in New York City, April 22, 1945.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 26, 1950.

HONORABLE MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman, Armed Services Committee, United States Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Secretary of the Defense has referred to me for reply your letter of June 15 requesting further information regarding the case of former Lt. Andrew Roth.

In this letter you inquired as to the reason Lieutenant Roth was not ordered to stand trial by a general court martial. This was due to a policy of long standing, and still in effect, that uniformed Naval personnel ascertained to be involved with civilians who would be subject to criminal prosecution in the Federal courts, would be made available to the Federal authorities for prosecution. The case of former Lieutenant Roth, therefore, was in line with general operating policy in such matters and constituted no deviation from normal procedures.

I hope that the foregoing will be of assistance to your subcommittee.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS P. MATTHEWS.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, May 16, 1950.

HONORABLE MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman, Subcommittee of Foreign Relations Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter to the Attorney General of May 9, 1950, asking that your Subcommittee be furnished a copy of the transcript of grand jury proceedings of the so-called Amerasia case (United States v. Philip J. Jaffe, et al.) for its consideration and study.

Reference is also made to the letter of James M. McInerney, Esquire, Assistant Attorney General, dated May 10, 1950, advising you that photostatic copies of documents seized from the premises of some of the defendants in this case will be available for your perusal in Room 4220 in the Department of Justice within the next few days.

When the members of your Subcommittee come to this Department to examine the documents in question we will gladly make available to them a copy of the transcript of grand jury proceedings in this case.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
CRIMINAL DIVISION,
Washington, May 10, 1950.

HONORABLE MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman, Subcommittee of Foreign Relations Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: During the course of my testimony in executive session before your committee last Thursday, May 4, 1950, you requested that I furnish photostatic copies of certain documents.

Pursuant to your request, I am enclosing a photostatic copy of the Demurrer, Motion to Quash, and Motion to Suppress Evidence, filed on September 28, 1945, on behalf of the defendant Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen. I am also enclosing a photostat of a newspaper article which appeared in the September 28, 1945, issue of The Evening Star entitled "Larsen Charges FBI Made Illegal Search of Home for U. S. Files."

With respect to the request of your committee that the documents which were seized from the premises of some of the defendants be made available to your committee, I have discussed this with Mr. Peyton Ford and we hope to have photostatic copies available for your perusal in Room 4220 of this Department within the next few days.

During the course of my testimony there was some discussion with respect to the classification and importance of the documents seized. This discussion may have left some members of the committee with the impression that the importance or nonimportance of the documents may have been an important consideration in the disposition of the case. Such of course is not the fact, because the indictment returned against the defendants charged them with conspiring to embezzle, remove, retain, etc., official government documents without respect to their classification or relation to the national defense. In any event, the maximum penalty under the conspiracy statute would be the same in either case, the net result being that the government had one less element of proof to establish at the trial.

Respectfully,

JAMES M. MCINERNEY.

[From the Evening Star, September 28, 1945]

LARSEN CHARGES FBI MADE ILLEGAL SEARCH OF HOME FOR U. S. FILES

Charging Federal Bureau of Investigation agents had illegally and secretly searched his apartment in the 1600 block of Harvard Street NW., Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen this afternoon filed motions in District Court attacking the charge against him of conspiracy to unlawfully remove Government records and files under which he and two others were indicted in August.

In a motion to suppress evidence, Mr. Larsen, a specialist in the China Division of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, State Department, also accuses the FBI of telephone wire-tapping and charged the FBI with search and seizure without a warrant.

In an affidavit accompanying the motions, Mr. Larsen says FBI agents forced him to show them his private files and he claims he heard whispered conversations between them, indicating they already knew where his files and other items were kept.

Lt. Andrew Roth, formerly on active duty as an intelligence officer in the Navy Department, yesterday filed a demurrer attacking the indictment and asked for a bill of particulars.

Lt. Roth was one of two other men indicted with Mr. Larsen. In the demurrer he charged the indictment is "vague, indefinite and uncertain."

Named with Mr. Larsen and Lt. Roth in the conspiracy indictment was Philip Jacob Jaffe, New York editor of Amerasia Magazine. All three are out on bond.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOLDING A CRIMINAL TERM

Criminal No. 75457

United States, plaintiff, vs. Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen et al., defendants

MOTION TO QUASH INDICTMENT

Now comes the defendant, Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen, and with leave of court first had and obtained, hereby withdraws his plea of "not guilty" entered herein August 30, 1945, and says that the indictment herein is defective and insufficient to require him to plead thereto and he moves the court to quash the indictment, and as grounds therefor says:

1. The use in the indictment of the alleged alias "Jimmy Larsen" is prejudicial to said defendant, as shown by the affidavit of said defendant filed herein.

2. The evidence upon which the indictment was returned by the Grand Jury was illegally obtained as shown by said defendant's affidavit and motion to suppress evidence filed herein.

3. The allegation that the defendants agreed to commit "certain offenses" against the United States is vague and uncertain.

4. The "certain offenses" which the defendants are alleged to have agreed to commit are not stated in the indictment.

5. The ingredients of the "certain offenses" which the defendants are charged with having agreed to commit are not stated in the indictment.

6. The indictment does not specify or identify, with reasonable certainty, the property, et cetera, referred to in paragraphs numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 in the indictment.

7. The alleged overt acts are insufficient to make out an offense of conspiracy to commit certain offenses against the United States.

8. It does not appear either from any allegation of fact in the indictment or from their nature and extent that the alleged overt acts were in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy and were done in order to effect the alleged objects of the same.

9. The indictment alleges conclusions rather than allegations of fact.

10. The indictment is bad for duplicity.

11. The facts alleged in the indictment do not constitute a crime against the United States.

12. For other reasons apparent of record.

United States, plaintiff, vs. Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen et al., defendants

DEMURRER

Now comes the defendant, Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen, and with leave of court first had and obtained, hereby withdraws his plea of "not guilty" entered herein August 30, 1945, and demurs to the indictment herein and says that said indictment is bad in form and substance and that the same ought to be dismissed and this defendant released from custody, and as grounds therefor says:

1. The allegation that the defendants agreed to commit certain offenses against the United States is vague and uncertain.

2. The certain offenses which the defendants are alleged to have agreed to commit are not stated in the indictment.

3. The ingredients of the certain offenses which the defendants are charged with having agreed to commit are not stated in the indictment.

4. The indictment does not specify or identify, with reasonable certainty, the property, et cetera, referred to in paragraphs numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 in the indictment.

5. The alleged overt acts are insufficient to make out an offense of conspiracy to commit certain offenses against the United States.

6. It does not appear either from any allegation of fact in the indictment or from their nature and extent that the alleged overt acts were in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy and were done in order to effect the alleged objects of the same.

7. The indictment alleges conclusions rather than allegations of fact.

8. The indictment is bad for duplicity.

9. The facts alleged in the indictment do not constitute a crime against the United States.

10. For other reasons apparent of record.

WHEREFORE, the defendant, Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen, demands judgment dismissing the indictment and discharging him from custody.

3. The search and seizure of said evidence by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation were made without any search warrant, subpoena, or order of court authorizing said search and seizure.

4. Said evidence was obtained by means of or with the aid of information acquired by secret and illegal search of said defendant's home by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation prior to his arrest and the illegal seizure of said evidence.

5. Said evidence was obtained by means of or with the aid of information acquired by unauthorized interception of telephone messages and conversations with the aid of or by means of the tapping of telephone wires by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

6. The statements procured from said defendant were not made freely and voluntarily by said defendant.

7. Said statements were induced by illegal detention of said defendant and obtained in violation of his rights under Section 595, Title 18, United States Code Annotated.

8. Other reasons apparent of record.

Criminal No. 75457

United States, plaintiff, vs. Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen et al., defendants

AFFIDAVIT OF EMMANUEL SIGURD LARSEN

CITY OF WASHINGTON,

District of Columbia, ss:

I, EMMANUEL SIGURD LARSEN, being first duly sworn, on oath say that I am a citizen of the United States, a resident of the District of Columbia, forty-eight years of age, and one of the above-named defendants.

On June 6, 1945, after arriving home from work in the State Department, I had just sat down to eat my dinner at about seven o'clock p. m. when there was a knock at the door. I went personally to open the door of my apartment and two men forced their way in with the words "You are under arrest," after asking me whether I was Emmanuel S. Larsen. I was dumbfounded and asked them what I was under arrest for. They refused to answer my question but said that I would find out in due course.

They opened and displayed their badges and identified themselves as FBI men. Two of them gave their names as Winterrowd and Zander.

In the meantime, about four other men walked in and the room seemed entirely full of men. My wife and five-year-old daughter were practically speechless and I exercised the utmost self-control in order to prevent my family from hysterics.

The two men mentioned by name then told me that they were going to make a search of the apartment occupied by me, namely, Apartment No. 227, at 1650 Harvard Street, Northwest, of which I was then and there in exclusive possession and control and occupied the same with my wife and daughter, having leased the same in my name as a tenant as of June 1, 1945, from the Harvard Hall Apartments, Incorporated.

They told me to hold up my hand and searched my person, asking me whether I carried any weapons. Two were in front of me and the rest of them behind me. As an illustration of the extent of my surprise, I may mention that I went through all this and discovered only twenty minutes later that I was about to choke on a morsel of food that I still had in my mouth unchewed. I did not carry any weapon and nothing was found on my person that required removal by them.

Immediately thereupon they asked me whether I had my files in my house. I answered that I did have private files, and they ordered me to take them to the files. When I opened the file case they asked me what was in the file case, and I told them that the case contained a mixture of strictly personal material and a number of papers, mostly published material, and some official papers pertaining to the work I had been doing for the Government almost ten years.

They asked me how it came about that I had official papers at my residence, and I told them that as far as I knew from ten years experience in the Government all men who were interested in their work pursued considerable study at home, inasmuch as official time often did not allow of the reading of lengthy reports. They asked me whether I had information relating to the national defense of the United States, and I was able to assure them that I did not.

When the agents started the search, I protested by asking why the H— I had to have my personal and private files and clothes drawers searched. They had not at that time shown me any search warrant, nor any arrest warrant, nor did they at any time present any such warrant to me.

I may add that upon repeated queries to my part as to why I was under arrest and as to why my apartment was being searched they answered again and again: You will find out in due course. Being unfamiliar with the legal procedure of arrests and searches, having never been subject to such before in my life, I was as a loss under the circumstances to take the right attitude or to know what to do in the matter.

I had that day been treating myself for a sore throat and a rather violent headache, and there was a time during the search, I estimate at about eighty-three, when my head was literally reeling. The agents allowed me to go to the kitchen and take a drink of water while they watched me, but they would not permit me to take an aspirin.

Their questioning, first couched in a gentlemanly tone, latter became extremely sharp and harsh, although I had from the start answered all their questions. One of the agents, a man, and a female agent, took my wife, Thelma Earles Larsen, out on the sun porch in the said apartment and questioned her. At one time I heard the questioning when I was brought back to the living room from the bedroom, and she looked at me. She rose up from her seat and asked me whether I had any objection to her making a statement. I remember kissing her on the cheek and telling her to tell the truth, as I knew she would, and that otherwise I had no objection.

I want to add very emphatically that at this time I was under great mental stress due to the unrelenting search and questioning that I was under myself, particularly by the two agents mentioned by name. The door from the apartment to the hall was opened from time to time, an agent came in, whispered instructions, and went out again. The rooms were littered with drawers, envelopes, books, and other material that was removed from filing cabinets, closets, and bookcases.

At one time while talking to two of the agents, I overheard two other agents talking in a whisper about the location of certain material. I recognized the location and the material by their description in that one of them said: "Those OSS reports are in that second drawer," and thereby I realized that a previous search, obviously unauthorized by law, had been made of my apartment because on the occasion of this search none of the agents had previously been into the contents of that drawer.

In another instance during the search of my clothes closet in the bedroom, one of the agents looked up on the top shelf and saw there a leather case. Another one of the agents said to his colleague: "That is all right; that is the vase."

In the leather case concerned I have stored a valuable Chinese vase. They could not have known of this unless they had previously searched the apartment then occupied by me or the apartment previously occupied by me in the same apartment house building, on the same floor, namely Apartment No. 207, which I had occupied from August 1941 until June 1, 1945.

The realization of the privacy of my apartment having been violated made me extremely bitter, as a result of which I felt very sick. Over a period of time I felt so sick that I do not remember to this moment what passed, probably an hour or so, nor what I said during that period.

I recollect only vaguely that I shuffled from room to room at their orders and answered the questions about files that they removed and spread all over the floors. This search went on until about 12 o'clock midnight, at which time I was informed that I would be taken to FBI Field Headquarters, which is over here on K Street.

When we emerged from the apartment house, there were about four cars parked around the doors and a number of agents standing by. I was so confused that I remember practically no details, nor do I remember exactly the route we took or the manner in which we entered the FBI headquarters.

However, I remember that after we had gone up to the fourth or fifth floor I was to be fingerprinted and photographed. Immediately prior to the fingerprinting, I do remember that one of the agents, after examining my hands, gave my right hand a twist, which hurt me, and in surprise I asked him what was the matter. He did not answer me. Instead, he asked me what was wrong with my third and fifth finger on my right hand. At the same time he ordered an entry to be made to the effect that I had two broken knuckles, whereupon the fingerprinting man proceeded to fingerprint me and the photographer took four pictures of me.

After that, I was taken into one of the rooms at the south end of the building. I believe, on one of the upper floors, and there I was questioned. I sat at a wide desk, and opposite me sat Agent Winterrowd. He told me that whatever I said might be used against me and that I was to realize the importance of this, after which I begged him to let me know at this time what I was being charged with, but he told me again that I would hear the formal charge in full detail at a later time.

He said he merely wanted to help me, and that if I knew what was good for myself I would cooperate with him and give him the utmost help in his investigation and thereby make things much easier for myself. His manner was harsh and demanding, and he maintained this attitude throughout three hours or more of unceasing questioning. I determined this time approximately by my arrival at midnight and my departure from the FBI Field Headquarters immediately after questioning at about three-fifteen.

Up to this time, I had had nothing to eat since noontime and, having suffered with a headache all day, I had practically eaten no lunch. I just took a glass of milk and a sandwich, and that is all I had had the whole day.

Mr. Winterrowd had before him a list which appeared to be questions arranged in a very systematic formation. Therefore every question embarrassed me to the utmost in the matter of exact dates and numbers of occasions and other details, of which no person normally keeps any record. Under my condition at that time I was still less able to remember offhand such dates and details, being for the moment in the agony of hunger and exhaustion from questioning. To summarize the causes of this exhaustion, I must make it emphatic that I stood on my feet for almost five hours and bent over files and drawers placed on chairs and the floors in my apartment.

At the FBI Headquarters I was not allowed to relax for a single second. I would have given anything to lay my head down on my arms and obtain sufficient rest to gather my wits. I debated with myself in favor of the easiest way out, namely, to answer all questions with as little arguing as possible to get it over with. Foremost on my mind of all things was the matter of getting it over with and getting out of that place. I really did not care very much where I was to go as long as I could get out of that place.

Around three o'clock I had worn out two stenographers, who had complained that they could not carry on any longer, and a third lady was brought in. This had the effect on me of creating a sense of complete hopelessness. I remember practically nothing of the last part of the questioning, except that I was taken with an obsession that I must get out of that office as soon as possible. This was the result of the high-pressure methods they used on me, namely, allowing me little time to answer questions, prodding me to deliver answers as snappily as they read the questions off the yellow sheet lying on the table.

At one time one of the agents resorted to a sort of flattery, stating that they could not imagine that a man with my education and background and with my specialty as demonstrated through the work they had seen on my personality cards and papers would be guilty of serious charges, and that they therefore said they wanted me to understand that if I talked freely I would indirectly be aiding my case.

On other occasions during their cross-examination of me the agents said to me that if I knew what was good for myself I would cooperate freely with them by telling them everything I knew and answering their questions in detail. The tone of voice in which this was said to me reminded me of the rough and cheap treatment given ignorant persons who would not on their own accord normally tell the truth or answer questions voluntarily.

I resented this attitude and told Mr. Winterrowd that I was definitely aware that he did not believe what I said and that it infuriated me. He refused to reply to that. He resumed his questioning only to make it more pointed and the prodding more unpleasant and threatening.

While I was leaving the apartment I remember one thing, namely, the progress the agents were making in the packing and removal of my files, including a six-drawer wooden cabinet containing several thousand personality cards which I had been collecting as a hobby since 1923, measuring four by six inches, and also my personal and private typewriter.

After the questioning at the F. B. I. Field Headquarters, I remember seeing a typewritten transcription of the statements I had made in answer to the said questioning. I remember correcting errors which were outstanding. In the making of the statements I was considerably excited at times when I noticed that the stenographer was putting down what Mr. Winterrowd was saying and not what I was saying, and he would precede such sections in the report with "Put this down," and I objected with the words: "Who the h—— is making this statement, you or I?" It was as a result of this that I was obliged to object to a number of things that were quite faulty in the statement when they showed me the typed transcription.

I do not recall signing the typewritten transcription but I recall correcting parts of it, immediately after which I was taken downstairs. Then I recollect riding in a car with the agents and being taken up to the U. S. Commissioner's office. I may have been unduly worried during that ride for I recollect absolutely nothing about the number of people in the car, the route taken, nor whether I was handcuffed or not. I do not remember anything about it. I do not remember whether I sat in the front or back seat. I do not remember anything.

I do remember that we were obliged to walk upstairs three or four floors to the U. S. Commissioner's office, and the exercise caused a genuine revival of my mental faculties. I also remember remarking that at that time my headache had disappeared but that I felt completely depressed and dumfounded. Sitting in the anteroom of the Commissioner's office I was startled by the flash of the photographer's bulb. Then I realized that next to me was sitting John Service and Andrew Roth. I turned to John Service and asked him in Chinese what this was all about but received no answer.

Then we were taken before the Commissioner and there was a peculiar incident. There was a great discussion around his desk as to the meaning of the charges being preferred against us, and while we were being taken in I overheard the Commissioner say: "I will be darned if I still understand what these men are charged with." Thereupon someone lifted the top sheet of the papers that had been placed before the Commissioner and showed him on a second sheet where the charges had been spelled out in some detail, and that indeed was the first time that I heard read off a piece of paper, although not actually directed at me, the charges upon which I had been arrested, namely, conspiracy to violate the Espionage Act.

The shock of that charge was so terrific that I had difficulty in my speech when soon after the Commissioner repeated the charges, set bail at ten thousand dollars, and I attempted to make him reduce the bail. I literally was unable to speak at that time. I did enter a plea of not guilty and thereupon was swiftly taken downstairs, handcuffed to one of the other persons involved. I think it was John Service.

From the time of my arrest, about seven p. m. on June 6, 1945, throughout the night and until after I had been arraigned before the United States Commissioner, I was without the advice of counsel and without opportunity to obtain the advice of counsel, and without opportunity to communicate with friends or relatives. They would not even allow me to talk to my wife without the presence of officers. When I said Good-bye to her, I tried to say a few comforting words to her, but they pulled me away and they said: "Come on; let's go."

They did not even give me the opportunity to undress properly and place in her bed my small daughter. I was permitted to pick her up from a chair at midnight where she had fallen asleep in pitiful disarray, pale and tired, surrounded by an unsightly litter of open drawers, books, papers, and other debris. I merely lifted her from that chair and put her into her little bed, without opportunity to undress her.

My wife at that time was being held in another room and was not permitted to move freely about the apartment.

In the FBI Headquarters they removed from my person my wallet, all my identification papers, a small pocketknife that they had previously overlooked in the search for a weapon, my fountain pen, my comb, and my glasses—everything.

Without my glasses I was unable to read. They returned my glasses to me at the time when they wanted me to look over the typed transcription of the questioning, and I held on to those glasses throughout the subsequent period of my imprisonment.

I remember that in the statements supposedly made by me the introduction and the final paragraph were completely dictated by Mr. Winterrowd. He said: "This is necessary because you do not understand and you may not get the wording of these technicalities right."

In going through my books in my apartment the agents found several small Chinese volumes and asked me to tell them truthfully what the interpretation of the title on the cover would be. I did so, and in one instance in the case of a small red volume, I said: "This is a book in which the Chinese Communists have tried to make clear their stand." They looked at me in great disgust, and I spared no details in making it clear to them that as an analyst of Chinese affairs I was called upon to study the position of all parties in China and report on them, and therefore the possession of Chinese Communist propaganda meant absolutely nothing. I had partially read that book in the hope of finding in it the names of the principal Chinese Communist spokesmen, but failing to do so and thus failing to gain any material that I might enter in my biographical cards, I had discarded the book as practically useless to me.

I have never been in any litigation, and therefore I do not know the details concerning my constitutional rights. I have spent twenty-four years of my life in China and five years in Europe. That makes twenty-nine years abroad, leaving me only ten of my adult years in the United States and about eight years in my childhood.

A partial inventory of the files, documents, papers, goods, and chattels seized by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation from my apartment at 1650 Harvard Street Northwest, District of Columbia, on June 6th and 7th, 1945, is hereto appended as Exhibit A and by reference incorporated in and made a part of this affidavit.

My full name is Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen. I have no other name and have never had any other name, except the nickname "Jimmy" by which some of my friends, relatives, and fellow workers have called me from time to time. I have never used the name "Jimmy Larsen" and have never been called by that name except among and by persons who knew my name was Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen. I have never been convicted of any crime and have never associated with a criminal class. I am informed and believe and therefore say that the use in the indictment of the alleged alias "Jimmy Larsen" is prejudicial to me, because when the indictment is read to the jury it might suggest to the minds of the jury that I have a criminal record or that I belong to or associate with a criminal class.

On or about June 11, 1945, in his office in the Harvard Hall Apartment House at 1650 Harvard Street Northwest, District of Columbia, of which he was then the resident manager, one E. R. Sager told me that sometime prior to June 6, 1945, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation came to Mr. Sager at a time when my wife, child, and I were absent from my apartment in that building and told him that they wished to search my apartment. Mr. Sager told me that he admitted them to the apartment, using the duplicate key filed on the keyboard in the manager's office, and that he saw two agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation enter into my apartment at that address and then and there search the same. Mr. Sager, at that time and place, told me that in the absence of my wife, child, and myself agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation entered and searched my apartment at that address a couple of times prior to June 6, 1945, when I was arrested and they again searched my apartment and seized my files, documents, papers, goods, and chattels in the manner hereinbefore set forth. On the night of September 24, 1945, I had a telephone conversation with said E. R. Sager, I having called him at his said office, and he again told me that agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation had entered my apartment in the manner aforesaid prior to June 6, 1945. I believe the statements Mr. Sager made to me as aforesaid, and I expect to be able to prove, by his testimony, at the hearing of my motion to suppress evidence and for the return of evidence, filed herein, that agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation did unlawfully enter and search my apartment aforesaid prior to June 6, 1945, as well as on that date.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, CRIMINAL DIVISION No. 1

Criminal No. 75,457

The United States vs. Philip Jacob Jaffe et al.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1945.

The above-entitled cause came on for the purpose of defendant named above to be afforded to change his plea formerly entered to the indictment herein.

BEFORE:

HONORABLE JAMES M. PROCTOR, Associate Justice, The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon on the above date, there being PRESENT:

ROBERT M. HITCHCOCK, Esquire, DONALD B. ANDERSON, Esquire, and JAMES M. MCINERNEY, Esquire, on behalf of The United States;

PHILIP JACOB JAFFE, the named defendant herein, and ALBERT ARENT, Esquire, of the District of Columbia Bar, and ARTHUR SWEINBERG, Esquire, of the Bar of the State of New York, his counsel.

The following proceedings and transactions were then had:

PROCEEDINGS AND TRANSACTIONS

The COURT. What is there about this matter of Jaffe, gentlemen?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. An indictment was returned at the July term charging this defendant, with two others, with having committed the offense of conspiracy.

On August 30, all defendants entered pleas of "not guilty" before Mr. Justice Schweinhaut.

It is my understanding that the defendant Jaffe, who is present, desires to withdraw his plea of "not guilty" and change his plea to one of "guilty."

Mr. ARENT. That is correct.

The COURT. That is correct?

Mr. ARENT. Yes.

The COURT. Are you a local attorney?

Mr. ARENT. Yes. I am.

The COURT. I understood a gentleman was coming from New York.

Mr. SWEINBERG. I am New York counsel.

The COURT. And you gentlemen are ready to enter that plea and it will be accepted.

You may take the plea, Mr. Clerk.

The CLERK OF THE COURT. Philip Jacob Jaffe, in case No. 75,457, in which you are charged with violation of Section 88, Title XVIII, United States Code, which is conspiracy to embezzle, steal, and purloin property, records, and valuable things of the record and property of the United States, do you wish to withdraw your plea of "not guilty" heretofore entered and enter a plea of "guilty" to the indictment?

The DEFENDANT. Yes.

The COURT. What disposition are you moving with respect to the case?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think counsel for the defendant has an application to make in respect to that in which the Government will join.

The COURT. What is it?

Mr. ARENT. Your Honor, may I make a brief statement just setting forth the situation?

The COURT. Please make it brief because I do not expect to hold any extended session here this morning.

Mr. ARENT. Your Honor, this indictment charges this defendant and others with conspiring to obtain various Government papers. The Government does not contend that any of this material was used for any disloyal purpose.

I would like to say a word or two about Mr. Jaffe, the character of the man, and the situation out of which this whole matter arose:

Mr. Jaffe has for many years been a student of Far Eastern affairs. He is a graduate of Columbia University with an A. B. and M. A. degree, and has given lectures at such institutions as Harvard, Yale—Harvard, Vassar, Dartmouth, and other schools. In 1937 he helped to found a magazine dealing with the Far East called AMERASIA and, among his cofounders of this magazine were distinguished academic people, scholars, political scientists like Owen Lattimore, head of the Walter Hines Page School of Diplomacy and International Relations at Johns Hopkins; William Stone, former Vice President, Foreign Policy Association; and Professor Peake, of Columbia; Professor Reischauer, of Princeton; and Professor Colgrove, of Northwestern. The magazine has a limited circulation amongst scholars and specialists in Far Eastern affairs and has found a place in the leading libraries and educational institutions of the country.

For over eight years Mr. Jaffe served as managing editor and editor of this magazine and carried on his work without compensation and at considerable financial sacrifice. During this period, the magazine AMERASIA was one of the few voices warning of the dangers ahead with Japan, and Mr. Jaffe himself was active in such organizations as the Committee for Nonparticipation in Japanese Aggression, of which Mr. Henry L. Stimson was the head.

If Mr. Jaffe has transgressed the law, it seems he has done so from an excess of journalistic zeal—

The COURT (interposing). There is no doubt but what he has.

Mr. ARENT. We recognize, technically, the violation—and not from any desire to enrich himself, as demonstrated by the character of the publication, or any intent to jeopardize the welfare of his country.

Mr. Jaffe's conduct has not been of the type which normally brings about criminal prosecution, even though a technical violation of the law is involved.

In all of his life Mr. Jaffe has had, heretofore, no experience of any kind with the criminal courts—he wants none. He has suffered severe humiliation and hardship from vicious and unjust publicity that stigmatized him with accusations of espionage, whereas the indictment charges a relatively minor violation which arose out of his anxiety to be accurately informed in the field of his scholarly and journalistic interest.

For personal and family reasons, such as the very grave illness of his wife, he is reluctant to go through with the ordeal of the trial. He pleads "guilty" in the belief that your Honor, upon acquainting yourself with the facts, will realize he already has suffered far more than his due, and that this Court will show consideration and mercy in the sentence it imposes.

Thank you.

The COURT. That is a very clear statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is your Honor prepared to dispose of the matter today?

The COURT. I think I would like to hear what the attitude of the Government is.

Mr. Arent has asked the Court for consideration and sympathy in the assessment of sentence. Does he mean by that that he wishes the Court to consider probation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That you will have to ask him.

The Government is prepared to review the matter and, if you see fit, if you see fit to receive them, to make recommendations.

The COURT. I think it would be well, perhaps, if, in view of the statement that has been made, which I understand you approve of as a correct statement—

Mr. HITCHCOCK (interposing). In substance, yes, Your Honor.

The COURT. In substance, it would look to be a case which might properly go to the Probation Officer for his investigation and report, and take the usual course of such cases with a view to possible probation, and, if that is done, that will give Mr. Jaffe an opportunity to make a showing there on the records which are kept by the Court in such matters and which is referred to the Court. I think that would be the better way in which to handle it.

Let it take its regular course this morning, the course in which the Court is willing to consider probation after the reference to the Probation Officer.

Is that approved by you?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I assume that prior to the imposition of sentence, which I think counsel hoped to be disposed of today inasmuch as we have the facts pertinent to the subject that perhaps even the Probation Officer would get not only from this District but would have to go to New York for, your Honor may wish to hear what the Government has to say.

Would your Honor be willing to listen to Government counsel and consider any suggestion made?

The COURT. Of course I will listen to Government counsel and consider any suggestion he made.

But I am wondering whether or not—do you have a written statement?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, your Honor; no written statement.

The COURT. How long would it take you to make a brief statement of the Government's case?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Less than five minutes.

The COURT. Well, I think I will sit here. Possibly we can dispose of it today.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I would prefer that if you feel you could do so.

The COURT. Very well. I will be glad to listen to you. I do not like to be in a hurry, but I am the only Judge sitting today.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The indictment, as counsel has pointed out, was returned during the July Term this year and charges this defendant, together with two others, with having conspired to commit a certain offense against the United States, particularly the taking and removing from Government files, primarily the State Department, Office of Naval Intelligence, Strategic Services and War Information, certain documents that belong to those various agencies.

The use to which they were put was, as I understand it, largely background material that Mr. Jaffe in the conduct of his AMERASIA magazine used to assist him in publishing articles and preparing arguments that would lend to its weight and, perhaps, its circulation. The magazine, we know as a matter of fact, was a losing proposition financially.

Mr. Jaffe, as editor and owner of the magazine, the sole owner of the magazine, enlisted the services of the two codefendants and perhaps others who were employed, one or both, by the State Department at the time the indictment was returned, or until shortly before the indictment was returned, and, in the instance of one of the codefendants prior to that time or to September last, or by the Office of Naval Intelligence in the Navy Department.

At the time the arrest was made in June of the defendant Jaffe, there were several hundred documents that on their face showed they emanated from these various Government agencies and copies of other documents that obviously had emanated from Government agencies.

That is, substantially, what the facts are.

The COURT. Let me ask you this question, please: Is there any evidence that the use to which these documents were put would be a use whereby injury or embarrassment would come to the Army or the Navy in the conduct of the war?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have no evidence of that, your Honor, and, furthermore, no evidence that they were intended to.

The COURT. Was there anything in the nature of publication that had that tendency?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was not, your Honor, so far as we know. So far as we know, there was nothing in the use put of these documents that had that tendency nor is there anything that we have in our possession that would indicate—in fact, quite to the contrary—that the defendant intended that they should have that tendency. To us, it was largely to the purpose of lending credence or variety to the publication itself, and perhaps increase its circulation and prestige.

The COURT. Was there any kind of compensation paid to the Government officials?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was no compensation paid to one. In the case of the other codefendant, there is evidence to the effect that with respect to an ancillary matter, namely, that this codefendant had made, over the period of years, he having been in the Far East during that time certain card indices in respect to Chinese officials, keeping them up, to date on their activities, upon their beliefs, politics, etc., and that the defendant Jaffe did pay to the codefendant Larsen or to his wife small amounts of money over a period of months, which is the only evidence we have to the effect they were paid, and that payment was for the transcription and typing of this particular card index, these particular cards, which were the personal property of the codefendant Larsen—they were not the property of any Governmental agency.

As a matter of fact, we believe it was through these contacts, in their inception, that this further complaint was made whereby Larsen and the other codefendant, and perhaps others, removed from the files for his use and made accessible and available to him the documents themselves.

Our quarrel is that the documents themselves, which is actually the property of the United States and various departments, were actually taken and removed to Jaffe's office and there retained by him and undoubtedly use by him—else, why take them?

The trial in this case, I assume, would involve four months. The disposition started today here may well resolve the trial of the case in its entirety—I don't know. Now that the war is over there is the difficulty of changing personnel, the difficulties of proof, of identifying documents, and the sources of documents, those difficulties will all be increased.

We recognize that the defendant has no criminal record of any description and, after discussing the matter with counsel, who have been very fair with the matter, the Government agreed, if the Court would care to consider same, it would like to make a recommendation in the case.

The COURT. I will be glad to have your recommendation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Namely, the imposition of no jail sentence but that a substantial fine be imposed.

The COURT. Will Mr. Jaffe pay the fine?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes. Our information is to the effect that the defendant Jaffe is a comparatively well-to-do man. He is the sole owner, we understand, of a prosperous greeting-card business, conducted largely by mail, and—

The COURT (interposing). What is the penalty under the statute?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The penalty under the statute is a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both.

The COURT. The regular conspiracy statute; the general conspiracy statute?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; Section 88.

Our belief is, the defendant not being criminal in his tendencies, we believe probation would serve no useful purpose in the case.

The COURT. Is that the course you ask the Court to take?

Mr. ARENT. Yes, your Honor.

I would like to offer one argument for making the fine perhaps less than what the Government may consider substantial, and that is this: The publicity in the early stages of this and before the indictment was returned did the man so much harm, made such serious accusations, that a very substantial fine would leave in the minds of a great many people the thought that this man was guilty of espionage; something he would spend a lifetime erasing.

We think a more modest fine may make the public realize—

The COURT (interposing). What would you consider a "modest fine" having $10,000 as a maximum?

Mr. ARENT. I see that New York counsel agrees with me: $2,000 would be a modest fine.

May I urge in connection with prompt disposition this: The defendant's wife was operated on for cancer two months ago. The pendency of these matters is a great strain on her. If the thing were cleared up completely it would certainly serve the purposes of the defendant very well. I can see no harm to the Government flowing from any such action.

The COURT. Well, I think I understand the matter sufficiently to dispose of it without further delay.

The question is: Both sides desire that course be taken?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Apparently there is no dispute except the difficulty between what is termed by defendant's counsel a modest fine and the statement of the Government as to a substantial fine.

The COURT. I did not ask you what a substantial fine was, but I think if I get the defendant's idea of it I can perhaps reach a fair conclusion.

Well, I regret, Mr. Jaffe, that you in your zeal to carry on your work, which was evidently for a trustworthy purpose, that you were misled to do these things which of course did tend to break down the fidelity of Government employees and officials in the performance of their work. I think you realize that. That is one of the reasons why you feel disposed to plead guilty. Looking back on the matter, you see that is wrong and certainly it is.

I accept without any doubt the assurance both of your counsel and of the Government attorneys that there was no thought or act upon your part which was intended or calculated or had a tendency to injure the Government or the military forces in the prosecution of the war. It would make quite a difference to me if I did not have that assurance and did not know, confidently, that that was true. Nevertheless, it is serious, as I have indicated, to interfere with or in any way influence in any manner, whether the motives are good or bad, the duties and the fidelity of Government employees. I am sure you realize that.

I do not want to lecture you and have no intention to. I simply want to indicate, briefly, the considerations which lead to this sentence I am about to impose: In view of what counsel has suggested as the course or the nature of the punishment, and the suggestion made by your own counsel with reference to it, I will impose a fine of Twenty-Five Hundred dollars.

That will be the judgment in the case.

Are you prepared to pay that fine now?

The DEFENDANT. Yes.

The COURT. Then you may settle it with the Clerk.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Your Honor, the Government appreciates your coming in and taking care of the matter this morning.

Mr. ARENT. Of course counsel for the defendant takes the same view.

(The Court then recessed.)

I, H. S. MIDDLEMISS, Official Court Reporter for the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, hereby certify that the foregoing is the official transcript of the proceedings had in said Court on the date hereinbefore stated incident to the changing by the named defendant of his plea to the indictment filed herein and the proceedings then and there had with respect the disposition of the case by the Court.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
CRIMINAL DIVISION No. 2

Criminal Action No. 75457

United States vs. Emmannel Sigurd Larsen, defendant

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 2, 1945.

The above-entitled matter came on for plea and sentence before Hon. JAMES M. PROCTOR, Associate Justice, at 12:10 o'clock p. m.

APPEARANCES:

ARTHUR J. HILLAND, Esq., for the Defendant.

R. M. HITCHCOCK, Esq., Department of Justice, for the United States.

PROCEEDINGS

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Court please, this is the second defendant in what has been known as the Jaffe case, Jaffe himself having been disposed of on a sentence by Your Honor under a plea of guilty on September 29, if I recall correctly. The Government has indicated that a plea of nolo contendere is acceptable and I would like to say what we feel about it.

The COURT. He has offered to enter that plea?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; and the Government feels the plea should be accepted.

The COURT. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Your Honor will recall that this indictment, which was returned in July, alleged that the defendants committed four offenses against the United States, that is, to unlawfully remove documents and records from the departments and agencies of the Government. Mr. Larsen, together with the other two defendants, Mr. Jaffe and Mr. Roth, entered a plea of not guilty on the 30th of August and subsequently on September 28 this defendant filed motions to quash, motions to suppress, and a demurrer which are still outstanding and I assume will be withdrawn.

The COURT. That would necessarily be so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, if this plea is accepted. As I told Your Honor in the Jaffe case, there was no element of disloyalty involved. Mr. Jaffe, who was the procurer, these two being employees of the Government, being a man of considerable means—

The COURT. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And who was and is the principal defendant and as I told you at that time I felt accepting a plea in Mr. Jaffe's case and imposing a fine rather than probation or imprisonment might resolve the entire case.

This is the second defendant. Mr. Larsen is a man of little means and really no means except the rather modest salary he was drawing.

The COURT. He does not hold that position now?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, he does not.

The COURT. Has he been disconnected from the public service?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He has been disassociated with the public service. Whether that will be permanent or not I cannot say. I am inclined to think it will. He has had no means of income at all.

We feel that Mr. Larsen, together with the defendant Roth, were corrupted by Mr. Jaffe. Of themselves they never would have been involved in these series of violations.

The COURT. Did they receive compensation for this?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, Your Honor. There was one element in the case when Mr. Jaffe was here that Mr. Jaffe did pay small sums of money to Mr. Larsen and Mr. Larsen's wife for the transcribing of information contained on some personnel cards made available to Mr. Jaffe by Mr. Larsen which has no connection except as to their acquaintanceship or knowledge. There was nothing criminal whatsoever.

The COURT. Who was the third man?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Lieutenant Andrew Roth, formerly of the United States Navy.

The COURT. He was attached to the State Department?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He was attached to the Office of Naval Intelligence to which Department Mr. Larsen was attached until last September, at which time he was transferred to the State Department.

The COURT. What has become of the Roth case?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Roth has a motion for a bill of particulars and a demurrer on file which has been adjourned from time to time. I think the final adjourned date will be in a week or ten days. I believe there will be a disposition of that case within a short time.

That very briefly, Your Honor, is our reason together with what I told you before which may deserve repetition now, that the war being over and these agencies closing the file in this case with the countless documents involved would involve at least four months work with very uncertain results.

The COURT. Mr. Hitchcock, what is your recommendation as to sentence?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Our recommendation as to sentence is that this defendant should be fined a substantially less sum than Mr. Jaffe. We had the sum of $500 in mind. Mr. Jaffe was fined $2,500 by Your Honor. If I understand your question correctly, my recommendation in this case would be of a fine substantially less than that in view of their financial discrepancies.

The COURT. It would be a fine that he can pay?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. A fine that he could pay, and our thought on that is a fine of $500 on the acceptance of a plea of nolo contendere.

Mr. HILLAND. I believe Mr. Hitchcock has covered pretty much what I might have said, Your Honor, had I been heard first. He has pointed out, in substance, this: This charge did not arise out of any career of crime. Mr. Larsen is a man of good character and excellent reputation, and he has had a hobby for a number of years of collecting and recording information on Chinese personalities. He pursued that hobby after he became a Government employee. He started in that in 1923 when he was in China and this charge grew out of the pursuit of that hobby. That is what happened.

There is one matter that I wanted to clear up. I do not think Mr. Hitchcock intended to use the word "corruption." There was no corruption about the payment of money or anything of that sort.

The COURT. I assume he means—

Mr. HITCHCOCK (interposing). If I may interrupt, what I said was that Mr. Jaffe corrupted this defendant and I have extreme doubt there were any corrupt motives on the part of Mr. Larsen.

Mr. HILLAND. I think the term should be misuse or abuse of friendship, misuse of Mr. Jaffe's friendship with Mr. Larsen.

The conduct involved was one that would not normally result in criminal prosecution but, as Your Honor knows, it was not the charge that we had here originally. Everyone concedes the original charge should never have been brought. There was no indictment on that charge and, of course, because of the seriousness of the original charge all of these defendants have suffered gravely; the charge that will probably attach to them the rest of their lives, even though they were innocent of it.

As Mr. Hitchcock has pointed out, Mr. Larsen is a man of most modest means and together with the other punishments he has endured, a fine of $500, as has been suggested, would be very severe and a substantial punishment to him.

The COURT. You may stand, Mr. Larsen.

I have no comment to make about the case. It is a case which probably has been given very serious consideration throughout and probably they have the public interest as much at heart as I have in this case and I am, therefore, inclined to accept their recommendation with respect to the disposition of it. Of course, that is induced by what is undoubtedly the past good record of this defendant. I do not assume there is any record of any kind against him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is none.

The COURT. There is not anything I need to say about it. With an intelligent defendant such as this gentleman is I would be lecturing him and I am not a very good lecturer, so I will refrain from any comments on it.

The sentence will be as recommended. I guess we omitted taking the formal plea. I will accept that plea of nolo contendere.

The CLERK. Emmanuel Sigurd Larsen, in Case 75,457, in which you are charged with violation of Section 88, Title 18, of the United States Code, do you wish to withdraw your plea of not guilty heretofore entered?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes.

The CLERK. And enter a plea of nolo contendere?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes.

The COURT. The fine will be $500.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. May the record show, Your Honor, that the motions made by Mr. Hilland and I are now withdrawn?

Mr. HILLAND. Yes, if the Court please.

The COURT. Yes.

Mr. HILLAND. I suppose technically that would be all that would be needed because when we started out we withdrew our plea of not guilty theretofore entered.

The COURT. That is withdrawn and the plea of nolo contendere is now entered. I assume the defendant will pay that fine now.

Mr. HILLAND. Yes, I understand he will.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, June 19, 1950.

HONORABLE MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This will acknowledge your letter of June 14, 1950 inquiring as to what the records of the Department of Justice may reflect concerning the status of the entity which published Amerasia during the year 1945.

According to the information available to us, Amerasia, Inc. was dissolved on January 21, 1944 as recorded in the Certificate of Dissolution on file with the County Clerk, New York County, file number 1229-1937. On and after this date, Philip J. Jaffe, published the magazine Amerasia as a sole proprietorship.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

OFFICE OF THE EDITOR

JUNE 26, 1950.

MR. JAMES J. MCINERNEY,

*Assistant Attorney General, Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR MR. MCINERNEY: Thank you very much for your long letter explaining in detail the question of the documents in the Amerasia case. I am enclosing a clipping of your letter as it appeared in America for July 1st. This will correct the oversimplified version of the facts we have previously given.

My own impression is that you might have protected yourself against the misunderstanding if you had made a somewhat more guarded denial of the existence of the "documents."

Sincerely yours,

REV. ROBERT C. HARTNETT, S. J.,
Editor.

[From America, July 1, 1950]

CORRESPONDENCE

THE AMERASIA CASE

EDITOR: Your June 17 editorial on the Amerasia case has been brought to my attention. One paragraph reads as follows:

"If Senator Tydings' attitude bred mistrust of the Administration's handling of the loyalty investigation, on May 31 James M. McInerney, Assistant Attorney General, did his best to deepen public suspicion of the Democratic party's motives. As spokesman for the Justice Department he denied that the documents publicized by Mr. Andrews existed. Two days later he recanted. The documents, as described by Mr. Andrews, did exist, he admitted, and were found in the offices of Amerasia. The Herald Tribune's ace correspondent, who first broke the news of the secret Yalta agreements, had scored again."

In the interest of truth and accuracy I should like to set forth the facts with respect to this matter.

I read Bert Andrews' article on the morning it appeared in the New York Herald Tribune. Neither I nor three associates could identify the "documents" on the basis of the descriptions set forth in the news story. Later that same day several reporters inquired of me concerning the "documents" in question. At that time I told them that I did not recognize the "documents" as they were described in the morning news story.

I would like to discuss briefly the news stories upon which your editorial was apparently based. In Mr. Andrews' story, one of the "documents" was described in the following terms:

"One document, over the signature of former Secretary of State Cordell Hull, seemed, on the surface, to picture Amerasia, a magazine plugging for Soviet interests in Asia, as a veritable bible on what to do in the Far East." [Emphasis added.]

The date and addressee were not stated, and among the very large number of documents in this five-year-old case I did not recall one over the signature of Mr. Hull which "seemed, on the surface to picture Amerasia * * * as a veritable bible on what to do in the Far East." There was found in the Amerasia office a cable which merely quotes five paragraphs from the July 1944 issue of the magazine, without any comment, endorsement or observation of any kind. It was one of hundreds of press clips sent to our representatives abroad by the Public Relations office of the State Department for the purpose of keeping them informed of the news developments here. I am sure you will readily agree that it would be difficult to associate this news despatch with the testimonial described by Bert Andrews.

Another "document" is described by Mr. Andrews in these words:

"One document tells exactly where more than a score of American submarines were in the last stages of the war in the Pacific, and it was taken out of the Navy Department at the time when top admirals shuddered at the thought of the slightest leak about their undersea plans. [Emphasis added.]

There is no such "document" in the Amerasia case and no such "document" was ever taken out of the Navy Department under the circumstances described in the newspaper article. What Mr. Andrews refers to is a personal note by an unidentified person, summarizing a speech on the Far East made by Mr. Grew before State Department personnel about six weeks after a tour of the Far East, in which he stated that some twenty-five American submarines in the Tshushima Strait were doing great damage to Japanese shipping.

The third "document" mentioned in the newspaper article was described thus:

"One document was in the most highly secret category of all—"for eyes only"—and it was a message from the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek."

No such "document" as described is contained among the Amerasia exhibits. However, there was found a personal note which refers to such a message and its transmission. Not being a Government document, this memorandum bears no classification, of course, and from its appearance it may have been prepared by a newspaperman. Its author was never identified.

The fourth and last "document" was described in the newspaper article as follows:

"One document disclosed the complete operations plan of a hush-hush Government agency on certain matters."

When queried with respect to this "document," I advised the newspaper reporters that its description was too vague to hazard an opinion as to whether or not it was included among the Amerasia exhibits.

The distinction as to whether the information existed in the form of Government documents or in unidentified personal notes is a necessary one, since it is obvious that Mr. Andrews' article, my answers to the press and your editorial references are predicated upon and deal exclusively with the contents of stolen "Government documents."

I would like to make it clear that I did not recant, as stated in your editorial, and most certainly did not admit the existence of the "documents," as described by Mr. Andrews. It is my opinion that both Mr. Andrews and the public were misinformed as to the true facts and their significance.

JAMES M. McINERNEY,
Assistant Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1950.

EDWARD P. MORGAN, Esquire,
Counsel, Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee, United States Capitol Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORGAN: Enclosed for your information and such use as you may deem appropriate is a mimeographed copy of the presentment returned and filed by the Special Grand Jury in the Southern District of New York on June 15, 1950. This copy differs from the copy previously furnished to you in that it sets out the names of the signers thereto.

This Special Grand Jury, as you know, was in existence for its full legal duration and devoted its attention exclusively to espionage and related matters.

Respectfully,

JAMES M. McINERNEY,
Assistant Attorney General
(For the Attorney General).

Enclosure No. 79352

[Distributed by the Federal Grand Jury Association for the Southern District of New York, 101 Park Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.]

PRESENTMENT OF CONCLUSIONS OF GRAND JURY INVESTIGATION INTO ESPIONAGE

(Submitted to and accepted, approved, and ordered filed by Judge John W. Clancy, June 15, 1950)

WHEREAS the undersigned constitute all the members of the December 16, 1948, Special Federal Grand Jury of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, impaneled to inquire into espionage and subversive activities; and

WHEREAS this Federal Grand Jury has heard a volume of testimony concerning the activities of many men and women, associated with or having knowledge of a continuing conspiracy against the security of the nation; and

WHEREAS this testimony and evidence have led this Special Federal Grand Jury to certain conclusions it deems proper and important to be brought to the attention of the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Departments of the United States Government for such action as may be necessary or appropriate, the undersigned members of this Grand Jury respectfully show and allege as follows:

1. The safety of this nation and its institutions is being jeopardized because:

(a) The underground activities of communists in this country, organized in a continuing conspiracy and using effective techniques to extend their influence beyond their ranks, have greatly increased during the last five years; and because

(b) The nation, confronted with an entirely new situation in its history—a situation in which for the first time the loyalty of certain of its own citizens has been diverted to a foreign ideology—has not as yet devised adequate means to combat this menace; and because

(c) There has been and is now a concerted attempt on the part of many, both communists and disloyal Americans aided by "fellow travelers," to conceal the truth from the American people.

This conviction was arrived at by the Grand Jury after an experience in which it came face to face with the evil that is communism. Its substitution of the false for the true as the standard of judgment has introduced into human affairs a new attack on man's integrity.

The American people cannot afford to tolerate evil of this character particularly in their government nor on the other hand can they deny their fellow citizens those civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution. But among such civil rights is no the rights to be employed by the government and the people are correct in demanding that all entrusted with the welfare and safety of the country be above suspicion.

2. This Grand Jury in a presentment submitted on April 26, 1949, warned the American people against the prevalence and increase of espionage activities. It specifically stated that existing laws applicable to espionage are "inadequate and unrealistic." It stated that these laws were loosely drawn. The Grand Jury now repeats that such laws are riddled with loopholes. Previously it recommended that new legislation or the amendment of existing legislation be enacted promptly. The Grand Jury now repeats that recommendation. Such legislation—the Internal Security Bill which embodies satisfactory provisions—has already been passed by the House of Representatives and is now in Senate Committee. It should be speedily brought to passage and made the law of the land.

3. The Grand Jury, in the same presentment, stated: "Having seen at first hand the difficulties in arriving at the truth concerning espionage violations, when witnesses have been alerted by publicized charges and countercharges, the Grand Jury recommends that all investigating bodies conduct their inquiries into espionage in secret." It repeats that recommendation. The latter does not imply that when such investigations are completed secrecy should thereafter prevail. It does imply that the half-public, half-secret operation of any investigatory agency is both confusing and harmful; and that no permanent good can be served unless a conclusive report is presented to the American people which will be convincing in its thoroughness and its honesty.

4. The Grand Jury system was anciently established as the representative of the people, to insure law and order and to protect the people against injustice, maladministration and lawlessness. The Grand Jury is vested with the broadest and most unlimited powers, and has no legal responsibility for its decisions, unless corruptly made, to any public officer or to any branch of the Government. It not only can but it must conduct inquiry into violations of the Federal laws on its own initiative and, acting alone, it has the power of subpoena. Where it knows evidence exists which has not been presented to it, its duty is to order such evidence produced.

The very existence of this grand-jury system is a bulwark of independence. The grand jury's purpose is at once to ferret out the guilty and to protect the innocent whether the former is shielded by powerful influences or the latter is unjustly accused.

This Grand Jury has been surprised at the prevalent ignorance of its functions, an ignorance that apparently extends into areas where the Grand Jury's cooperation should be sought. The individual citizen himself in or out of the Government not only has the right but the obligation, when he has evidence of the law's violation, to present this evidence to a grand jury.

By law, this Grand Jury expires on June 15, 1950, after serving its maximum legal term of eighteen months. It believes this time limitation is wisely established for no group should be longer entrusted with such powers. But the experience and insight which it has acquired have been valuable adjuncts in its deliberations and in the establishment of a record available to any successor grand jury. From such experience, this Grand Jury is convinced that a similar body should promptly be impaneled so that it can immediately equip itself with the necessary knowledge to assay all evidence of espionage and subversive activities presented to it.

This Grand Jury, therefore, strongly recommends the impaneling of a new Grand Jury in the Southern District of New York to carry on both the work which now remains uncompleted and that which will arise in the future.

5. In its 18 months, this Grand Jury has had an intimate insight into the operation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and has come to have the highest regard for the efficiency, the thoroughness, and the honesty with which its affairs are conducted under J. Edgar Hoover. In the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the nation has one of its most potent agencies to protect its security. The present Congress should be commended for its recent action in strengthening the hand of Mr. Hoover in this vital work.

6. The Grand Jury is not convinced that the Loyalty Boards established by the Government are sufficient protection against the infiltration of communists or of the communist-inspired into governmental departments.

It is further convinced that the security of the country, is not adequately protected if a Loyalty Board limits its inquiry involving governmental employees to a determination of the individual's loyalty. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, on his retirement as Secretary of Commerce, called public attention to this inadequacy and stated that, since all governmental departments "today deal with secret information," each and all their employees should be good security risks, and hence should be screened by standards that include "the company they keep and stability of character."

The Grand Jury endorses Mr. Whitney's position and recommends that Congress study means to insure against the government's employment of any individual who is "a poor security risk;" and meanwhile repeats that no citizen is invested with the right to work in government.

7. This Grand Jury has been greatly disturbed by certain court procedures in recent trials concerning communism and espionage. The maneuverings of defense lawyers have not only violated the decorum of judicial procedure but have furthered the communist objective of establishing anarchy by undermining respect for the courts. Yet in pretrial and trial hearings of espionage cases, such attorneys under existing laws are often in a position to force on the prosecution the dilemma of choice between not proceeding or proceeding at the expense of revealing information injurious to national security. This choice is particularly grave when the nation is at war.

The Grand Jury recommends to the proper authorities that a competent and exhaustive study be made by legal experts to determine if this situation cannot at least be mitigated.

8. The Grand Jury has been shocked at the lack of cooperation shown by certain lawyers who have appeared before it as witnesses, who refused to answer questions on the ground of self-incrimination, and who disregarded their obligations as citizens to further the ends of justice. If such a position is taken by any governmental employee, he or she would be ipso facto dismissed. Lawyers are officers of the court.

The Grand Jury, repeating its recommendation of April 1949, urges the judiciary and bar associations to take measures to disbar lawyers who refuse to answer questions on grounds of self-incrimination before judicial bodies, grand juries, or governmental boards of inquiry.

9. The Grand Jury, acting on its own authority, instituted an investigation into the Amerasia case. In the time legally available to it, it has not been able to conduct an exhaustive an inquiry as it would desire. It has examined a number of witnesses, always with counsel of the Department of Justice present.

The Grand Jury, sworn to secrecy, may speak to the American public either through an indictment or a presentment and hence now advances the following conclusions:

(a) The Office of Strategic Service, which precipitated the Amerasia case, acted in a responsible manner.

(b) The officials immediately concerned between that time and the arrests of the six accused, acted in a responsible manner. The Federal Bureau of Investigation properly performed its duty, a duty which was not only conditioned on bringing criminals to justice, but on the equally important considerations of thwarting further crime and protecting national security.

(c) The Grand Jury has found no evidence that any official acted improperly in regard to the delay in the arrests.

(d) The Grand Jury also has found no evidence to indicate that the Department of Justice was remiss in its prosecution of the case. If laws governing espionage had been different, the Grand Jury believes that the prosecution procedure would have been entirely different. Other telling factors involved certain legal procedures which, if followed, might have revealed to the enemy information that it was essential should be withheld. The determination of many of the legal issues involved, in particular the admissibility of evidence, would require a long and intensive study.

(e) The number of government documents seized is not important, save as a demonstration that precautions against their theft from governmental departments were entirely inadequate. It is important, however, that a certain number of these documents pertained to national defense and that others of a different nature, in the hands of the enemy, would have aided it.

(f) The Grand Jury believes that the American people have been poorly served by the compounding of confusion through disclosures of half-truths, contradictory statements, etc., in this and similar cases.

(g) The Grand Jury believes that, at this juncture, it would be salutary if the Justice Department would issue a public statement of the details of its handling of the case beginning with the time of the arrests, including a complete list and description of all documents or papers found in the office of Amerasia by any government agent or in the possession of those arrested; and the reasons for the various steps taken by the prosecution.

10. As Special Assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, Thomas J. Donegan has served this Grand Jury, as he did its predecessor, from the day of its impaneling to that of its discharge. It has always been cognizant of his high purpose, his unquestioned probity, his unremitting zeal, and his devotion to duty. His knowledge of communism and the laws relating to the prosecution of espionage and subversion is expert. The country owes him a debt of gratitude.

11. Now, therefore, the Grand Jury respectfully petitions the court to accept this presentment and order it filed, authorizing the foreman and the secretary of the Grand Jury to send copies of it to the members of Congress and to the proper officers of the Executive Department of the Government, and to permit such other use as may properly be made of this document.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., May 12, 1950.

To Whom It May Concern:

I certify that I have attended Mr. John Huber, 15 Courtland Street, Mount Vernon, N. Y., on several occasions in the last three weeks. It is my honest opinion that Mr. John Huber, though physically sound, is on the verge of a mental collapse, probably induced by the terrific strain that he has been under.

In view of those findings I recommended that Mr. Huber should take a 2-3 weeks vacation with complete isolation from the outside world.

SEC. 401. This title may be cited as the "Act for International Development".

SEC. 402. The Congress hereby finds as follows:

(a) The peoples of the United States and other nations have a common interest in the freedom and in the economic and social progress of all peoples. Such progress can further the secure growth of democratic ways of life, the expansion of mutually beneficial commerce, the development of international understanding and good will, and the maintenance of world peace.

(b) The efforts of the peoples living in economically under-developed areas of the world to realize their full capabilities and to develop the resources of the lands in which they live can be furthered through the cooperative endeavor of all nations to exchange technical knowledge and skills and to encourage the flow of investment capital.

(c) Technical assistance and capital investment can make maximum contribution to economic development only where there is understanding of the mutual advantages of such assistance and investment and where there is confidence of fair and reasonable treatment and due respect for the legitimate interests of the peoples of the countries to which the assistance is given and in which the investment is made and of the countries from which the assistance and investments are derived. In the case of investment this involves confidence on the part of the people of the under-developed areas that investors will conserve as well as develop local resources, will bear a fair share of local taxes and observe local laws, and will provide adequate wages and working conditions for local labor. It involves confidence on the part of investors, through intergovernmental agreements or otherwise, that they will not be deprived of their property without prompt, adequate, and effective compensation; that they will be given reasonable opportunity to remit their earnings and withdraw their capital; that they will have reasonable freedom to manage, operate, and control their enterprises; that they will enjoy security in the protection of their persons and property, including industrial and intellectual property, and nondiscriminatory treatment in taxation and in the conduct of their business affairs.

SEC. 403. (a) It is declared to be the policy of the United States to aid the efforts of the peoples of economically underdeveloped areas to develop their resources and improve their working and living conditions by encouraging the exchange of technical knowledge and skills and the flow of investment capital to countries which provide conditions under which such technical assistance and capital can effectively and constructively contribute to raising standards of living, creating new sources of wealth, increasing productivity, and expanding purchasing power.

(b) It is further declared to be the policy of the United States that in order to achieve the most effective utilization of the resources of the United States, private and public, which are or may be available for aid in the development of economically underdeveloped areas, agencies of the United States Government, in reviewing requests of foreign governments for aid for such purposes, shall take into consideration (1) whether the assistance applied for is an appropriate part of a program reasonably designed to contribute to the balanced and integrated development of the country or area concerned; (2) whether any works or facilities which may be projected are actually needed in view of similar facilities existing in the area and are otherwise economically sound; and (3) with respect to projects for which capital is requested, whether private capital is available either in the country or elsewhere upon reasonable terms and in sufficient amounts to finance such projects.

SEC. 404. (a) In order to accomplish the purposes of this title, the United States is authorized to participate in multilateral technical cooperation programs carried on by the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and their related organizations, and by other international organizations, wherever practicable.

(b) Within the limits of appropriations made available to carry out the purposes of this title, the President is authorized to make contributions to the United Nations for technical cooperation programs carried on by it and its related organizations which will contribute to accomplishing the purposes of this title as effectively as would participation in comparable programs on a bilateral basis. The President is further authorized to make contributions for technical cooperation programs carried on by the Organization of American States, its related organizations, and by other international organizations.

(c) Agencies of the United States Government on request of international organizations are authorized, upon approval by the President, to furnish services and such facilities as may be necessary in connection therewith, on an advance of funds or reimbursement basis, for such organizations in connection with their technical cooperation programs. Amounts received as reimbursements from such organizations shall be credited, at the option of the appropriate agency, either to the appropriation, fund, or account utilized in incurring the obligation, or to an appropriate appropriation, fund, or account currently available for the purposes for which expenditures were made.

(d) To make, within appropriations made available for the purpose, advances and grants in aid of technical cooperation programs to any person, corporation, or other body of persons, or to any foreign government or foreign government agency.

(e) To make and perform contracts or agreements in respect of technical cooperation programs on behalf of the United States Government with any person, corporation, or other body of persons however designated, whether within or without the United States, or with any foreign government or foreign government agency: Provided, That with respect to contracts or agreements which entail commitments for the expenditure of funds appropriated pursuant to the authority of this title, such contracts or agreements, within the limits of appropriations or contract authorizations hereafter made available may, subject to any future action of the Congress, run for not to exceed three years in any one case.

(f) To provide for printing and binding outside the continental limits of the United States, without regard to section 11 of the Act of March 1 1919 (41 U. S. C. 111).

(g) To provide for the publication of information made available by the joint commissions referred to in section 410, and from other sources, regarding resources, opportunities for private investment capital, and the need for technical knowledge and skill in each participating country.

SEC. 406. Agreements made by the United States under the authority of this title with other governments and with international organizations shall be registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of article 102 of the United Nations Charter.

SEC. 407. In carrying out the programs authorized in section 405 of this title—

(a) The participation of private agencies and persons shall be sought to the greatest extent practicable.

(b) Due regard shall be given, in reviewing requests for assistance, to the possibilities of achieving satisfactory results from such assistance as evidenced by the desire of the country requesting it (1) to take steps necessary to make effective use of the assistance made available, including the encouragement of the flow of productive local and foreign investment capital where needed for development; and (2) to endeavor to facilitate the development of the colonies, possessions, dependencies, and non-self-governing territories administered by such requesting country so that such areas may make adequate contribution to the effectiveness of the assistance requested.

(c) Assistance shall be made available only where the President determines that the country being assisted—

(2) Provides all necessary information concerning such program and gives the program full publicity.

Place: Room 2254, New State.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN S. SERVICE

(The Board convened at 10:05 a. m.)

The CHAIRMAN. Are you ready to proceed?

Mr. RHETTS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Loyalty Security Board will be in order for consideration of the case of John Stewart Service, whose representative is Mr. Charles E. Rhettts, member of the firm of Reilly, Rhettts & Ruckelshaus, 1120 Tower Building, Washington, D. C. Miss Annette Pettis of the Foreign Service staff will assist counsel in the handling of the documents which will be in the case.

The Secretary of State has been granted by Congress the right, in his absolute discretion, to terminate the employment of any officer or employee of the Department of State or of the Foreign Service of the United States whenever he shall deem such termination necessary or advisable in the interest of the United States. (Title I, Public Law 490, 79th Cong., 2d sess.; title I, Public Law 166, 80th Cong., 1st sess.; title I, Public Law 597, 80th Cong., 2d sess.; Public Law 179, 81st Cong., 1st sess.)

In order to give effect to this act, the Secretary of State has promulgated regulations and procedures setting forth the revised loyalty and security principles of the Department of State and hearing procedure of the Loyalty Security Board. This document, a copy of which was forwarded to Mr. Service on March 27, 1950, sets forth in detail the categories of persons deemed to constitute security risks.

On July 9, 1947, the Secretary of State promulgated departmental announcement 611 establishing a Personnel Security Board consisting of three members to review security and investigative records of departmental and foreign service personnel whose cases are to be considered for termination as security risks. Subsequently, Conrad E. Snow was designated chairman, Theodore Achilles and Arthur G. Stevens, alternate members of this Board, and Allen B. Moreland, legal officer.

Mr. Service is specifically charged as follows:

"The specific charges are that within the meaning of section 392.2.f of Regulations and Procedures of the Department of State, you are a member or, or in sympathetic association with the Communist Party which has been designated by the Attorney General as an organization which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means; and further that within the meaning of section 393.1.d of said regulations and procedures you are a person who has habitual or close association with persons known or believed to be in the category set forth in section 393.1.a of said regulations and procedures to an extent which would justify the conclusion that you might, through such association, voluntarily or involuntarily, divulge classified information without authority."

The procedure for hearings under the Regulations and Procedures of the Department of State specifies:

1. A notice setting forth the nature of the charge in factual detail, setting forth with particularity the facts and circumstances relating to the charges so far as security considerations will permit, in order to enable the employee to submit his answer, defense, or explanation.

2. A right to answer the charges in writing, under oath or affirmation, within a reasonable period of time, not less than 10 calendar days from the date of receipt by the employee of the notice or:

3. A right to have an administrative hearing on the charges before the Loyalty Security Board not less than 15 calendar days after notice of the charges, and

4. A right to appear before the Loyalty Security Board personally, to be represented by a counsel or representative of own choice, and to present evidence on own behalf.

It should be pointed out that the transcript of the hearing will not include all material in the file of the case, in that it will not include reports of investigation conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which are confidential; that also the transcript will not contain information concerning the identity of confidential informants or information which will reveal the source of confidential evidence; and that the transcript will contain only the evidence in the letter of charges and interrogatory, if any, and the evidence actually taken at the hearing.

It is understood Mr. Service has presented to the Board a written statement, which is within his right under the procedure, and that, after introduction at this time, it will facilitate the further examination of the witness.

Mr. RHETTS. Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I should like, before doing that if I might, to make a short statement about the other material we have already submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel may make a statement.

Mr. RHETTS. We submitted to the Board yesterday afternoon three copies of a document book, which is in several parts and which I should like briefly, if I may, to describe for the record. When you open the book to the immediate left are two sets of papers, one is a paper headed "Chronology of Events" which is designed to indicate in skeleton form, for the Board, basic dates. The left-hand columns show the movements and current activities as of any current movement of Mr. Service. In the right-hand column are listed other events and activities which have a bearing upon and against which Mr. Service's activities were carried on.

I think this may be of value to the Board as a reference document so that you may readily see where Mr. Service was at any given point and time under discussion.

Behind this document, on the left-hand flap, there is a numerical sequential list of numbers of the documents which are going to be dealt with in the course of the hearing. Not all these documents will be introduced in evidence. The first 100 documents include not only items that we introduce in evidence but various working papers that are in our actual file but they are included so that as we refer to document numbers, the Board can get a general idea what the paper is we are talking about by reference to this list.

The second series of numbers in this list, which begins with 101 and go through 227, are a list of the reports prepared by Mr. Service during the period, roughly, between May 1942 and April 1945 on a whole variety of matters; that is to say, they represent reports and memoranda which he, partly as a Foreign Service officer attached to the Embassy and later while attached to the staff of General Stilwell, prepared in the ordinary course of business, and you will have occasion to refer to these at some length.

This list of documents, I may say, is not a complete collection of all the work product of Mr. Service during this period. It represents all we have been able, by the most diligent research, to lay our hands on and collect out of the files of the State Department.

Then the series of documents on your right, as the folder opens, with tabs from 10 to 95, are excerpts from certain of the basic documents, such as material contained in the Congressional Record and material published in various magazine articles and the like, substantially consisting of the sources of various charges that have been made against Mr. Service.

We shall have occasion to refer to these from time to time and I think you will find they are readily usable because, for example, if you want to open document 31 you may pull that tab and then there are subnumbers setting forth different excerpts.

Behind this is a copy of a personal statement by Mr. Service, and on the reverse side of the folder, to the left, there are a series of excerpts from some of the reports prepared by Mr. Service during the period involved, these representing, in our view, certain key documents which we will want to actually have incorporated in the transcript and will be accordingly offered.

On the right-hand side of the back cover of the folder is an excerpt from the Congressional Record for May 22, 1950, which contains the report of the Hobbs subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, which was made in 1946 as a result of a resolution introduced by Representative Dondero, together with what purports to be all the testimony which was given before the closed hearings before that subcommittee. This material has very important bearing on this case.

Finally, behind that material are certain excerpts from the so-called white paper, entitled "U. S. Relations with China," a publication of the State Department.

Now I should like at this time to offer in evidence this document book with certain exceptions. I propose to offer in evidence the entire book with the exception of documents 198, 206, and 207, and with the exception of Mr. Service's personal statement, which I propose to offer separately in just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you identify 198, 206, and 207?

Mr. RHETTS. You will find them, if you will turn your document book over, in that series, 198, 206, and 207. I may say that I wish them to be available to the Board and we will make use of them but for certain reasons I will be glad to make known, I do not offer them in evidence at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. This book with all its contents may be accepted as an exhibit, and so marked and we will not at this present time incorporate any portion of it in the transcript.

(Document book was admitted in evidence and marked Exhibit I.)

Mr. RHETTS. As the proceeding goes along I shall propose from time to time to offer and ask there be included in the transcript certain portions of this book.

The CHAIRMAN. You have some statement to make with reference to Mr. Service's own statement?

(Off the record.)

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel desires me to make clear that this exhibit, as well as all other exhibits, will be incorporated in the record of the case but not necessarily printed in the transcript except insofar as offered by counsel from time to time during the hearing.

Mr. RHETTS. That is my understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you proceed?

Mr. RHETTS. If I might make one further statement before we come to testimony. I should like very briefly to suggest to the Board the general scheme by which we at least propose to go at this case. As we see it, the case divides itself into about three grand divisions, the first of which is what we have, as a shorthand term, characterized the China charges. These are charges which Gen. Patrick Hurley is said to be the grandfather and appeared originally in the course of General Hurley's testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in December 1945.

These charges of General Hurley, relating to Mr. Service, consist in general of charges that he was pro-Communist, that he undertook to sabotage American foreign policy in China, as General Hurley was attempting to execute it, and that Mr. Service, along with other Foreign Service officers, was in general engaged in attempting to defeat the accomplishment of American foreign policy.

These charges by General Hurley have been repeated over and over. They have been picked up by Congressman Dondero, repeated by him, and picked up by Congressman Judd, and repeated by him. They have appeared in one form or another in various magazines such as Plain Talk, an article purported to be written by Mr. Emmanuel Larsen and published by Mr. Joseph Kamp, America Betrayed, and most recently they have been repeated over and over by Senator McCarthy, so that we shall attempt to deal (1) with this area of charges, as they made the first major division.

The second major division in the case, as we see it, arises out of Mr. Service's involvement in the so-called Amerasia case. Consequently, we shall propose to deal with that general subject matter as the second large division.

The third area of charges relate to certain allegations that have been made about Mr. Service during the period when he was on duty in Tokyo in the year 1945, and so we shall deal with that as a third major division.

As far as we are concerned, we are ready to proceed with the first division, which we shall treat generally as China matters.

The CHAIRMAN. May I insert a question which I should have asked earlier as to the oral elucidation of the charges made for the benefit of the counsel for Mr. Service.

Mr. MORELAND. Mr. Service has been informed that various allegations have been made that he is pro-Communist. The allegations have indicated that this is reflected in his writings and that while serving in China and Japan he consorted with Communists; and further that while in the United States he consorted with alleged Communists and Communist sympathizers and turned over to them classified documents without authority.

He has further been informed that the members of the Board are concerned with his associations with the following persons: E. S. Larsen, Mark J. Gayn, Kate L. Mitchell, Phillip J. Jaffe, Thomas A. Bisson, and Andrew Roth.

Mr. RHETTS. Mr. Chairman, I would also like to insert at this time a letter on behalf of Mr. Service which was written to Mr. Peurifoy, Assistant Secretary of State, by Mr. C. Martin Wilbur, associate professor of Chinese history at Columbia University.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be accepted.

(Letter, dated March 28, 1950, from Mr. C. Martin Wilbur, Columbia University, to Mr. John R. Peurifoy was admitted in evidence and marked "exhibit 2.")

Mr. RHETTS. I should like to offer at this time document No. 93-1.

The CHAIRMAN. In exhibit 1?

Mr. RHETTS. Which is a portion of Mr. Service's personal history statement; that is, it is that portion of it which deals with the China affairs. It represents the first 34 pages of the statement which appears in the document book. I ask that this be incorporated into the transcript at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. You say that is numbered 93?

Mr. RHETTS. No. 93. It shows up under your tab "Personal statement."

The CHAIRMAN. In the book as part of the record it shows up not as 93 but under the tab.

Mr. RHETTS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The first 34 pages of the document 93 may be inserted in the record, and at this point I think we should have Mr. Service take oath and swear to the truth of what he says.

Mr. John S. Service, having been duly sworn, testified in his own behalf as follows:

Mr. RHETTS. With reference to document 93-1, which has been offered for inclusion in the transcript, this is your own personal statement you offer to the Board under oath?

Mr. SERVICE. That is correct.

"PERSONAL STATEMENT OF JOHN S. SERVICE—PART 1

"You gentlemen, I am sure, already know a good deal about me but perhaps you will allow me first to give a consecutive summary of my background and career.

"My parents were missionaries in China. In 1906 my father had been sent to Chengtu, the capital city of the extreme far western province of Szechwan to set up the work of the YMCA in that field. Chengtu is about 1600 miles inland due west of Shanghai. Here I was born in 1909.

"My first visit to the United States was when I was 6 years old. My father spent his furlough on a year's assignment to the central YMCA at Cleveland, Ohio, and I attended first grade in a public school in one of the suburbs of Cleveland. Just after my seventh birthday we returned to Chengtu and I remained there for the next 4 years. Chengtu was extremely remote, and the foreign community was small. There was a school operated by a Canadian mission for the children of missionaries but my mother and father were determined that I was to have an American education. The only solution was for my mother to teach me at home, using an American home-study course. This decision of my parents seems, as I look back on it, a typical one. They were anxious that their children not lose their American heritage although forced to grow up abroad. At a very early age I became an omnivorous reader and probably grew up with more knowledge of American history and America generally than many children living in this country.

"By my eleventh birthday I had completed the Calvert course and it became difficult for my mother to carry me further. I was sent to Shanghai where the Shanghai American school was the largest and had the reputation of being the best school in China for American children. I remained here for 4 years. In 1924 my parents were given their second furlough. We lived in Berkeley, Calif., which was my father's home. I attended Berkeley High School and graduated in June 1925 at the age of 15. In the fall of that year I returned to China with my parents and worked as an apprentice draftsman in the architectural offices of the YMCA National Committee of Shanghai. In the winter of 1926 I commenced a trip alone through southeast Asia, India, and Europe, which brought me back to the United States in time to enter Oberlin College in Ohio in the fall of 1927.

"During college I proved that I could be a good student if I was interested. I was active in sports, being captain of two teams, was president of the men's honor court and was active in other extracurricular activities. I partially supported myself by waiting tables and by summer jobs. After graduation in 1931 I returned to Oberlin for a year of graduate work in the history of art, thinking at this time that I would like to prepare myself for college teaching. The experience was sufficient to convince me otherwise and I became interested in the Foreign Service. In September 1932, after some independent study, I took the written examinations in San Francisco, passed them and came to Washington for the orals in January 1933 which I also passed. I learned in Washington however, that there was no likelihood of early appointment to the Foreign Service. I therefore returned to China, where my parents were now living in Shanghai, and applied for a Foreign Service clerkship. In June 1933 I was appointed clerk in the consulate at Kunning, in the then very isolated Province of Yunnan in the extreme southwest of China. This was a small post; the staff was one vice consul, myself, and two or three Chinese clerks. I did the typing, filing, coding, and gradually took over miscellaneous duties such as the handling of commercial letters and most of the citizenship and visa work. My fiancée, who was a classmate of mine at Oberlin, came out to China and we were married and had our first child. In July 1934 I was made a noncareer vice consul. I have always considered this experience at Kunning to have been valuable. Since it was a small post I had an opportunity to learn something about every phase of Foreign Service work. I gained detailed knowledge of an area of China which was later to become extremely important and which at that time was a case study of Chinese war-lord politics. Twice I was left in charge for brief periods.

"In October 1935 the first appointments to the career service were made and I was commissioned Foreign Service officer, unclassified (C). Having already indicated a willingness to volunteer for the specialized China branch of the Service, I was transferred directly to the Embassy at Peiping as a language attaché. I arrived in Peiping with my family in December 1935 and for the next 2 years my duties were to study the language, history, geography, economics, and laws of China. My childhood knowledge of Chinese gave me something of a head start but it had been a poor dialect and I had never learned to read Chinese. I worked hard and I believe made a good record as a student, not only of the language but also of the background subjects.

"China has always had a deep interest for me. To a technician in the field of foreign relations—which is one of the basic functions of a Foreign Service officer—it presents uniquely complex and difficult problems. For this Board, there is of course no need to have these problems spelled out in detail. But a few words may be permitted since in a very real way it was my inevitable involvement, as a reporting officer on the spot, in trying to find solutions to these problems—solutions which would best serve the long-range interests of the United States and be within American capabilities and willingness to act—which has led to my present difficulties.

"China is the world's greatest mass of humanity. Weak, burdened with probably insoluble economic problems, loosely organized, backward in every modern sense, it has been undergoing a tremendous upheaval and revolution in every phase of its life. In scope, breadth, rapidity, and in the mass of people involved this is one of the great changes of history. After a chaotic period of war-lord division, two modern parties (one Marxist and having a history of strong Russian influence in its early period) had emerged. They had worked together briefly, then split and fought each other bitterly but inconclusively for 10 years of civil war. Although Japanese aggression forced their temporary union in a united front in 1937 the contest for leadership of this underlying revolution and for the mastery of China was never abandoned; at best it was but partially submerged.

"American policy toward China had a long background of missionary activity, cultural interest, and trade. The factors of idealism, commerce, and strategic interest had led to our traditional concern for maintaining China's sovereignty and territorial integrity, to the open door doctrine and, by our retention of the Philippines, to actual involvement in the power contest in the Far East. As we have realized since the day of Theodore Roosevelt, our enforcement of these policies was hampered by our national repugnance for war or forceful methods. Realistically, therefore, there was a desirable aspect to a balance of power in the Far East between Russia and Japan. This balance was upset by Japanese aggression commencing in 1931 against Manchuria and setting off the chain of events which led up to Pearl Harbor. With the certainty of Japan's eventual defeat and its elimination as a power factor in the Far East, it was obvious that Russia would be left as the dominant power in Asia and the necessity of a strong, united, and independent China became, far more than ever before, an imperative of American policy.

"One could not be in Peiping in 1936 and 1937 without a developing awareness of these problems. I read very extensively and as my interests were scholarly rather than social I found most of my friends among the large groups of newspaper correspondents, professors, students, and researchers who were either residing in or continually passing through Peiping. By this time we were in the midst of the events leading up to the Sino-Japanese War and Peiping was close enough to be an excellent observation post. Just after my arrival in December 1935, I saw the student riots which in one sense marked the beginning of Chinese active resistance. In December 1936 the kidnaping of the generalissimo at Sian was to result in the united front which in turn provoked the final Japanese assault. The shooting phase of the war commenced only a few miles outside of the city of Peiping and I visited some of the battlefields with the newspapermen. It was during this period that I became acquainted, on the basis of mutual interest in the reporting and analysis of events, with such persons as Owen Lattimore (then with the IPR), F. McCracken Fisher (then with UP), Haldore Hansen (AP), Frank Oliver (Reuters), Arch Steele (New York Herald Tribune), Edgar Snow (Saturday Evening Post), and Frank Smothers (Chicago Daily News). At this time I also became acquainted with Colonel Stilwell who was military attaché at the Embassy, Maj. David D. Barrett and Capt. Frank Dorn, his assistants. During this period I briefly met T. A. Bisson, who was traveling on a Guggenheim fellowship and collecting material for his book Japan in China.

"In December 1937 I completed my language study assignment and was transferred to the consulate general at Shanghai where I arrived in January 1938. The consul general was C. E. Gauss, later to be our Ambassador to China, and the executive officer was Richard P. Butrick, at present Director General of the Foreign Service. Shanghai, with the exception of a part of the foreign settlements, was under Japanese occupation and hostilities were still proceeding in the lower Yangtze area. After a brief trial my superiors apparently concluded that I was able to serve as emergency and relief officer and for the next 3 years I was rotated through the consulate general. Whenever an officer went on leave I took over his job; when one particular section became swamped, I was put in to help. I served in every section of the consulate general at least twice and occupied every position except that of consul general for at least a brief period.

"On my own time and under considerable difficulties I prepared myself for the optional third-year examination in Chinese and the related background subjects which is taken by very few officers. A large number of my friends and associates continued to be newspapermen, writers, and research students. Acquaintances which I made at this time included such men as Robert Barnett, then with the IPR, William Johnstone, Hallett Abend, and Tillman Durdin (New York Times), J. B. Powell of the China Weekly Review, Randall Gould of the Shanghai Evening Post, Larry Lehrbas of the Associated Press, Robert Bellaire of the United Press, and many others.

"During this period I read most of the books published regarding China and subscribed to most of the magazines dealing with China. These latter included Far Eastern Survey and Pacific Affairs, published by the Institute of Pacific Relations, and Amerasia which had just been established by a group of men, several of whom I had known.

"In May 1938 my family, which had been evacuated from north China the previous August, returned to Shanghai. We had a great many friends because of my background, particularly in the American missionary community but also in American business circles and among Chinese. I became active in American community church affairs, joined the Junior Chamber of Commerce, was president of a luncheon club at the foreign YMCA, was a member of the two American clubs and resumed track athletics which I had kept up intermittently since college. In 1940, I followed my father who had been an active Mason and took my degrees in a lodge under the Philippine Constitution which had an almost wholly Chinese membership. In November 1940, events in the Far East seemed to be moving to an inevitable show-down and our families were evacuated to the United States. I was not to be reunited with mine on a permanent basis for almost 6 years.

"During this period the situation in China was hopeful. China was much more unified than ever before and was amazing herself and her friends with her success in fighting off or at least delaying the Japanese. My own views, privately expressed to my colleagues and friends, were in support of stronger aid to China and in opposition to the sale of ore and scrap iron to the Japanese.

In relation to Europe, my views were also strongly interventionist. I was outspokenly critical of the German-Soviet pact and entirely sympathetic with the Finns. I was critical of the Neutrality Act, strongly supported lend-lease and the destroyer deal and privately favored the fullest possible support and, in fact, outright military participation on the side of the Allies in Europe.

"In the spring of 1941 I volunteered for duty in the Embassy at Chungking about May 3, 1941, as third secretary. The Ambassador at this time was Nelson T. Johnson, under whom I had served at Peiping. Shortly afterward, however, he was transferred to Australia and his place in Chungking was taken by Mr. Gauss. The counselor of the Embassy who arrived at about the same time was John Carter Vincent, later to be Chief of the Division of Chinese Affairs, Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, and, presently, Minister to Switzerland.

"When I arrived in Chungking the Embassy was seriously understaffed. The work of the office was being constantly interrupted by almost daily Japanese air raids and the limited staff available had to spread itself thin to keep abreast of the more urgently pressing work. My first assignment was in the consular and general affairs section. Later after more staff arrived I moved into the press and translation section. Next I served a period as chief of chancery, or administrative officer. During all this period, however, I was acquiring background and developing contacts and moving more into the reporting field. There were few China-trained officers on the staff and I believe that it was the Ambassador's desire that I concentrate on political work. Toward the end of 1941 I moved into a small house shared by the Ambassador and counselor and from that time on functioned as a sort of general assistant, handy man, and drafting officer. One fairly frequent assignment was to accompany the Ambassador when calling on the Minister of Foreign Affairs or other high officials and to prepare the memoranda of conversation. This type of work and the dispatches and telegrams which I prepared for the Ambassador's signature were of course subject to his closest scrutiny and I believe I convinced my superiors of my accuracy and objectivity.

"My boyhood at Szechwan (in addition to spending my first 10 years in Chengtu, my parents had lived in Chungking from 1922 to 1924) gave me immediately a great number of Chinese and missionary contacts. I could speak the local dialect and I was able to move about more easily than most officers. Accordingly, I was used to make a number of trips for the Embassy. In April 1942 I was invited through Chinese official contacts to make a trip through central Szechwan. When the first lend-lease representative arrived in Chungking I was assigned by the Ambassador to assist him and accompany him on tours of Chinese arsenals and industrial plants.

"The Embassy was a focal point through which passed all American visitors, officials, and missionaries. Most of these people I met in the normal course of events and from many of them, particularly the missionaries going to or coming from various places in China, I was able to pick up information on conditions. Also, many men whom I had previously known were among the correspondents in Chungking and I soon became thoroughly acquainted with the others. It was the policy of the Ambassador to treat responsible correspondents with a good deal of frankness. Also, because of their constant traveling and their broad contacts, we were often able to obtain from them corroboration or amplification of information which we received from our own sources. One factor of course which always had to be considered was that they were subject to the rigid Chinese political censorship, which was anxious to keep reports from reaching the American public which would be contrary to the exaggerated picture being painted of China by Chinese propagandists. This policy of giving background information was perhaps even more important in the case of visiting correspondents who could remain only a short while and who lacked the detailed background of permanent correspondents. Very often these visitors had great difficulty in visiting places or seeing people except as the Chinese Ministry of Information was willing. Some of these visiting correspondents whom I remember were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Luce, Ray Clapper, and Vincent Sheean. All of these people visited the Embassy and in most cases the Ambassador himself or some of us on his staff gave them a thorough fill-in.

"There was, as I look back on it, a gradual change in the character of our work and in the tenor of our reporting from Chungking during this period of 1941-42. We could see from month to month, even from our limited observation point of Chungking, a deterioration within China. The united front between the Kuomintang and the Communists which, although an unnatural arrangement, had been effective in 1937-38 had gradually fallen apart until a definite break came with the new fourth army incident of January 1941. This split was accompanied in Kuomintang territory by an increasing concern with internal affairs and the need for checking the growing Communist power. The closing of the Burma Road and the isolation of China were important factors but not the whole explanation of Chinese inability to take effective measures against inflation, speculation, and official corruption. The disastrous defeat of the Central Government armies in the Chungtiaoshan area of north China in the summer of 1941 was a mark of the decline in quality and fighting spirit of the Central Government conscript armies.

"After Pearl Harbor China was our ally and her effectiveness in the war became increasingly our concern. The Central Government, at first jubilant over our entry and then despondent over the early Allied reverses, seized the opportunity for heavy demands in the way of financial and military aid. Ambassador Gauss expressed the view at this time that we should keep enough strings on the $500,000,000 loan to at least be able to advise on its use.

"Stilwell arrived in the theater in March 1942 and came to share the same attitude: that the mere random giving of generous aid would not solve China's problems and that we should try to make sure that the aid was effectively used. On all sides, political, military, and economic, there was a constant effort to urge reforms which would strengthen the position of the Central Government and increase the potential of China's war effort.

"One of the important questions which any political reporter had to be concerned with was, of course, the relations between the Kuomintang and the Communist parties. The two parties had not actually broken off relations and were theoretically cooperating in the war. The Communists therefore were allowed to maintain official representatives in Chungking. These people had access to the press and to foreigners, and I met them soon after my arrival in the normal course of events. The head of this Communist delegation at the time was Chou En-lai. He was later replaced by Tung Pi-wu. This is the gentleman about whom Mr. Earl Browder was recently questioned before the Senate subcommittee. You may recall that Mr. Browder was asked whether he attended a meeting with Tung Pi-wu and Philip Jaffe in the spring of 1945. Mr. Browder admitted meeting with Tung but declined to state who else was at the meeting and also declined to state whether I was present. I shall have more to say about my acquaintance with Mr. Tung later, but I may state here that I did not attend any meeting with Tung, Mr. Browder, and Mr. Jaffe in New York in 1945. There was not a great deal of activity at this period, however, on the question of relations between the two parties. My reporting on the subject was only a very minor part of my work. However, since I had been charged with associating with Communists, I assure the Board that I have indeed associated with Communists and that I have associated with as many and as prominent Chinese Communists as I could discover. That, as I shall point out a little bit later, was a part of my job even in 1941 and, as I shall indicate later, it eventually became my full-time job. Up to this time, however, I had never to my knowledge met a Communist of any sort, Chinese or foreign.

"My community activities in Chungking included membership in the predominantly Chinese Chungking Rotary Club and participation as a charter member in the establishment of a Masonic Lodge in which the great majority of members were Chinese in official positions. There was little conventional social life in Chungking but bridge was a popular relaxation. I was on friendly bridge-partner basis with T. F. Tsiang (now the Chinese representative to the UN), Quo T'ai-ch'i (then Minister of Foreign Affairs), C. T. Wang (formerly Minister of Foreign Affairs and Ambassador to Washington), and a large number of others in positions of influence and knowledge. I do not mention these associations with any boastful intent. Nor do I claim that I was an intimate of all these men—although our relations were cordial and informal and they were often frank in discussing Chinese affairs and personalities. But I do think it important to point out that my contacts—who inevitably contributed to by knowledge and views—were not one-sidedly concentrated among Communists or other opponents of the Central Government but on the contrary were unusually broad and close, whether with missionaries, businessmen, newspapermen, or Chinese officials. I believe that my associates will agree that just as I eventually came to have the opportunity of being the most widely traveled officer stationed in China, I also came to know more Chinese more intimately than probably any other.

"In the summer of 1942 I was invited by the Minister of Economics to attend a meeting of the Chinese Engineering Society at Lanchow in the far northwestern province of Kansu and to accompany a party of engineers, officers of the National Resources Commission, and Chinese newspapermen to visit the newly discovered oil field near the border of Sinkiang. These oil fields had not been visited by any non-Chinese since they had commenced operation. In addition, the trip would allow me to travel through an extensive area which had not been visited by American officers for a number of years. This included the so-called blockade zone around the Communist district in Shensi and Kansu Provinces. The trip finally extended into 4 months and covered five Provinces. For most of the time I was the only foreigner with a large official party of Chinese and had unusual opportunities for meeting Chinese and for obtaining information. In the latter part of the trip—I returned from Kansu alone—I visited a great number of missionaries and was able to obtain extremely detailed accounts of conditions in their areas.

"This trip made a deep impression on me. More clearly than in Chungking, I was able to see the effects of inflation, official corruption, speculation, thought control of students and professors, the workings of the secret police, the operation of a vicious conscription system, and the disastrously heavy military impositions which in some areas were forcing farmers to abandon land. I traveled through the Honan famine area where the people were starving while the troops, merchants, and officials prospered. I saw the active trade across the Japanese lines with luxury goods coming from the Japanese areas and strategic materials going in the opposite direction. I passed through the blockade zone around the Communist area, saw the lines of blockhouses and the idle concentrations of Central Government troops. I talked to missionaries living in the blockade area and to Chinese who had been across the lines into the Communist districts and learned that conditions were enough better to attract a movement of refugees who crossed the blockade lines at the risk of their lives.

"None of the Chinese I traveled with were Communists. Most were Government servants of some category. Nor, by any stretch of the imagination, were the numerous missionaries. But from every source I received the same general picture of the decline of the Kuomintang and the eventual conflict between the parties in which many seemed to feel that the Communists were the more dynamic and more preferable of the two.

"I returned to Chungking in late November, wrote the most important reports on the oil fields and the Honan famine and returned to the United States on leave. After a month in California I arrived in Washington in January 1943 for a short period of consultation. Here I was the first man from the Embassy staff at Chungking to have returned since before Pearl Harbor. I had had unequalled opportunities for travel and observation. I was asked to confer with and be interrogated by the numerous Government agencies concerned with China. Several newspaper people were sent to me by the Press Section for background information and the director of the office approved a request from the IPR for me to talk to one of their research staff. In the course of my consultations I met Dr. Laughlin Currie, then an executive assistant to the President, specializing on far eastern affairs.

"Several officers noted my pessimistic view of the situation in China and its possible implications for us in the event of civil war. It was suggested that I summarize these in memorandum form. I did so and would like to put in the record at this time a copy of my memorandum of January 23, 1943 (document 103). In this I pointed out the dangers of the trend in China; the facts that a civil war would seriously interfere with the war against Japan, might well result in a Communist victory and would be likely either to involve us with the Soviet Union or force the Communists into their hands. I proposed, therefore, that it was urgent for us to find out by direct observation something about the Chinese Communists, who had been blockaded since 1939. With our present knowledge of subsequent events, it may be hard to realize that when this memorandum was written in January 1943 it was, as far as I know, the first suggestion that internal factors in China would probably lead to a civil war and Communist victory in China, and the first calling of attention to the problem the United States would have to face being accused of giving military aid to one side against the other. My views of the importance of getting reliable intelligence concerning the Chinese Communists was, however, accepted.

"This memorandum, I have subsequently felt, was a sort of milestone. As possibly the first to point the issues, I came to be regarded (erroneously because of my very subordinate position) as a leader, or at least forerunner, of an attitude on policy which has wrongly been interpreted as pro-Communist. Having pressed the need for direct and comprehensive knowledge concerning the Chinese Communists, it was perhaps inevitable that I should be given an increasing amount of this work until it finally became a full-time assignment.

"At the conclusion of my leave I returned to Chungking in early May 1943 and was sent again to Lanchow, where the Embassy by now was regularly stationing an officer as observer. One reason for maintaining this post was that it was a strategic point for information concerning the Communists. The Embassy also agreed that if opportunity presented I might make an attempt to enter the Communist area, although any such venture would probably have to be disavowed by the Embassy and made on my own responsibility.

"In Lanchow I did a good deal of general political reporting on numerous aspects of the situation in the northwest, for which I was commended by both the Embassy and the Department.

"On August 10, 1943, I was recalled from Lanchow and assigned by the Department's orders to General Stilwell. The Department's instructions made it clear that I was to be completely under General Stilwell's orders for duties, movements, or station. This point is of some importance. My complete subordination to the Army was never questioned by the Department of State or by Ambassador Gauss. It was not, however, understood by General Hurley who has accused me, I understand, of disloyalty to him.

"Several other officers were assigned to Stilwell at the same time, and one officer, John Davies, had been with him since he first assumed duty as commanding general of the theater in early 1942. We functioned in a loose way under Mr. Davies and were assigned to duties and in places for which we seemed best experienced. I was assigned to Chungking where I worked as a consultant to G-2 and otherwise as the chief of staff instructed. My duties were multifarious and never very clearly defined. When necessary, I acted as a liaison between the headquarters and the Embassy. I advised OSS and many of the other agencies coming into the theater concerning projects which they were considering. I helped G-2 in appraising Chinese intelligence. I furnished oral and written background information to the headquarters on Chinese political situations and personalities. I was a headquarters member on a psychological warfare policy committee.

"One definite duty which I was given was to act as liaison between the headquarters and the Chinese Communist official office in Chungking which was by that time headed by Tung Pi-wu. The Army's primary interest at this period was in intelligence regarding Japanese forces of north China. The Communists were permitted to operate a radio station in Chungking for communication with their own headquarters in Yen-an. G-2 would give me its questions. I would take these over to the Communist office and a few days later pick up the reply.

"Another general assignment was as a sort of public relations officer for Stilwell. His staff could, of course, handle the military aspects about which I was not in any case intimately informed. But some of Stilwell's greatest problems arose out of the political background in the theater. Understanding of these was essential to intelligent press reporting. In many ways this was the most complicated of all theaters and Stilwell's great problem of gaining Chinese cooperation could not be divorced from the Chinese political background. We therefore had Stilwell's directive to work closely with the press and to give them background information regarding the situation in China, particularly as it affected the war.

"These various duties still left me with a great deal of time. My own primary interest was political reporting. My position and my background in Chungking gave me unusually broad and numerous contacts, foreign and Chinese and in every walk of life. Association with the foreign correspondents was often a productive relationship, as they sometimes had access to people whom I could not reach and because they were continually traveling. I continued to expand an extensive circle of Chinese contacts, largely among newspapermen but also with members of such groups as the liberal wing of the Kuomintang, the minor parties making up the Democratic League, and various military figures or their representatives.

"Living in Army billets hampered this Chinese contact work and I moved into an apartment in the city with Solomon Adler, the United States Treasury representative. Except for perhaps an hour or two at the headquarters in the morning, I spent practically all of my time outside of the office and generally had both lunch and supper in Chinese restaurants with Chinese friends.

"With this background I found myself doing a great deal of voluntary political reporting of information which I picked up. This reporting was done by informal memoranda. With General Stilwell's approval I gave copies of these memoranda to the headquarters and Embassy in Chungking and sent a copy to Davies, who had his office in New Delhi. A fourth copy I kept for my own personal files. I placed on these memoranda my own informal classification. This was based on a number of factors, such as the need for protecting my sources, the desirability of allowing attribution, and the question of whether circulation among our various allies, including the Chinese, and numerous American Government agencies was wise. Often, of course, the information contained should be considered confidential only for a short time; if it related to future events the need for confidence would be removed as soon as the event took place or became generally known. In some cases, the need for classification would be removed after correspondents or other public sources learned of the same information. Also, an important factor was that a great deal of the information contained in the memoranda was inevitably critical of persons or situations in China.

"Probably only a minority of these memoranda were directly useful to the headquarters. Most of them were on political rather than military subjects. They might be used, if at all, only as background information. If the headquarters desired to make further distribution it would transmit my memoranda through such an agency as JICA (Joint Intelligence Collection Agency) which would attach a covering sheet giving a summary, evaluation, and its own classification. I rarely knew anything about this disposition or the evaluation or classification determined by the Army. Actually I am sure the great bulk of my memoranda never were forwarded by the Chungking headquarters.

"Probably a much greater proportion of my memoranda were of direct interest to the Embassy. I was much less restricted in my movements than most of the Embassy officers and had only a light burden of routine duties. The Embassy reporting officers used these memoranda as working materials. If the subject matter was new or was thought sufficiently worth while, they would write a dispatch for the Ambassador's signature transmitting my memorandum as an enclosure. The dispatch would summarize and comment on the material in my memorandum, sometimes agreeing or disagreeing or adding material which the Embassy might have from other sources. Usually I never knew what use the Embassy had made of any particular memorandum, whether it had been transmitted by despatch in to the Department, whether the Embassy agreed or differed, or what classification it had assigned. At this time, of course, I was detached from the Embassy, had only casual contact with it, principally in a liaison capacity, and I did not have access to the Embassy files.

"A large part of my political reporting during all this period was in the field of Kuomintang-Communist relations. I also kept in close touch with the minor parties who were attempting to take a more active role in the Chinese situation. The Embassy simultaneously was doing some reporting on the same subject but I think it fair to say that my contacts were becoming so well established that I supplied a large part of the Embassy's material.

"As general handy man and consultant for headquarters I was sent on a number of trips. In the fall of 1943 I made a trip to India, stopping in Kunming and visiting the Burma front, where the Ledo was being pushed southward. For 2 months in the winter of 1943-44 I accompanied an American engineer officer on an extensive trip through the southwestern provinces of Yunnan, Kweichow, and Kwangsi. His purpose was to make a thorough reconnaissance of all highways in that area. Mine was to interpret for him, act as guide and assistant, and observe political and economic conditions. Early in 1944 there were serious problems in Chengtu connected with the construction of B-29 bases involving a labor force of over 300,000 and the influx of a large body of American Air Force personnel. I was sent to Chengtu, and made a number of recommendations, some of which were adopted. Another trip I made was to Sian.

"In March 1944 the Chinese Government asked the headquarters to send American officers to Sinkiang to investigate an incident which had taken place between Chinese troops and Kazaks in a remote area where the border between Sinkiang and Outer Mongolia was in dispute. The preliminary information furnished by the Chinese was highly misleading. Asked by the chief of staff for advice and all the information I could obtain, I made a number of reports and in the final one of these, dated April 7, 1944, I summarized in the most complete form up to that date my views as to the policy we should follow in China toward the Kuomintang, the Communists, and Russia. A part of this statement has already appeared in annex 47 of the white paper, but I believe that the complete text of that part of my memorandum which refers to policy may be of interest and I would like to have it included in the record at this point. In this memorandum I suggested that the Kuomintang policies gave every indication of proving suicidal and that our overclose involvement with the Kuomintang would probably throw the Communists toward the Soviet Union and contribute to the Russian domination of Asia which we wished to prevent. (Here present for record pages 7, 8, and 9 of enclosure to document 142 as marked.) My recommendation to headquarters that we not become involved in the incident by sending investigators was accepted. This was one of the few occasions on which my advice was actually sought and followed. I say this because there has been a great deal of misunderstanding of my duties in headquarters and the usual term "political adviser" was, by and large, a misnomer. The Embassy forwarded this memorandum to the Department and, although the Department did not comment specifically on my policy recommendations, it gave it a special commendation with a rating of excellent. (A copy of this commendatory instruction No. 698, June 21, 1944, is submitted for the record.)

"By the spring of 1944 military considerations were making it imperative that we get fuller information from north China and have ready a groundwork for possible military operations in the area. This meant, as a first step, the establishment of direct liaison by our own observers in the Communist area. The Fourteenth Air Force was already extending its strikes into north China. The bases for B29's were built at Chengtu. These planes would have to cross hundreds of miles of Communist guerrilla territory. For these air operations, we needed intelligence on Japanese air strength and defenses in the area, prompt and comprehensive weather information, and arrangements for the rescue of air crews. The theater was planning on the basis of an eventual landing by American forces on the China coast. In such event there would have to be effective action by all Chinese armies to assist the landing. And we would have to cooperate with whatever Chinese forces we found on the spot, whether Central Government or Communist. Finally, we needed the completest information on Japanese strength, movements, and defenses. The areas of the greatest Japanese concentrations and the area of greatest strategic value to us was north China, where the Communist guerrillas controlled the countryside and concerning which Kuomintang intelligence, by our experience, was insufficient and unreliable.

"Several attempts by headquarters to obtain permission to send observers into the Communist areas had already met with flat refusals, even though these requests were based solely on the need for intelligence. There had not been up to this time any proposal or request to supply arms to the Chinese Communists. The Central Government insisted on its rigid blockade. A preliminary opening wedge was forced by the association of foreign correspondents who argued for months: 'Why, if the Communists, who have been blockaded from the outside world completely for the past 5 years, are as weak and as bad as the Central Government says, can't we be allowed to visit them?' About May 1944 the issue became so embarrassing to the Central Government that permission was granted for correspondents to visit the Communist area. The government, however, remained adamant to the Army's request. The visit of Vice President Wallace in June 1944 gave an opportunity for high-level pressure and on President Roosevelt's instructions Mr. Wallace secured Chiang Kai-shek's agreement. The fact that because of my familiarity with the background I was present, by order, at this interview has always, I am sure, been one of the factors in apparently convincing the Chinese that I was the primary instigator. The interview is described on pages 556-557 of the white paper.

"In June 1944 I prepared a detailed summary of the situation in China with suggestions regarding policy. This was my most extensive analysis of the weaknesses of the Kuomintang. I recommended a realistic policy and conditional aid with active efforts to promote the liberal groups in China in an endeavor to bring about reform of the Kuomintang. In this again I pointed out that continuation of the current trend of the Kuomintang would hamper the effective prosecution of the war and that the only parties to benefit would be Japan immediately and Russia eventually. I believe that the inclusion of this memorandum in the record (document 157) will be of value in indicating the development of my thinking during this period. In this connection it should be remembered that in April the Japanese had commenced an important campaign southward from the Yellow River which, during May, resulted in their completing their control of the important Peking-Hankow Railway, and that toward the end of May they had commenced a campaign southward from the Yangtze River which on June 18 had captured Changsha and gave every indication that they would be able to continue southward capturing our advanced air bases and sealing off all of eastern China. This situation was in reality dark.

"On July 7 the headquarters received a telegram from President Roosevelt to be delivered personally to Chiang Kai-shek. This was the first of a series of messages recommending that, in view of the desperate military situation in China, Stilwell be placed in command of all Chinese armies. I have no knowledge of the background or origin of this recommendation. Stilwell himself was in Burma and the chief of staff seemed to be surprised. The message was considered to be of such importance that the chief of staff determined that there should be no Chinese interpreter and that we should not follow the normal procedure of allowing the message to go through an intermediary. I was therefore ordered to accompany the chief of staff and to translate the telegram phrase by phrase to the generalissimo himself. This was, in effect, a proposal that the Chinese Communists be armed, since it was taken for granted that if General Stilwell was to command all Chinese armies this would include the Communists and that they would therefore be eligible to receive a share of American equipment. This was, so far as I know, the first such recommendation. On July 15 there was a second telegram from the President which I again was required to interpret for the chief of staff. I have been sure since then my presence on these unpleasant occasions helped to contribute to Chinese animosity toward me and to their conviction that I was again the instigator of a very unwelcome demand.

"As the white paper (pp. 66-67) reveals, Chiang Kai-shek agreed in principle to the appointment of Stilwell as commander but requested that the President send a high level representative to discuss the military and political problems involved. This was the origin of the Hurley appointment and I believe it is clear from the background that Hurley's principal mission was to persuade the generalissimo to accept Stilwell as commander of all Chinese armies as a means of unifying the Chinese war effort and of furnishing equipment to the Communists to make them a more effective force in fighting the Japanese.

"Following the receipt of Chiang's approval of the mission to Yenau, I was active under Colonel Dickey, chief of G-2, in planning the organization of the observer group. This was made a joint enterprise with representation from all of the agencies in the theater which had particular interests in obtaining information from North China. These included the Twentieth Bomber Command (B-29s), Weather, Air-Ground Aid Service (rescue of air crews) G-2, OSS, and other intelligence units. The headquarters inquired from the Embassy whether it would be interested in having a State Department man included for the purpose of political intelligence. Ambassador Gauss was in favor of such participation and recommended, after consultation with the State Department, that I be included in this capacity. It was on this basis that I accompanied the first group to go into Yenau by air on July 22, 1944. The commander of the observer section was Col. David D. Barrett. Our orders were that apart from the collection of all types of intelligence we were to be strictly observers. While we were to investigate and report on the possible desirability and the types of arms which the Communist forces might need, we were not to negotiate, offer any aid or supplies or make any commitments of any kind. Colonel Barrett and I made this clear to the Communist leaders during our initial interviews and there was never any doubt of this status while I was at Yenau.

"Immediately after arrival I commenced a thorough attempt to become acquainted with and to interview all of the principal Communist leaders and to report in a systematic way on the political organization, policies, program, propaganda, extent of popular support, etc., of the Chinese Communist Party.

"The Communists received us cordially and cooperated thoroughly on our various projects such as setting up weather reporting, interrogating Japanese prisoners, and collecting Japanese order of battle and other intelligence. They gave us extensive facilities for travel and permitted us great freedom of movement and observation. All in all, we were favorably impressed. I remained in Yenau for 3 months and during this period of course associated outside of our own group entirely with Communists. In fact, I had numerous long and detailed interviews with almost every one of the ranking Communist leaders from Mao Tse-tung on down. These interviews and my observations at Yenau were thoroughly reported in memoranda which I prepared and which were forwarded to G-2 in Chungking where copies were furnished to the Embassy which, in turn, transmitted most by despatch to the Department.

"By late August we felt that we had verified our first favorable impressions sufficiently to make a recommendation that it would be worth while to give small quantities of equipment useful in guerrilla operations to the Communists as an anti-Japanese fighting force. Such a recommendation was contained in my memorandum of August 29 (Document 177). Aside from the military considerations, I expressed the belief that impartial aid would be a constructive force in stimulation of reform and in prevention of civil war. An important background was, of course, the deteriorating military situation in South China where the Japanese had captured Hengyang and were moving into Kwangsi Province.

"By early October we had accumulated a great deal of information on Communist strength by direct observation, by field trips of American officers and correspondents, and by interrogation of American air crews and other foreigners who had traveled for long distances through the Communist guerrilla areas. This information was so overwhelmingly conclusive that on October 9 I wrote:

"From the basic fact that the Communists have built up popular support of a magnitude and depth which makes their elimination impossible, we must draw the conclusion that the Communists will have a certain and important share in China's future. I suggest the further conclusion that unless the Kuomintang goes as far as the Communists in political and economic reform, and otherwise proves itself able to contest this leadership of the people (none of which it yet shows signs of being willing or able to do), the Communists will be the dominant force in China within a comparatively few years."

"I would like to have this document (No. 192, enclosure No. 3) made a part of the record.

"General Hurley had arrived in Chungking on September 6 as the President's special representative. Although public statements had indicated that he was to try to bring about some agreement between the two parties and a unification of the two armies, we learned in Yen-an in early October that the only immediate subject of negotiation was a demand by Chiang that Stilwell be recalled and that Hurley was swinging to support of Chiang in the hope, apparently promoted by T. V. Soong, that Chiang would cooperate on the other issues if Stilwell were removed.

"Against this background and my conviction that the Communists were now too strong to be dictated to, I wrote my memorandum no. 40 of October 10, to which General Hurley later took such violent exception. He has called it variously "a plan to let fall the government he was sent to support" and "a plan to bring about the collapse of the Central Government." I believe that a fair reading of this memorandum will convince anyone that it was not meant to be, and in fact was not, an argument for the abandonment or, as Senator McCarthy has called it, for the "torpedoing" of Chiang and the Central Government. Rather it was an attempt to refute the argument so commonly advanced that we were dependent on Chiang and that if he were to fall Chinese resistance to Japan would collapse. I did not advocate the abandonment of Chiang but rather a more realistic policy toward him. It is interesting to note that the gist of my argument had already, without my knowledge, been said by General Stilwell in his reports to General Marshall in September and October (see white paper, pp. 68-69). In essence I was advancing the argument which we stated more clearly in February 1945 that the end and primary objective of our policy was not the support of Chiang but the revitalization of the Chinese war effort and the attempt to bring about a relationship between the parties which might remove the threat of civil war and unify the country.

"General Stilwell was recalled on October 19 and just before his departure ordered my return to the United States. I left Yen-an on October 23 and spent one night in Chungking. I informed General Hurley of my presence and placed myself at his disposal if he wished to talk to me concerning the current Communist attitude. He asked me to dinner and kept me through the evening. My chief concern was to tell him of the confidence and strength of the Communist attitude and he repeatedly told me that he was in China to see that they were brought into the war effort and did receive some arms. His whole attitude was to minimize the difficulties in bringing the two parties together.

"I proceeded immediately to the United States and arrived in Washington on October 29, 1944. Here I was the first man to return after having visited Yen-an and observed the Chinese Communists. I was sought after by the various Government agencies whose work related to China, by newspaper people, and by the general category of "Far Eastern experts." Agencies such as OSS or MIS called me for several sessions at which their experts or research people could interrogate me. An example of a report of such an interview is Document 201. Following these interviews individual members of these agencies would sometimes follow up their own particular line of inquiry by seeing me in the Department of State.

"Several newspaper and magazine writers were sent to me by the Press Division of the Department. I remember particularly a reporter for a women's magazine and from Pathfinder. Henry Luce, who had received a letter from his bureau chief in China, asked me to come up to New York to talk to him and I did so after consultation with my superior. While in New York I talked to Lawrence Salisbury, who had formerly been a close friend in the Foreign Service and was at that time with the IPR editing Far Eastern Survey. I was called separately to talk to Dr. Currie, Harry Hopkins, and Henry White of the Treasury. None of these men appeared to differ with my general views, although Harry Hopkins was pessimistic and discouraged over the situation and seemed to feel that there was probably little that could be done. Nevertheless the White House continued to press for unification of the Communist and Kuomintang armies.

"My first talk to the IPR was given during this period. The institute asked that I give an off-the-record talk at its Washington office. This invitation came through and was accepted by John Carter Vincent, then head of the Division of China Affairs. The meeting was quite a crowded one and included a number of people from other Government agencies and from outside the Government, and several newspapermen and writers. I remember Selden Menefee and a New York Times man. The chairman of the meeting, I believe, was William C. Johnstone. It was at the conclusion of this meeting that I first met Lt. Andrew Roth, who, along with a number of others, came up and introduced himself to me. There was no time for more than an introduction and I did not see Andrew Roth again till my next return to the United States in April 1945.

"It may be pertinent to point out that I had no regular duties assigned to me in the Department. I did not attend policy meetings nor prepare any policy memoranda or papers. I was spending full time being available to officials and others who had a responsible interest in China and wanted recent background, particularly on the Communists. My superiors knew that I was expressing my own personal views freely and they apparently considered that I had sufficient judgment and discretion.

"An interesting sidelight on classification concerns a map of the Communist areas which the Communist Chief of Staff gave me just before I left Yen-an. I specifically asked him whether he wished any classification to be put on it. He said certainly not: 'The Japanese know where we are.' Furthermore, I found out that similar maps were being given to the newspaper correspondents and to American visitors to Yen-an. I carried this map around with me when I was being interviewed by the various agencies and showed it freely to anyone interested. The OSS and Army both wanted copies. I therefore loaned it to MIS for reproduction. Later I found out that they had classified it—either as confidential or secret. I expressed some surprise but the Army insisted on retaining its classification. Exactly the same map was given to Harrison Foreman, one of the correspondents at Yen-an, and appears as a full page illustration in his book.

"When I had returned to Washington it was expected that my assignment with the Army, which had been at Stilwell's personal request, would be terminated. The Department was considering an assignment to the Embassy at Moscow. I completed my consultation and left Washington about November 19 for leave at my home in California. John Davies in the meanwhile had remained in Chungking with General Wedemeyer, the new theater commander. During the last few days of December, while I was on leave in California, the Department asked whether I would be willing to go back to China and instructed me to report at once to Washington. There I found that John Davies had had a clash with Hurley which required his immediate transfer out of China and that Wedemeyer desired my assignment as a replacement. The Department, I learned, had made its release of me to Wedemeyer contingent on Wedemeyer's agreeing that one of my principal duties would be reporting on the Chinese Communists and that for this purpose I would spend a major part of my time in Yen-an.

"I believe that the facts concerning my return to China in January 1945 are pertinent and deserve emphasis. By the time that General Wedemeyer asked for me and the Department agreed to send me back with the condition that one of my principal functions would be reporting on the Communists, the voluminous reports prepared during my assignment to Stilwell and during my first stay at Yen-an from July to October 1944 had received wide dissemination and had been available to all the concerned parties. On these reports I had received numerous commendations. My views on the situation in China and my general attitude on policy were well known, through my reports and through personal interviews, to: the White House (Harry Hopkins and Lauchlin Currie); the Department of State (Mr. Grew, Under Secretary; J. W. Ballantine and E. F. Stanton, Director and Deputy Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs); the Army (Headquarters in Chungking, General Bissel—then Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, in Washington, and responsible officers working on the Far East in OPD); and to other officials such as General Donovan of OSS. Some of my memoranda, specifically such as No. 40 of October 10, had caused discussion and had not been wholly concurred in by some of the recipients such as the Embassy in Chungking and the Department. I had not at any time, however, been told that my views were considered improper or contrary to American policy or that I should modify them or restrain my expression of them. I did not flatter myself that General Wedemeyer's request and the Department's action in approving my return for the primary purpose of observation and reporting on the Communists necessarily meant acceptance of my views. But at least they seemed to be an indication of confidence in my value as a reporting officer.

Just before I left the Department I was called in by the Chief of the Division of Foreign Service Personnel, Nathaniel P. Davis. He noted that I had been separated from my family for over 4 years and said that the Department was hesitant about asking me to return to China. I told Mr. Davis that with the war still proceeding I was willing and happy to return since General Wedemeyer had indicated that I could be of service to him. However, I called attention to the difficulties of the Embassy staff and John Davies in their relations with General Hurley. Mr. Davis said that he was familiar with the situation in Chungking. He emphasized that I would be working for the Army and not for General Hurley, and that I would have the Department's understanding support.

"I arrived back in Chungking on January 18, 1945. General Wedemeyer wished to make me more definitely a part of the Headquarters organization than had been the case under General Stilwell. I commenced work on much the same lines as under Stilwell, doing voluntary political reporting and acting as consultant for G-2 and other intelligence agencies. I also was used by Wedemeyer as a drafting officer for communications dealing with policy matters having political significance. G-2 brought me closer into its operations and I was cleared for intelligence of the highest category, the exact nature of which cannot be mentioned. I was invited to attend Headquarters' briefing sessions.

"One or two days after my arrival General Hurley sent for me. He had a copy of my memorandum No. 40 and delivered me a lecture to the effect that I was very much 'off base' and that he intended to do all of the policy recommending in the future. He said that his mission in China was to uphold Chiang Kai-shek and the Central Government. I did not attempt to discuss the matter in detail—in fact, I was given very little opportunity to say anything. At the conclusion of the talk he said something to the effect: 'If you confine yourself strictly to reporting we will get along, but if you try to interfere with me, I will break you.' In this talk he mentioned that he had made the same threat to John Davies but had relented because he did not wish to ruin a young man's career. This interview was of course reported by me to General Wedemeyer, who told me that I was working only for him and should 'carry on.'

"It was General Hurley's practice during this period to have occasional meetings of representatives of all the different United States Government agencies in Chungking. I was assigned to be one of the Headquarters representatives. The most notable features of these meetings were General Hurley's long discussions of his instructions from the President and of the progress being made in his negotiations. It was common comment among those attending that Hurley's accounts of his instructions changed from week to week and came more and more to emphasize the upholding of Chiang Kai-shek and the Central Government. He minimized the difficulties of the negotiations with the Chinese Communists and continually gave what we knew to be an unrealistic, optimistic view of their progress and likely success.

"By early February it was obvious that the negotiations between the two parties had reached an impasse and broken down. Both Hurley and Wedemeyer prepared to return to the United States for consultation. Raymond P. Ludden had returned from a long trip from Yenai into the guerrilla areas and was in Chungking. We had a talk with Wedemeyer in which we expressed our opinion that military considerations made it undesirable for the Army to become completely tied up with the Central Government. For instance, there might be problems in the fairly near future of operations in occupied China, possibly by landing operations on the China coast, and that we should be free to cooperate with whatever Chinese forces we found on the ground. Wedemeyer said that he agreed and would appreciate a written statement. Furthermore, he ordered Ludden to return to the United States at the same time so as to be available for consultation in Washington on these matters. Ludden and I proceeded to write our memorandum. This was done only after considerable discussion between the two of us, since we well knew that it might involve us in serious trouble with Hurley. The result was our memorandum of February 17 (Document 204) which I would like to place in the record.

"This memorandum marked a definite stage in our thinking. It was obvious that Hurley's attempt to negotiate on the basis of acceding to the wishes of Chiang had failed. We felt that the situation had reached a stage of urgency where we could make headway only by taking positive action and in effect telling instead of asking Chiang. Far from being a proposal to arm belligerent opponents of the Kuomintang, as Hurley later charged, it was a proposal to arm anyone who offered reasonable expectation of providing real resistance to what was, after all, the real enemy—Japan.

"After Hurley had left Chungking, George Acheson, the Counselor of the Embassy, expressed the opinion to several of his staff and to me that there had been inadequate reporting on the situation and that the Department had received an incomplete and nonobjective picture of the negotiations from Hurley. Acheson suggested that we prepare a telegram summarizing the whole situation and making recommendations for overcoming the impasse that had been reached. It was agreed that I would prepare the initial draft since I was intimately familiar with the subject and had more time available. The telegram which we prepared is the one of February 26 which Hurley has objected to and on the basis of which he accused Acheson and me of sabotage and disloyalty. (Put in the record, White Paper S7-92.) We included in the telegram the statement that the presence of Hurley in Washington would afford an opportunity for discussion of the questions we raised. When it was shown to Hurley he is reported to have been extremely angry and to have held me primarily responsible.

"This telegram follows substantially the same lines as the memorandum drafted a few days earlier by Ludden and me. At Acheson's instructions, this telegram was shown by me to Wedemeyer's Chief of Staff General Gross, who was then in acting command, and he gave it his hearty endorsement.

"Meanwhile in Chungking it appeared that the meeting of the Communist Party congress was imminent. I proposed that I proceed to Yen-an for observation and reporting. This was strongly supported by Acheson and approved by the Headquarters and appropriate orders were issued. I flew to Yen-an about March 9. I resumed my contacts with the leading Communists and prepared a large number of memoranda, chiefly descriptive of various phases of their program and policies. One important development was the admitted Communist aggressiveness in their attitude toward the Kuomintang and in their plans to meet the expected situation at the end of the war. They were, for instance, actively moving into southeast China and were making preparations for a quick thrust into Manchuria as soon as the opportunity was ripe. In early April I received urgent but unexplained orders to return to the United States at once. I left Yen-an about April 4, passed quickly through Chungking, and arrived in Washington on April 12. There I found that Hurley had forced my recall by going to Secretary of War Stimson, the Department of State having told him that it had no authority to give me orders while I was under assignment to the Army.

"My return to Washington terminated my assignment to the Army and I was detailed to the Office of Far Eastern Affairs for a brief period of consultation. As on the two previous occasions this meant spending my time being available for interviews by people working on China in various Government agencies and branches of the State Department. I had no other assigned duties and did not attend policy meetings nor write any policy memoranda or papers. I emphasize this because of General Hurley's statements that after my return from China I was placed over him in a supervisory capacity."

Mr. RIETTS. Now, certain documents are referred to in the first 34 pages of this document which has just been included in the transcript and I should like at this point to offer certain of them also for inclusion in the transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. RIETTS. I should like to introduce first, document No. 103, which is referred to on page 14 of the personal history statement and which is the memorandum dated January 23, 1943, entitled "Kuomintang-Communist Situation," and I ask that it be included in the transcript.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

"An outstanding impression gained during the past 18 months spent in Chungking and in travel through southwest and northwest China is that the most careful study should be given to the internal political situation in China, particularly the growing rift between the Kuomintang and the Communists.

"The 'United front' is now definitely a thing of the past and it is impossible to find any optimism regarding the possibility of its resurrection as long as present tendencies continue and the present leadership of the Kuomintang, both civil and military, remains in power. Far from improving, the situation is deteriorating. In Kuomintang-controlled China the countering of communism is a growing preoccupation of propaganda, of both military and civilian political indoctrination, and of secret police and gendarmerie activity. There is not only a rigorous suppression of anything coming under the ever widening definition of 'communism' but there appears to be a movement away from even the outward forms of democracy in government. It is now no longer wondered whether civil war can be avoided, but rather whether it can be delayed at least until after a victory over Japan.

"The dangers and implications of this disunity are obvious and far reaching. Militarily, the present situation is a great hindrance to any effective war effort by China. Its deterioration into civil war would be disastrous. The situation therefore has direct relationship to our own efforts to defeat Japan. At the present time a large and comparatively well trained and equipped portion of the Kuomintang Army is diverted from active combat against the Japanese to blockade the Communists. In the north (Kansu and Shensi) the lines are well established by multiple lines of block houses and these large forces remain in a condition of armed readiness. Farther south (Hupeh, Anhwei, North Kiangsu) the lines are less clearly demarcated and sporadic hostilities, which have gone on for over 2 years and in which the Kuomintang forces appear to take the initiative, continue.

"On the other side, the Communist army is starved of all supplies and forced in turn to immobilize most of its strength to guard against what it considers the Kuomintang threat. It was admitted by both parties that there was extreme tension in Kuomintang-Communist relations in the spring of 1942. The Communists believe that it was only the Japanese invasion of Yunnan that saved them from attack at that time. The Communists and their friends claim, furthermore, that the Kuomintang is devoting its energies to the strengthening of its control over those parts of China accessible to it rather than to fighting Japan. This strengthening of the position of the Kuomintang will be course assist it in reestablishing its control over areas which will then be opened to it. A logical part of such a policy would be the taking over, as soon as an opportunity is found, of the Communist base area in Kansu-Shensi. Success in this move would weaken the Communists and make easier the eventual recapture by the Kuomintang of the Communist guerrilla zones. To support this thesis the Communists point to the campaign in the more extreme Kuomintang publications for the immediate abolition of the 'border area.' Another factor sometimes suggested as tending to provoke an early Kuomintang attack on the Communists is the desirability, from the Kuomintang point of view, of disposing of them before China finds itself an active ally of Russia against Japan.

"The possible positive military value of the Communist army to our war effort should not be ignored. These forces control the territory through which access may be had to Inner Mongolia, Manchuria, and Japanese North China bases. The strategic importance of their position would be enhanced by the entry of Russia into the war against Japan. This importance is largely potential but fairly recent reports of continued bitter fighting in Shansi indicate that the Communists are still enough of a force to provoke periodic Japanese 'mopping up' campaigns. Reflection of this is found in the intensive Japanese anti-Communist propaganda campaign in North China in the summer of 1941, although the fact must not be overlooked that Japanese propaganda has emphasized the anti-Communist angle to appeal to whatever 'collaborationist' elements there may be in occupied China and to the more conservative sections of the Kuomintang. This activity in Shansi and the difficulties of the Japanese there contrast with the inactivity on most of the other Kuomintang-Japanese fronts.

"Aside from the immediate war aspects, the political implications of the situation are also serious. Assuming that open hostilities are for the time being averted, the eventual defeat and withdrawal of the Japanese will leave the Kuomintang still confronted with the Communists solidly entrenched in most of North China (East Kansu, North Shensi, Shansi, South Chahar, Hopei, Shantung, North Kiangsu, and North Anhwei. In addition the Communists will be in position to move into the vacuum created by the Japanese withdrawal from Suiyuan, Jehol, and Manchuria, in all of which areas there is already some Communist activity. In the rest of China they will have the sympathy of elements among the liberals, intellectuals, and students. These elements are of uncertain size but of considerable influence in China, and the Kuomintang's fear of their power, and the power of whatever underground organization the Communists have succeeded in maintaining in the Kuomintang area, is indicated by the size and activity of its various secret police organs.

"But possibly the greatest potential strength of the Communists, and one reason why military action against them will not be entirely effective at the present time, is their control of the rural areas of North China in the rear of the Japanese. Here the Kuomintang cannot reach them and the Communists have apparently been able to carry out some degree of popular mobilization. I am in possession of a secret Kuomintang publication describing the 'Communist control of Hopei.' It discusses measures of combating the Communists (by such means, for instance, as the blockade now being enforced) and concludes that if the Communists fail to 'cooperate' (i. e. submit to complete Kuomintang domination) they must be 'exterminated.' I hope to make a translation of this pamphlet which would appear to have significance as an official Kuomintang indication of the policy it will pursue in these areas. It seems reasonable to question, as some thoughtful Chinese do, whether the people of these guerrilla zones, after several years of political education and what must be assumed to be at least partial 'sovietization,' will accept peacefully the imposition of Kuomintang control activated by such a spirit and implemented by military force and the political repression, and secret police and gendarmerie power, which are already important adjuncts of party control and which are being steadily strengthened and expanded.

"Non-Communist Chinese of my acquaintance (as, for instance, the nephew of the well-known late editor of the Ta Kung Pao) consider the likelihood of civil war the greatest problem facing China. They point out that the Communists are far stronger now than they were when they stood off Kuomintang armies for 10 years in Central China and that they will be much stronger yet if it proves that they have succeeded in winning the support of the population in the guerrilla zone. They point to numerous recent instances of successful Communist infiltration into and indoctrination of opposing Chinese armies (such as those of Yen Hsi-shan) and wonder whether this will not cause a prolongation of the struggle and perhaps make a victory for the Kuomintang, or for either side, impossible. There is undoubtedly a strong revulsion in the mind of the average, nonparty Chinese to the idea of renewed civil war and the Kuomintang may indeed have difficulty with the loyalty and effectiveness of its conscript troops.

"Belief in the certainty of eventual civil war leads these same Chinese to question whether the United States has given sufficient realistic consideration to the future in China of democracy. The question is raised whether it is to China's advantage, or to America's own interests, for the United States to give the Kuomintang government large quantities of military supplies which, judging from past experience, are not likely to be used effectively against Japan but will be available for civil war to enforce 'unity' in the country by military force. These Chinese also speculate on the position of the American troops which may be in China (in support of the Kuomintang Army) if there should be a civil war; and wonder what will be the attitude of Russia, especially if it has become by that time a partner in the victory over Japan.

"But ignoring these problematical implications, there can be no denial that civil war in China, or even the continuation after the defeat of Japan of the present deadlock, will greatly impede the return of peaceful conditions. This blocking of the orderly large-scale rehabilitation of China will in itself seriously and adversely affect American interests. Even if a conflict is averted, the continuance or, as is probable in such an event, the worsening of the already serious economic strains within the country may result in economic collapse. If there is civil war the likelihood of such an economic collapse is of course greater.

"There is also the possibility that economic difficulties may make the war-weary, overconscribed and overtaxed farmers fertile ground for Communist propaganda and thus bring about a revolution going beyond the moderate democracy which the Chinese Communists now claim to be seeking. Such a Communist government would probably not be democratic in the American sense. And it is probable, even if the United States did not incur the enmity of the Communists for alleged material or diplomatic support of the Kuomintang, that this Communist government would be more inclined toward friendship and cooperation with Russia than with Great Britain and America.

"For these reasons it would therefore appear to be in the interest of the United States to make efforts to prevent a deterioration of the internal political situation in China and, if possible, to bring about an improvement.

"The Communists themselves (Chou En-lai and Lin Piao in a conversation with John Carter Vincent and the undersigned about November 20, 1942) consider that foreign influence (obviously American) with the Kuomintang is the only force that may be able to improve the situation. They admit the difficulty of successful foreign suggestions regarding China's internal affairs, no matter how tactfully made. But they believe that the reflection of a better-informed foreign opinion, official and public, would have some effect on the more far-sighted elements of leadership in the Kuomintang, such as the Generalissimo.

"The Communists suggest several approaches to the problem. One would be the emphasizing in our dealings with the Chinese Government, and in our propaganda to China, of the political nature of the world conflict; democracy against fascism. This would include constant reiteration of the American hope of seeing the development of genuine democracy in China. It should imply to the Kuomintang our knowledge of and concern over the situation in China.

"Another suggestion is some sort of recognition of the Chinese Communist army as a participant in the war against fascism. The United States might intervene to the end that the Kuomintang blockade be discontinued and support be given by the central government to the eighteenth group army. The Communists hope this might include a specification that the Communist armies receive a proportionate share of American supplies sent to China.

"Another way of making our interest in the situation known to the Kuomintang would be to send American representatives to visit the Communist area. I have not heard this proposed by the Communists themselves. But there is no doubt that they would welcome such action.

"This visit would have the great additional advantage of providing us with comprehensive and reliable information regarding the Communist side of the situation. For instance we might be able to have better answers to some of the following pertinent questions: How faithfully have the Communists carried out their united front promises? What is the form of their local government? How 'Communist' is it? Does it show any democratic character or possibilities? Has it won any support of the people? How does it compare with conditions of government in Kuomintang China? How does the Communist treatment of the people in such matters as taxation, grain requisition, military service and forced labor compare with that in the Kuomintang territory? What is the military and economic strength of the Communists and what is their probable value to the Allied cause? How have they dealt with problems such as inflation, price control, development of economic resources for carrying on the war, and trading with the enemy? Have the people in the guerrilla area been mobilized and aroused to the degree necessary to support real guerrilla warfare?

"Without such knowledge, it is difficult to appraise conflicting reports and reach a considered judgment. Due to the Kuomintang blockade, information regarding conditions in the Communist area is at present not available. Such information as we do have is several years out of date, and has limitations as to scope and probable reliability. Carlson was primarily a military man and had a limited knowledge of the Chinese language. Most of the journalists who have been able to visit the Communist area appear to have a bias favorable to the Communists. They also suffered from language limitations and were unable to remain in the area for an extended period.

"I suggest that the American representatives best suited to visit the Communist area are Foreign Service officers of the China language service. One or two men might be sent. They should combine moderately long-term residence at Yen-an or its vicinity with fairly extensive travel in the guerrilla area. It is important that they not be required to base a report on a brief visit during which they would be under the influence of official guides, but that they should have a sufficient time to become familiar with conditions and make personal day-to-day observations.

"There is mail and telegraphic communication between Yen-an and Chungking, and similar communication between various parts of the Communist area. The officers would therefore not be out of touch with the Embassy and could, if it is thought desirable, make periodic reports.

Mr. RHETTS. I should like to introduce document No. 142, which is referred to on page 20 of the personal statement. This is headed: "Excerpt from memorandum, April 7, 1944, by John S. Service, forwarded to Department as enclosure No. 1 of dispatch No. 2461, April 21, 1944, under title "Situation in Sinkiang; Its Relation to American Policy vis-à-vis China and the Soviet Union":

The CHAIRMAN. What number?

Mr. RHETTS. No. 142; and I ask that it be included in the transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

"We must be concerned with Russian plans and policies in Asia because they are bound to affect our own plans in the same area. But our relations with Russia in Asia are at present only a subordinate part of our political and military relations with Russia in Europe in the over-all United Nations war effort and postwar settlement. We should make every effort to learn what the Russian aims in Asia are. A good way of gaining material relevant to this will be a careful first-hand study of the strength, attitudes, and popular support of the Chinese Communists. But in determining our policy toward Russia in Asia we should avoid being swayed by China. The initiative must be kept firmly in our hands. To do otherwise will be to let the tail wag the dog.

"As for the present Chinese Government, it must be acknowledged that we are faced with a regrettable failure of statesmanship. Chiang's persisting in an active anti-Soviet policy, at a time when his policies (or lack of them) are accelerating economic collapse and increasing internal dissension, can only be characterized as reckless adventurism. The cynical desire to destroy unity among the United Nations is serious. But it would also appear that Chiang unwittingly may be contributing to Russian dominance in eastern Asia by internal and external policies which, if pursued in their present form, will render China too weak to serve as a possible counter-weight to Russia. By so doing, Chiang may be digging his own grave; not only North China and Manchuria, but also national groups such as Korea and Formosa may be driven into the arms of the Soviets.

"Neither now, nor in the immediately foreseeable future, does the United States want to find itself in direct opposition to Russia in Asia; nor does it want to see Russia have undisputed dominance over a part or all of China.

"The best way to cause both of these possibilities to become realities is to give, in either fact or appearance, support to the present reactionary government of China beyond carefully regulated and controlled aid directed solely toward the military prosecution of the war against Japan. To give diplomatic or other support beyond this limit will encourage the Kuomintang in its present suicidal anti-Russian policy. It will convince the Chinese Communists—who probably hold the key to control, not only of North China but of Inner Mongolia and Manchuria as well—that we are on the other side and that their only hope for survival lies with Russia. Finally, Russia will be led to believe (if she does not already) that American aims run counter to hers, and that she must therefore protect herself by any means available: in other words, the extension of her direct power or influence.

"It is important, therefore, that the United States have the following aims in its dealings with China:

"1. Avoid becoming involved in any way in Sino-Soviet relations: avoid all appearance of unqualified diplomatic support to China, especially vis-à-vis Russia; and limit American aid to China to direct prosecution of the war against Japan.

"This may involve soft-pedaling of grandiose promises of postwar aid and economic rehabilitation—unless they are predicated on satisfactory reforms within China.

"2. Show a sympathetic interest in the Communists and liberal groups in China. Try to fit the Communists into the war against Japan.

"In so doing, we may promote Chinese unity and galvanize the lagging Chinese war effort. The liberals, generally speaking, already consider that their hope lies in America. The Communists, from what little we know of them, also are friendly toward America, believe that democracy must be the next step in China, and take the view that economic collaboration with the United States is the only hope for speedy postwar rehabilitation and development. It is vital that we do not lose this good will and influence.

"3. Use our tremendous and as yet unexploited influence with the Kuomintang to promote internal Chinese unity on the only possible and lasting foundation of progressive reform.

"There is no reason for us to fear using our influence. The Kuomintang knows that it is dependent on us; it cannot turn toward a Japan approaching annihilation; it is inconceivable that it will turn toward communistic Russia; and Great Britain is not in a position to be of help. American interest in the Chinese Communists will be a potent force in persuading Kuomintang China to set its house in order.

"The Communists would undoubtedly plan an important part in a genuinely unified China—one not unified by the Kuomintang's present policy in practice of military force and threat. But it is most probable that such a democratic and unified China would naturally gravitate toward the United States and that the United States, by virtue of a sympathy, position, and economic resources, would enjoy a greater influence in China than any other foreign power."

Mr. RHETS. I should like to offer document 192, which is referred to on page 25 of the personal history statement. This is an excerpt from a report prepared by Mr. Service and it is entitled "The Present and Future Strength of the Chinese Communists," and dated, on the second page, October 9, 1944. I ask it be included in the transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

"Reports of two American officers, several correspondents, and twenty-odd foreign travelers regarding conditions in the areas of North China under Communist control are in striking agreement. This unanimity, based on actual observation, is significant. It forces us to accept certain facts, and to draw from those facts an important conclusion.

"The Japanese are being actively opposed—in spite of the constant warfare and cruel retaliation this imposes on the population. This opposition is gaining in strength. The Japanese can temporarily crush it in a limited area by the concentration of overwhelming force. But it is impossible for them to do this simultaneously over the huge territory the Communists now influence.

"This opposition is possible and successful because it is total guerrilla warfare aggressively waged by a totally mobilized population. In this total mobilization the regular forces of the Communists, though leaders and organizers, have become subordinate to the vastly more numerous forces of the people themselves. They exist because the people permit, support, and wholeheartedly fight with them. There is complete solidarity of army and people.

"This total mobilization is based upon and has been made possible by what amounts to an economic, political, and social revolution. This revolution has been moderate and democratic. It has improved the economic condition of the peasants by rent and interest reduction, tax reform, and good government. It has given them democratic self-government, political consciousness, and a sense of their rights. It has freed them from feudalistic bonds and given them self-respect, self-reliance, and a strong feeling of cooperative group interest. The common people, for the first time, have been given something to fight for.

"The Japanese are being fought now not merely because they are foreign invaders but because they deny this revolution. The people will continue to fight any government which limits or deprives them of these newly won gains.

"Just as the Japanese Army cannot crush these militant people now, so also will Kuomintang force fail in the future. With their new arms and organization, knowledge of their own strength, and determination to keep what they have been fighting for, these people—now some 90,000,000 and certain to be many more before the Kuomintang can reach them—will resist oppression. They are not Communists. They do not want separation or independence. But at present they regard the Kuomintang—from their own experience—as oppressors; and the Communists as their leaders and benefactors.

"With this great popular base, the Communists likewise cannot be eliminated. Kuomintang attempts to do so by force must mean a complete denial of democracy. This will strengthen the ties of the Communists with the people; a Communist victory will be inevitable. If, as the Communists hope, the Kuomintang turns to democracy, this established popular support will ensure influential Communist participation in national affairs. If the Kuomintang continues its present policy of quarantine without itself instituting thoroughgoing democracy, the better condition of the common people in the Communist areas will be an example constantly working in Communist favor.

"From the basic fact that the Communists have built up popular support of a magnitude and depth which makes their elimination impossible, we must draw the conclusion that the Communists will have a certain and important share in China's future. * * * I suggest the further conclusion that unless the Kuomintang goes as far as the Communists in political and economic reform, and otherwise proves itself able to contest this leadership of the people (none of which it yet shows signs of being willing or able to do), the Communists will be the dominant force in China within a comparatively few years."

Mr. RHETTS. I introduce document No. 204, which is referred to on page 32 of the personal statement. This is a memorandum entitled, "Military Weakness of Our Far Eastern Policy," and it is addressed to the Commanding General, USAF, etc., and bears the date, on the third page, February 14, 1945. I ask it be included in the transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. I may be entered in the transcript.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

"American policy in the Far East can have but one immediate objective: the defeat of Japan in the shortest possible time with the least expenditure of American lives. To the attainment of this objective all other considerations should be subordinate.

"The attainment of this objective demands the effective mobilization of China in the war against Japan. Operating as we are in a land theater at the end of a supply line many thousands of miles in length, the human and economic resources of China increase in importance as we draw closer to Japan's inner zone of defense. Denied the effective use of these resources the attainment of our primary objective will be unnecessarily delayed.

"There is ample evidence to show that to the present Kuomintang Government the war against Japan is secondary in importance to its own preservation in power. China's military failure is due in large part to internal political disunity and the Kuomintang's desire to conserve such military force as it has for utilization in the maintenance of its political power. The intention of the generalissimo to eliminate all political opposition, by force of arms if necessary, has not been abandoned. In the present situation in China, where power or self-preservation depend upon the possession of military force, neither the Kuomintang nor opposition groups are willing to expend their military resources against the Japanese through fear that it will weaken them vis-à-vis other groups. A recent instance is the lack of resistance to the Japanese capture of the southern section of the Hankow-Canton railway. Equally, the Kuomintang is jealously intent on preventing the strengthening of other groups: witness the blockade of the Communists.

"The aim of American policy as indicated clearly by official statements in the United States is the establishment of political unity in China as the indispensable preliminary to China's effective military mobilization. The execution of our policy has not contributed to the achievement of this publicly stated aim. On the contrary, it has retarded its achievement. It has had this undesired and undesirable effect because our statements and actions in China have convinced the Kuomintang Government that we will continue to support it and it alone. The Kuomintang Government believes that it will receive an increasing flow of American military and related supplies which, if past experience is any guide, it will commit against the enemy only with great reluctance, if at all.

"We cannot hope for any improvement in this situation unless we understand the objectives of the Kuomintang Government and throw our considerable influence upon it in the direction of internal unity. We should be convinced by this time that the effort to solve the Kuomintang-Communist differences by diplomatic means has failed; we should not be deceived by any 'face-saving' formula resulting from the discussions because neither side is willing to bear the onus of failure. We should also realize that no Government can survive in China without American support.

"There are in China important elements interested in governmental reform by which unity and active prosecution of the war may result. Aside from the Chinese Communists, however, all of these elements are cowed by a widespread secret police system and lack any firm rallying point. They will remain helpless to do anything constructive as long as statements of our policy indicate that we are champions of the status quo.

"At present there exists in China a situation closely paralleling that which existed in Yugoslavia prior to Prime Minister Churchill's declaration of support for Marshal Tito. That statement was as follows:

"The sanest and safest course for us to follow is to judge all parties and factions dispassionately by the test of their readiness to fight the Germans and thus lighten the burden of Allied troops. This is not a time for ideological preferences for one side or the other."

"A similar public statement issued by the Commander in Chief with regard to China would not mean the withdrawal of recognition or the cessation of military aid to the Central Government; that would be both unnecessary and unwise. It would serve notice, however, of our preparation to make use of all available means to achieve our primary objective. It would supply for all Chinese a firm rallying point which has thus far been lacking. The internal effect in China would be so profound that the generalissimo would be forced to make concessions of power and permit united front coalition. The present opposition groups, no longer under the prime necessity of safeguarding themselves, would be won wholeheartedly to our side and we would have in China, for the first time, a united ally.

"Whether we like it or not, by our very presence here we have become a force in the internal politics of China and that force should be used to accomplish our primary mission. In spite of hero-worshipping publicity in the United States, Chiang Kai-shek is not China and by our present narrow policy of outspokenly supporting his dog-in-the-manger attitude we are needlessly cutting ourselves off from millions of useful allies; many of whom are already organized and in position to engage the enemy. These allies, let it be clear, are not confined to Communist-controlled areas of China, but are to be found everywhere in the country. The Communist movement is merely the most prominent manifestation of a condition which is potentially present throughout China. Other important groups favor the same program as that espoused by the so-called Communists—agrarian reform, civil rights, the establishment of democratic institutions—but the Communists are the only group at present having the organization and strength openly to foster such 'revolutionary' ideas.

"Our objective is clear, but in China we have been jockeyed into a position from which we have only one approach to the objective. Support of the generalissimo is desirable insofar as there is concrete evidence that he is willing and able to marshal the full strength of China against Japan. Support of the generalissimo is but one means to an end; it is not an end in itself, but by present statements of policy we show a tendency to confuse the means with the end. There should be an immediate adjustment of our position in order that flexibility of approach to our primary objective may be restored."

Mr. RHETTS. At this point I should like to inquire of the Board whether it has obtained copies of all of Mr. Service's efficiency reports. Those reports could not be made available to him, of course, under Foreign Service regulations but we have asked that they be made available to the Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The efficiency records of Mr. Service are in the hands of the Board and will be considered by the Board as part of the evidence but will not be made part of the transcript of the record. They will be made available to the Review Board with the rest of the confidential reports in this case.

Mr. RHETTS. As distinguished from the efficiency reports, Mr. Service has also received during the course of his service, numerous letters of commendation, which of course are made available to the Foreign Service officers. It is my understanding that the Board has received at least some of these letters. We have also sought to obtain copies of these letters.

I may add that the copies that have been supplied to Mr. Service are among his effects, which are not in this country at the present time, so that we have had to attempt to locate as many of these as we can and obtained some of them from the Department. Since we may have some letters which for one reason or another did not get into the hands of the Board, I should like to offer all we have at this time; that is to say, I should like—

The CHAIRMAN. Before you do that let me say for the record that the Board has before it letters of commendation of Mr. Service which may be introduced in evidence if you wish.

Mr. RHETTS. As to these, I do wish to introduce them in evidence as exhibits for inclusion in the record because these can possibly be made part of the record as an exhibit which would be available also to us. Since I have a complete set of them, I will be glad to offer all that. I think it includes what you have plus others.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have a complete set of letters of commendation, you may offer them, if you wish, as exhibits or for the transcript.

Mr. RHETTS. I haven't a complete set but I think I have a more complete set than you do. We still don't have all the letters of commendation given.

The CHAIRMAN. If they are not confidential, you may offer at your discretion.

Mr. RHETTS. At this point I would like to introduce, as exhibits, documents 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, and 310, and all of them being copies of letters of commendation of Mr. Service.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say for the record, the communications referred to by counsel are the ones taken from the document list contained in exhibit 1.

(The following copies of letters of commendation were admitted in evidence:)

Document 310, photostat of letter from Christian M. Ravndel, Director General of the Foreign Service, dated April 4, 1949, to John S. Service, Esq., American Foreign Service Officer, care of Department of State, Washington, D. C., marked "Exhibit 12."

Mr. RHETTS. I should also like to offer as an exhibit at this time document No. 50, which is a letter addressed to the Board, dated April 18, 1950, signed by Dr. H. C. Mei.

(Document 50, letter from Dr. H. C. Mei to the Loyalty Security Board, dated April 18, 1950, was admitted in evidence and marked "Exhibit 13.")

Mr. RHETTS. Now I should like to question Mr. Service if it is agreeable to the Board.

The CHAIRMAN. I think so.

Questions by Mr. RHETTS:

Q. Mr. Service, General Hurley, former Ambassador to China, has made various charges against you in the course of hearings held before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on December 5, 6, 7, and 10, 1945. In that connection I should like to introduce into the transcript of the record at this point document 35-1.

"(1) HURLEY. I have said that I approved the policy of the higher echelon of the policymaking power of this Nation. I said * * * that this policy had been defeated by career men in the State Department, and they were able to say, in China, that the policy that I was supporting in China was not the policy of the United States Government, but my own policy. (P. 15.)

"(2) CONNALLY. Well, do you charge, then, that notwithstanding the President's policy, and notwithstanding the Secretary of State's policy, that there are some men in the State Department that overruled the President and overruled the Secretary of State, and that they carry on negotiations with foreign countries without the knowledge of the Secretary and the President; and is that what you charge? (P. 15.)

"(3) HURLEY. Of course, the Senator has made the charge very broad. (P. 15.)

"(4) CONNALLY. Well, I am not making the charge; I am asking you a question.

"(5) HURLEY. Well, I did not make that charge. I have made the statement that the policy of the United States in China was defeated to some extent—oh, it was not quite defeated, because my directive was to prevent the collapse of China during the war, and we did; my directive was to sustain the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek—we did; my directive was to harmonize the relations between the military establishments of the United States and of China—we did; my directive was to keep the Chinese Army in the field and contain as many Japanese as possible, to protect our men on the beaches and in the jungle—and we did; our directive was to harmonize diplomatic relations between our Embassy in Chungking and the Government of the Republic of China—and we did, during the war. (Pp. 15-16.)

"(6) CONNALLY. Up to that time, these subordinates in the State Department, with all their endeavors, were not able to defeat your policy, because you succeeded; and so you say in all these enterprises, is that right?

"(7) HURLEY. Yes, sir. (P. 16.)"

Q. I ask you to look at this document, Mr. Service. This is an excerpt from the hearings to which I just referred. It sets forth in general the most general version of General Hurley's charges, does it not, Mr. Service?—A. I would say it does; yes.

Q. I would like to ask there be included in the transcript, at this point, document 35-2.

"(Hurley—Hearings before Senate Relations Committee, December 5, 6, 10, 1945)

"(1) CONNALLY. * * * It has also been testified over here that the foreign policy of the United States in China, in effect—I do not know, I am not quoting words, because I do not know exactly the words—but, in other words, that the foreign policy out there had been circumvented or paralyzed by reason of the activities of these men, Acheson and Service. Now, was any change in the foreign policy brought about by these men, in anyway? (P. 259.)

"(2) BYRNES. No; no change in the foreign policy. As a matter of fact, I must say that after that, in calling for information, as late as December 30, after the receipt of the Service cable—after that there was a statement from General Hurley in December, about December 24, a very fine statement according to my views, of the policy, and it was after the receipt of Service's message in October. (P. 260.)"

Q. I ask you, does this represent again in the most general terms the refutation of these charges by the then Secretary of State, Byrnes?—A. That is correct. General Hurley has said we defeated American policy in China and Secretary Byrnes says there was no change in foreign policy.

Q. In reference to General Hurley's charge that Foreign Service officers, including you, interfered with it, sniped at and sabotaged and generally sought to defeat American foreign policy. Will you describe to the Board what you were doing during the period when General Hurley was attempting to make this policy effective?—A. General Hurley has said that I particularly was responsible for the failure of his efforts in China because I sabotaged and undermined him, opposed him, and advised the Communists not to agree with the proposals. Actually, I wasn't in China during the critical periods of General Hurley's negotiations. If the Board will refer to the chronology of events on page 3, General Hurley arrived in Chungking on September 6, 1944. At that time I was in Yen-an as a member of the observer group where I was doing political reporting. I knew nothing of General Hurley's mission at that time and I wasn't charged with negotiations or wasn't conducting negotiations.

General Hurley's first task in Chungking was to harmonize relations between General Stilwell and Chiang Kai-shek. He did nothing else until General Stilwell's recall on October 19. Immediately after General Stilwell's recall, I was ordered to the United States and I went through Chungking on October 23 and departed from Chungking on October 24 and arrived in Washington October 29.

General Hurley did not commence his attempts to negotiate or conciliate between the Kuomintang and the Communists until after I left Chungking, about the 1st of November, which can be confirmed by the white paper. He commenced active efforts to negotiate the differences between the two parties on November 10 and on November 7 he actually flew to Yen-an and on November 10 obtained Mao Tse-tung's signature to a 5-point draft agreement.

The various complications, I don't think you are interested in here but by the time I had completed my consultations and my leave and had returned to Chungking, on January 18, 1945, General Hurley had already telegraphed the Department on January 14, blaming someone else for the breakdown. On January 23, however, subsequently to my arrival in Chungking, on January 18, a new proposal was put out for a political consultative conference and that appeared about to be accepted. It wasn't accepted. It was refused by letter of March 9 from the Chinese Communists but that was because of actions taken by the Nationalist Government and Chiang Kai-shek and this letter from the Communist Party was written while I was in Chungking, before I arrived at Yen-an.

The next period of active negotiations between the two parties, with General Hurley as intermediary, did not commence until August 1945 when I had been, for several months, out of China and wasn't connected in any way with far eastern or China matters.

Q. Now I would like to introduce into the transcript at this point document No. 35-3, consisting of two pages, also of excerpts from the hearings.

(Hurley—Hearings before Senate Relations Committee, December 5, 6, 10, 1945)

"(1) CHAIRMAN. * * * These subordinates in the State Department, with all their endeavors, were not able to defeat your policy, because you succeeded, so you say, in all these enterprises. Is that right. (P. 16.)

"(2) HURLEY. Yes, sir.

"(3) CHAIRMAN. It was only after the war? (P. 16)

"(4) HURLEY. No, sir—during the war, during the war. On the 30th of October 1944, a Mr. John S. Service, of the State Department, wrote to the State Department, and I believe it is his report No. 40, a general statement of how to let the Government that I was sent over there to sustain fall; and that report was circulated among the Communists whose support I was seeking for our policy; and that was during the war. (P. 16)

"(5) HURLEY. * * * The professional Foreign Service men sided with the Chinese Communist armed party and the imperialist bloc of Nations whose policy it was to keep China divided against herself. Our professional diplomats continuously advised the Communists that my efforts in preventing the collapse of the National Government did not represent the policy of the United States. These same professionals openly advised the Communist armed party to decline unification of the Chinese Communist Army with the National Army unless the Chinese Communists were given control. (P. 21.)

"(6) HURLEY. The career men continuously told the Communist armed party and the world that America was betting on the wrong horse, that the American policy which I was upholding in China did not have the support of the United States Government. This made my situation impossible. (P. 32.)

"(7) HURLEY. * * * The career men opposed the policy; that they continuously advised the Chinese Communist armed party; that they recommended in my absence that the Chinese armed party, a belligerent whose purpose was to destroy the government that I had to sustain, be furnished lend-lease arms and equipment, and because I opposed that as destructive of the government that I had been directed to uphold, they charged me with making my own policy in China and said that it was not the policy of the United States Government. (P. 3A.)

"(8) HURLEY. * * * Nor will I recite at this point the communications of these gentlemen with the Communist armed party which was seeking to defeat the purpose for which I was sent to China. (P. 38A.)

"(9) BRIDGES. * * * What was the first date that your suspicions were aroused, or anything came to your notice whereby agents of the United States Government, either in the Embassy in China or in the State Department here in Washington, were undermining the policies of our country or sabotaging your efforts? (P. 89.)

"(10) HURLEY. The first that came to my attention was the report of Mr. John S. Service dated October 10, 1944, and numbered 40. That was the first outward evidence I had of a plan not to uphold but to cause the collapse of the Government of the Republic of China. (P. 89.)

Q. Would you refer to document No. 35-3, Mr. Service, and I should like to ask you whether these charges of General Hurley were in substance repeated in Plain Talk magazine for October 1946?—

A. Yes, they were.

Q. At this point I should like to have inserted in the transcript Documents No. 17-2, 17-3, 17-5, 17-6, 17-7, and 17-14, which are excerpts from the article in Plain Talk to which I referred.

"ARTICLE IN PLAIN TALK ENTITLED 'THE STATE DEPARTMENT ESPIONAGE CASE' BY EMMANUEL S. LARSEN, OCTOBER 1946, PAGE 27

17-2: " * * * Many sensational though little-explained developments, such as the General Stilwell affair, the resignation of Under Secretary Joseph C. Grew and Ambassador Patrick Hurley and the emergence of a pro-Soviet bloc in the Far Eastern Division of the State Department, are interlaced with the Case of the Six, as the episode became known."
